Throughout the south there is little or no talk of increasing admission scales. Exhibitors in Alabama are not contemplating any such action, although they agree that a slight increase would benefit. Grosses in this sector are slightly in advance of the same period last year.

In New Orleans prices are still going down, with giveaways, free beer, double features and bathing beauty revues as "extra added attractions."

There has been no advance in the admission scale in the Tampa (Fla.) theatres this year, and what few changes have been made in the prices since the beginning of the summer have been toward a lower scale. Exhibitors there say they have no intention of advancing prices before fall, and then the tilt probably will be no greater than the scale in vogue during the past winter.

While there is some talk in the Baltimore section about increasing admission prices, nothhas been done.

No raise in theatre prices is contemplated in San Antonio, at least not before the fall. Exhibitors there feel that any price raise would be suicidal. The same is true in the Seattle territory and in San Francisco.

Exhibitors in Chicago are looking forward to increased admission prices in the future, but not now. The only move in that direction is discussion of starting evening price scales at 5 o'clock instead of 6:30, which would amount to an increase, as many theatres are getting the bulk of their evening's business at the matinee price just before the evening scale goes into effect.

From the government at Washington came word that admission taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, totaled $15,520,512, a gain of $13,661,906 over the previous year, because of the emergency taxes.

98 BOOKS AND PLAYS PURCHASED IN JUNE, SETTING UP NEW RECORD

Total of 314 Acquired in First Half of Year in Rush to Wind Up Plans for New Season; Outstanding Works Bought

Motion picture rights to 98 books and plays were purchased during June, thereby establishing an all-time record. Acquisitions for the first six months of 1933 totaled 314, and represented the bulk of 1933-34 product to be filmed by the large companies. Properties acquired each month were proportioned as follows:

January	41
February	28
March	27
April	54
May	66
Total	314

The unusually heavy activity in the story field during June was attributable principally to a desire of executives of most companies to complete 1933-34 product announcements in time for sales conventions in the field, which signaled the beginning of the new season. While sales officials in New York home offices were concluding plans for nationwide merchandising campaigns, studio executives in Hollywood were preparing to launch filming activities on many of the properties recently acquired.

Outstanding Works Acquired

Further assurance that strong box-office possibilities are in store for the nation's theatres in the new season is seen in the June purchases of books and plays. Outstanding in the June harvest are Ferenc Molnar's "Paul Street Boys," which Columbia acquired; Rachel Crothers' play, "As Husbands Go," and A. J. Cronin's "Grand Canary," both of which went to Fox. This company also bought Kathleen Norris' "Walls of Gold" and the rights to Charles Dickens' classic, "A Tale of Two Cities." "Music in the Air," Kern-Hammerstein operetta, was another Fox acquisition.

The chief Majestic purchase was Octavus Roy Cohen's "Backstage Mystery." To Metro went film rights to Anita Loos' "Age of Larceny"; Robert Hichens' "Garden of Allah"; and Edith Wharton's "Old Maid." Paramount acquired, among others, "Last Curtain," the play by Burton Davis and Morton Barteaux.

Edmund Rostand's "Cyrano de Bergerac" was a highlight of the Radio purchases. Another was Dan Totheroh's "Wild Birds."

United Artists, through Darryl Zanuck's 20th Century company, was more active in story purchases than ever before, acquiring, among others, a biography of and by Walter Winchell, and Nathaniel West's "Miss Lonely Hearts." "Bowery" (from the novel, "Chuck Connors"), written by Mike Simmons and B. R. Solomon, was another Zanuck purchase.

Shubert's musical, "Blossom Time," went to Universal, likewise Ring Lardner's "Happiness Ahead," and Vicki Baum's "I Give My Love"; Fannie Hurst's "Imitation of Life"; Harold Bell Wright's "Ma Cinderella" and two plays, "Take a Chance," the Schwab and Mandel musical, current, and Frank Craven's "That's Gratitude."

Warners, too, was quite active, buying, among others, the Gladys Carroll play, "As the Earth Turns." Other Warner purchases included the well known musical, "Wonder Bar," for Al Jolson.

Four hundred and fifty words—no more, no less. That is the "inside" on selling stories to Darryl Zanuck, 20th Century partner with Joseph M. Schenck, both of whom are in the market for numerous properties for their first program. "Tell your story on a single sheet of paper," is Mr. Zanuck's first dictum to aspiring authors. "In buying an original story, or a book or play, for Twentieth Century, all we want is one new, smashing idea," he said. "That idea may come out of newspaper headlines, the author's imagination or his experiences."

Scenario staffs are limited to size, but the amount of material to be considered has no limit, Zanuck said.

At the same time, William K. Howard, noted Fox director, came forth from Movietone City with the statement that good stories stand on their own feet, minus trick effects. "When a motion picture story is good there is no need to trick it, and possibly ruin it, with unorthodox camera effects," he said.

Fox Leads Buyers With 20 Properties

"On the other hand, it is a rule with directors that a doubtful story needs treatment and so the camera is turned upside down, pointed from dizzy levels and sometimes from pits. The camera that jumps from one dizzy angle to another and whirls to give a kaleidoscopic view of things generally covers a poor story.

The purchase of 20 stories and plays during June by Fox Film placed that company in the lead, with Metro in second place, with fifteen.

Hollywood buys an original every day, and in June purchased nearly two books daily. Published stories and novels acquired in the month totaled 53, more than half of all properties acquired. Thirty-four original stories were bought and 12 plays. In May, out of a total of 66 purchased, there were 31 originals, 27 books or published stories and 8 plays.

Titles and authors of stories and plays purchased during June are recorded herewith. Unless otherwise mentioned, the properties are novels and published stories:

ADOPTION OF FOX REORGANIZATION PLAN PAVES WAY FOR "NEW DEAL"

Wipes Out $38,000,000 of Company's Indebtedness and Adds More Than $15 a Share to Value, Declares Counsel

Reorganization of the financial structure of Fox Film Corporation, pointing the way to complete rehabilitation of the company's corporate entity, finally was accomplished last weekend. The company may now be expected to continue, without possibilities of interruption, the regular business of making and distributing motion pictures and operating theatres. After two days of special stockholders' meetings, which were devoted to the last of the many problems which Sidney R. Kent said he has had to adjust since he took over the corporation's presidential reins some 18 months ago, many difficult phases of the financial situation had been ironed out and a comprehensive plan for reorganization was presented.

Specifically, this reorganization calls for approximately $38,000,000 reduction of the company's indebtedness on bank loans, debentures and interest. At the first meeting, on Friday, the stockholders approved reduction of the company's common stock to one-sixth of that outstanding, and reduction of the company's capital to $2,104,633. In addition to plans for reductions of the company's indebtedness, the Saturday meeting saw authorization for issuance of 2,816,650 shares of common stock without par value.

Reduced One Share for Each Six

The meeting Friday lasted little more than half an hour, with the voting for the plan by holders of 1,737,652 shares of Class A common stock and 96,720 shares of Class B common, altogether well over two-thirds of the outstanding total common required for approval of the new structure.

On Saturday the stockholders also authorized that subscription rights to the new stock, at $18.90 a share, be offered to the holders of the original 404,276 2/3 shares of Class A common and the original 16,650 shares of Class B, on the basis of five shares of the new for one share of the old.

The effect was to reduce the Class A common, without par value, from 2,425,660 shares outstanding, to 404,276 2/3, without par value, mentioned in the foregoing, and to reduce the 99,900 outstanding shares of Class B, without par value, to 16,650 shares, both classes thereby being reduced in the ratio of one share for each six shares held.

Plans for the new stock issue publicly advertised on Tuesday, July 25, were authorized, with subscription warrants mailed to stockholders July 26. The issue thus was not to be affected by the newly enacted Federal Securities Act, which went into force July 27.

Delayed by Legal Intervention

The financial reorganization of Fox Film was given official approval after legal opposition had intervened to delay submission of the plan to Fox stockholders from July 1 and 3, to July 21 and 22. The intervention came in the form of a petition for a receivership for Fox filed by James N. Cleary, a stockholder, and subsequently denied by Supreme Court Justice Bernard L. Shientag in New York. Cleary's opposition was withdrawn quickly on elimination of a provision that the underwriters be relieved from any liability arising since April 1, 1930, and that the stockholders ratify all acts of directors after that time.

Following Saturday's session, Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox, issued this statement:

"The financial reorganization of the Fox Film Corporation, upon which the management has labored incessantly for the last year, is now, except for minor details, an accomplished fact. Naturally, we are all extremely gratified that the stockholders, bondholders and creditors of the corporation supported this plan to continue this company as an important entity in the motion picture business. With our financial decks cleared we are now in a position to develop the Fox Film Corporation along constructive lines that will prove of benefit to all phases of the industry."

Richard Dwight, of Hughes, Schurman and Dwight, Fox counsel, estimated Saturday that approval of the reorganization plan "wipes out more than $38,000,000 of the company's indebtedness, thereby adding more than $15 per share to the value of the new stock issue."

In Wilmington, Dela., late last week, Chancellor J. O. Wolcott in chancery court refused to prevent the stock of Fox Film, owned by General Theatres Equipment, Inc., now in receivership, from being voted during the two Fox stockholders' meetings, in favor of the reorganization and refinancing plan.

Clarke Proposal Rejected

About a month ago United States Senator Daniel O. Hastings, receiver for General Theatres, was granted authority to permit a proxy for the Fox stock owned by the company to be voted in favor of the plan. Last week Harley L. Clarke, former president of General Theatres, as well as of Fox Film, asked the order be rescinded, holding that consummation of the plan would not be to the best interests of General Theatres. The court refused to rescind the order

Mr. Clarke emphasized that he did not want action on the plan enjoined, but suggested the 20-day time limit for subscription issued by Fox be extended. He said that General's present position does not warrant acceptance of the new stock. Senator Hastings said the refinancing plan is fair and to the best interests of General Theatres.

Meanwhile in New York, reorganization of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses was well under way and is expected to be completed by August 3. At that time a postponed creditors' meeting will be held in U. S. district court. The plan, it is understood, will be taken to court for approval. Under reorganization, George Skouras will continue to operate his group of theatres and Sam Rinzler and Louis Frisch will handle the Randforce circuit. Simon Fabian, co-receiver with Irving Trust, will figure prominently in the reorganization, it is understood. On August 3 continuation of the receivership also will be decided.

Syndicate Formed

Noteholders of Film Securities Corporation last week agreed to deposit the 660,900 shares of Loew's common stock formerly held by the company with a syndicate to be held for their account for an indefinite period. Distribution of the stock to the noteholder is on a pro-rata basis.

Noteholders have agreed that they individually may withdraw from the syndicate and sell their holdings in the open market. It is believed unlikely this will be done, however. Some of the investment trusts which were substantial holders of the company's notes have given indications they will continue with the syndicate pending favorable market conditions so that they may withdraw when the price rises sufficiently to compensate for their investments.

One of the important reasons for the formation of the syndicate is said to be the commanding importance of the block. It is understood that several overtures have been made for the purchase of the Loew block, but they were declined because the price offered was out of line with the market.

Film Securities Corporation obtained its interest in Loew's from Fox Film Corporation, for which they paid about $28,800,000 in cash and all of its Class A stock. General Theatres Equipment purchased 100,000 shares of preferred stock of Film Securities. Cash proceeds from the sale of Loew's stock to Film Securities provided for the payment at maturity on April 15, 1931, of Fox Film's $55,000,000 6 per cent notes. Debentures, underwritten by Chase Securities Corporation, were offered to stockholders of Fox.

On March 30 of this year, holders of Film Securities' $20,000,000 two-year 6 per cent notes agreed to act jointly to protect their rights on the maturity of the notes April 1, 1933. The present syndicate is an outcome of the joint action of noteholders.

SPEAKING OF OPERATIONS

An interesting commentary on admission cutting is seen in the recently discovered policy of a theatre in the Mexican section of San Antonio which charges what is believed to be the lowest admission price in the world. For men the price is five cents and for women and girls the stipend is one cent! The house shows third and fourth run pictures.

Columbia Gets Regular Weekly Broadcast, Aug. 7

Columbia Pictures' productions have lined up with Amalgamated Broadcasting Company—the new Ed Wynn chain—as a regular weekly radio feature. Commencing on the opening night, August 7, at 10:15 and continuing in the same spot thereafter, radio versions of current Columbia productions will be presented over the network.

The broadcasts will be so timed that they will go on the air simultaneously with the film release in key cities.

REUNION IN BURBANK. (Below) A bit of a bite at noon at the Warner studio, where the camera has thus picked out Mervyn LeRoy, director; Al Jolson and his wife, Ruby Keeler, Warner star; and Jack L. Warner, production chief. This picture accompanies the report that Jolson has signed with Warners.

LOOKING FOR BUSINESS. At any rate here is Pat Garyn looking—and just the other day he assumed his duties as general manager of Master Art Products.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

TO Samuel Lionel Rothafel, the United States Brewers' Association is deeply indebted. Roxy has aided materially in refuting the charge of the Women's Christian Temperance Union that beer is fattening to the ladies.

The WCTU is flooding the country with propaganda warning women of fattening beer. They predict that the ladies of the nation would become big and blowy from it. The brewers' association recognized that the canny WCTU had hit at one of beer's biggest obstacles. So, for the good of the industry they set about preparing a counter attack. One of the first lines of defense was a statement from Hollywood's reducing specialist, Madame Sylvia, to the effect that not beer but starchy accompaniments such as pretzels, sandwiches, white bread, etc., put on the fat. The "pretzel benders" probably will pass the buck back to the frothy golden brew.

Next the brewers conducted an 18-day test at Radio City, where Roxy placed at their disposal ten of his chorus who like their beer. The girls were fed three bottles of beer a day. Before, after and during the test they were weighed. Only one of them gained weight—a quarter of a pound. One lost weight—eight and a half pounds. One remained unchanged and seven were slightly under their usual figure. Except for beer, it was said that there was no change whatever in the ladies' diets. The story appeared throughout the country—except in New York newspapers, where city desks are skeptical about any stunts pulled in local theatres.

Press dispatches late last week reported the mobilization of several hundred war veterans under war-hero Sergeant C. D. Allen. The army broke up, however, when Allen and his soldiers voiced different opinions as to the reasons for their intensive drilling. Allen apparently figured he was drilling an army for the brothers, but the recruits thought they were to work in a film at $7.50 a day.

Mr. Feist's MGM branch considerately forwarded the request to Warner Brothers.

THE ATTENTION UNNECESSARILY focused on Hollywood divorces by the daily press is beginning to look like a crossfire of controversy. Recent marital rifts among a few film couples have provoked a plethora of news stories, feature stories and editorials and the end is not yet.

Recently, answering critics of Hollywood's marriage mortality rate, Conrad Nagel declared in an interview that the situation is exaggerated by undue publicity; that a survey by the Academy showed there have not been 12 divorces in the last year among 27,000 registered players.

The interview was wired to member papers by the Associated Press. Came United Press with an attempt to refute Nagel's statistics with some figures of its own. The AP apparently was not willing to let UP get away with that, so its Hollywood bureau dispatched a yarn based on a survey of its own which confirmed the original story and Nagel's findings.

The score so far stands 2 to 1, AP ahead.

AUSTRIA TAKES CHARGE OF FILMS; FRANCE SETS RESTRICTIVE QUOTA

Programs Must Contain Home-made Shorts on Austrian Equipment; Manufacturers or Owners of Sound Apparatus

Washington Bureau of the HERALD

Austria is the fourth large Continental country to place motion pictures under severe governmental restrictions to further cultural and commercial life. Russia and Italy for years have exercised complete supervision over the voice of their domestic motion pictures. Germany only recently joined the movement when Hitler found it advisable to add the strength of the film to other propaganda factors in promoting his Nazi program.

While this action was being taken by Austria, American motion pictures received probably the most severe setback in any non-English speaking country, when the government of France this week ordered that original Hollywood pictures would be permitted on the screens of only 15 French theatres. The result will be virtually to bar Hollywood product from the country. All foreign films are affected by the French decree, which came as a surprise.

Original versions of foreign sound films, of which Hollywood supplied 150 in the past year, may be shown in only five theatres in Paris and 10 theatres in the provinces during the year ending July 1, 1934, unless the ministry of the interior makes a different ruling.

Foreign film with dialogue dubbed in French were limited to 140, although American interests supplied only 80 of this type in the past year. However, with American companies prepared to engage on a large scale in dubbing talkers in France, the new law limiting these versions to 140 was seen as an obstacle to expansion.

Because the restrictive law would make importation unprofitable, American companies were preparing to take up the matter with the American embassy at Paris, which will be asked to protest to the French government. Premier Edouard Daladier is said to have received a vigorous protest against the new quota from French exhibitors, who said the French industry was incapable of supplying the required product.

French Theatres Protest

Four thousand motion picture theatre owners in France, who want to import an unrestricted number of American and other foreign films, are busily mobilizing a counter-offensive to the effort of French producers to stifle foreign competition through governmental embargoes.

French exhibitors protest that their patrons show a positive preference for the dubbed Hollywood films to the product turned out by the French producers. Furthermore they openly charge that producers are trying to get eventual government subsidies for their industry and will seek meanwhile to have the importation of foreign films limited to just as many as they will need to show alternately with their own pictures in their own theatres.

The French market needs a minimum of 500 feature pictures a year, according to French theatre owners, and the most optimistic estimate for French production in the coming year is 100 films.

Gracious! "Triangles" Coming for Mickey Mouse

Theme songs and a slightly more "potent" love interest may make their appearance in future Mickey Mouse pictures, according to Walt Disney, Mickey's creator, who was in New York this week. Theme songs have been used occasionally in the comedies but now broadcasters daily are sending in numerous requests for copies of the music used Mr. Disney said.

While ultimate disposition of the "love interest" angle is still more or less uncertain in Mr. Disney's mind, he advanced the theory Monday that possibly a "triangle story with Minnie Mouse triumphing over her rival at the fadeout" might be one result.

The Austrian Program

The new Austrian law, which gives to the government monopolistic control over the domestic film market, embraces the following highlights:

Manufacturers or owners of sound equipment must be licensed to own or operate recorders or reproducers.

If a license is refused, a period of grace may be extended the applicant wherein to wind up affairs.

All programs must contain shorts produced in Austria with Austrian-made equipment, these shorts to promulgate Austrian knowledge.

A new scale of taxes is effected for manufacturers and exhibitors.

According to a report received last week by the United States Department of Commerce from Assistant Commercial Attache D. F. Spencer, at Vienna, the federal minister of commerce and communications of the Austrian government, becomes the film dictator under the new regulations, which were made part of the Telegraph Law. Application for each license, reported Mr. Spencer, must be accompanied by proof of the place of manufacture or proposed place of installation of each sound apparatus, together with statements concerning the identity and the residence of the applicant. If more than one person figure as the owner, the responsible manager must be named.

The authorities will issue a license stating that permission to operate has been granted, but where permission is refused "a certain period of grace may be extended the applicant wherein to wind up affairs."

Shorts as Propaganda

In order to promote the manufacture of sound films in Austria, it is required that all public programs include shorts produced in Austria, with Austrian-made sound apparatus. The average length of these shorts must be 250 meters and in the main they should serve to promulgate a knowledge of Austria's cultural and business life, of Austrian scenery and news.

An annual license fee will be charged. Manufacturers of sound equipment will pay 100 schilling; theatres showing less than four days will pay 10 schilling annually; those showing more than three days weekly and seating up to 300 will pay 20 schilling; with a capacity up to 600, the charge is 30 schilling and those of about 600 capacity, 50 schilling.

Schools, hospitals and similar charitable institutions may be given complete or partial exemption.

The license is granted without a time limit and expires at the death of the license holder, or when the sound equipment passes into other hands, or when the license holder resigns. Such resignation must be brought to the attention of the authorities, in writing.

The license may be withdrawn for unpaid fees, or in the event of repeated offenses against the decree.

French Quota Decree Confines Showing of American Films to Only 15 Theatres, Which Virtually Bars U. S. Pictures

New French Decree Is Continuance of Old Quota

by PIERRE AUTRE

Paris Correspondent

Until June 30, the French cinema industry had been subjected to the one-year quota law. The new 1933-34 quota was to have been promulgated on July 1, but its requirements could not be definitely established.

In reality the 1932-33 quota included only one restrictive article, by which all the dubbings had to be made in French studios. The foreign companies, and principally MGM, which was the last one to dub in France, were not seriously concerned because it was less difficult to find, in France, French artists to dub and writers for the dialogue, than in Hollywood. Therefore, dubbing in France was less expensive.

A month ago began the usual annual fight concerning the quota, started between Mr. Delac, president of the Chambre Syndicale de la Cinématographie, and Mr Natan, head of Pathé-Natan, on one side, and Mr. Lussiez, president of the Cinemas Directors Association, and the chiefs of the French branches of American companies, such as Mr. Bavetta, of Fox; Mr. Croswell-Smith of United Artists; Allan Byre of MGM; Max Laemmle of Universal; Mr. Schless of Warner-First National, and Mr. Souhami of Paramount. German companies did not interfere because for them the quota is based on reciprocity with the German quota.

Mr Delac and Mr. Natan asserted that the French industry, still too weak, needed protection. They wanted to limit the number of foreign pictures introduced into France. On the other side, French cinema owners asked for an entirely free market in order to have a wider selection and to pay less for programs. They said that all the quotas established in France since 1928 had never stopped a foreign picture from being introduced in France.

This year the fight was much sharper because two months ago Mr. Delac went to the States, where he announced that the French quota was nearly a "finished affair" and American pictures soon would be introduced freely into France.

On the other side, Mr. Natan was arguing that too many foreign pictures were being introduced in France and that his circuit's theatres were set with pictures until October, 1934, and new pictures were not needed.

A Statement

THE management of Fox Film Corporation is pleased to announce that the stockholders of the company, at meetings held July 21st and 22nd, by an overwhelming vote ratified and approved the management's plan of financial reorganization of this corporation. Under this plan all the bonds of the company (excepting approximately $2,000,000, widely scattered) are retired, as well as all bank loans. The successful culmination of this plan leaves the corporation in a sound financial position and, with the exception of the bonds stated above, practically without debt except for current bills.

The voting of this plan by the stockholders closes the book on a three-year period of litigation and disorganization and will allow the management to devote its time to the operating problems of the company which heretofore has been impossible.

The management wishes to thank the debenture holders, The Chase National Bank and its officials, all of its creditors and stockholders whose loyal participation has made this plan possible. Because of the confidence they have shown in us, we pledge to them and to the picture industry that we will, to the best of our ability, continue to build along constructive lines. It will be our effort not only to make this corporation one of profit for its stockholders, but one which will reflect credit on the entire motion picture industry.

To Fox employees the world over, we express our gratitude for the sacrifices made, and the loyalty given during this trying period.

SPEED SEASON'S SELLING PLANS

Gluckman, and Al Krellberg, of New York; William D. Shapiro, of Boston; J. von Hermberg, Seattle; Gene Marcus, Salt Lake City; Tony Lucchese, Philadelphia; Bernie Mills, Albany; Jack Berkowitz and Harry Berkson, Buffalo; M. Saxe, Detroit; Morris Segal, Cincinnati; S. J. Berkowitz. Los Angeles; Mel Hulling, San Francisco; Thomas A. Branon, Atlanta; Robert Clemmons and R. C. McIlheran, Dallas; Joe Silverman, Oklahoma City; Philip Wintroub and L. Wintroub, Omaha; Allen Burke, Kansas City; Joe Skirboll and J. Clark, Pittsburgh; Carl Michel, Minneapolis; Mannie Brown, Canada, Charles Trampe, Milwaukee.

While en route from the Pacific to the convention at Chicago, Majestic's president, Herman Gluckman, visited exchanges, disposing of 1933-34 product in Seattle to Jensen and Von Herberg, who appointed Harry Rucker branch manager. Louis and Gene Marcus acquired the franchise for Salt Lake and Denver, and Charles Trampe bought rights for Milwaukee. The company's first three releases for the new season, "Curtain at Eight," "Sing, Sinner, Sing" and "Sin of Nora Moran," will be screened for the franchise holders and salesmen at Chicago.

Paramount Has 22 in Work

Paramount reached the crest of its production peak for the new season, with 22 features actually in production or in preparation. The financial situation at Paramount is favorable, permitting of extensive production activities. On June 3, cash on hand totaling $4,836,563 was reported for the producing-distributing subsidiaries by the trustees. (See page 11, MOTION PICTURE HERALD, July 22.)

RKO sounded an optimistic note this week. Ned E. Depinet, vice-president in charge of distribution, said that, based on current indications, the company will go through the new production season without outside financing. "The company has operated successfully out of distribution receipts since last January," he said. "There are more indications now than ever that the company can care for its own financial requirements."

Mr. Depinet had just returned from RKO's regional sales conventions and indicated no important changes in distribution policy were contemplated. Salesmen will be added "where needed," he said, to take care of new accounts created by recent decentralization activities of the large circuits.

Radio will not refuse to sell to double feature accounts during 1933-34, said Mr. Depinet, although he did emphasize the fact that he is personally opposed to the practice. The subject, he predicted, would be disposed of in due time by the proposed industry code, "which will settle all companies' policies."

Radio has an abundance of releases available, said Mr. Depinet. July and August features are ready, besides five productions for the new program and seven others either in work or ready to start.

Jules Levy, Radio sales manager, reported that audiences are demanding a "higher standard of culture" in pictures. The company is preparing to meet these demands, he said, declaring that sex as a theme would not dominate Radio's new lineup, but that a "widely diversified" schedule would be offered.

United Artists Adds Personnel

United Artists' executives returned over the week-end ready to put in practice the plans for 1933-34 outlined at the annual sales convention last week in Chicago.

The company is making progress in adjusting its distribution structure to meet the demands of a triple increase in feature releases, having engaged 43 men in the last few weeks. Five were added to the advertising, publicity and exploitation staff in New York and in the field, and 38 were assigned to the various exchanges.

Samuel Goldwyn's "Masquerader," starring Ronald Colman, was selected as the first release of the new season. Elissa Landi is the lead.

Joseph M. Schenck, president, said this week that United Artists will continue to adhere to the policy which it has practiced for the past 15 years—"individual selling and individual production."

In explaining his association with Darryl Zanuck in Twentieth Century Pictures, Mr. Schenck said: "I have backed Mr. Zanuck not only with my confidence, but with everything I possess of worldly goods."

Universal Boosts Budget

Universal was heading for a "new deal" in 1933-34. James R. Grainger, new general sales manager, established himself in the home office and immediately set about to revise the company's plans for 1933-34, as already announced. The net result was a $2,000,000 increase in the production budget, a quickly called sales conference, and promotions and additions to the distribution staff.

The increased budget makes possible "important additions" to the 1933-34 feature program, it was said, the initial number of two specials being extended to eight. The altered schedule now calls for eight specials, 18 features, 4 Summerville and Pitts productions, 6 "Success" features and 6 Ken Maynard westerns.

Carl Laemmle, president, introduced Mr. Grainger at a special sales convention, held last Friday at the New York Athletic Club. Mr. Laemmle told the 20 exchange managers and executives of the home office that Grainger had "successfully sold him a bill of goods on production matters."

Present were R. H. Cochrane, P. D. Cochrane, Charles P. Paine, E. T. Gomersall, F. J. A. McCarthy, S. Wittman and Sidney Singerman, also managers and sales officials from several of the branch offices.

Mr. Grainger outlined plans for the coming year, as modified and amended since he had become sales manager. He announced that there would be no changes in the sales personnel, "except such as might be found necessary in advancing men to higher positions." Mr. Grainger announced the promotion of S. Wittman, former assistant eastern sales manager, to become district manager in charge of the branches at New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh and Buffalo.

The post of short subject sales manager, which had been vacant quite some time, was also filled by Mr. Grainger. He appointed Edward Bonns in charge. Mr. Bonns has been in the sales field for 20 years, with Chester Productions, Goldwyn, MGM, Warners and Fox. James E. Dermody, for 14 years branch manager for Fox in New England, was appointed special Universal representative, in charge at Albany, New Haven and Boston.

Stanley Bergerman left Universal and New York this week for Hollywood, where he will produce independently, releasing through Universal.

Mr. Bergerman came east two months ago, in the capacity of an associate producer, to supervise Rowland-Brice's "Moonlight and Pretzels."

Warner Meetings Next Week

Warners were ready to start their regional sales conferences next week, when approximately 60 features will be announced for 1933-34. The company made known the details of its financial structure (see page 25), announcing cash on hand totaling $2,738,800 and assets running about $2,000,000 ahead of current liabilities. Net income for the 13 weeks ending May 27 totaled $5,850,840, but after heavy depreciation write-offs, the payment of bank loans, interest, discount expense and other items, there was a net loss of $1,580,000, which was $1,400,000 less than the $2,980,000 loss reported for the same period in 1932.

Two national exploitation campaigns "of the magnitude of the '42nd Street Special' train," and a 43 per cent increase in the national advertising budget were announced. Said Major Albert Warner, vice-president: "Exploitation will be on a grander scale than ever before. Right now eight men operating directly under S. Charles Einfeld's supervision are cooperating with exhibitors playing the Warner product."

During the week, Warners' short subject subsidiary, Vitaphone, completed 36 of its 1933-34 schedule of one and two-reelers, placing the Brooklyn studio four months ahead of releasing requirements. Eleven shorts will be released in August. Prints of 20 of the 1933-34 subjects will be in every branch by August 15.

At Burbank, three features were completed, five others went into production, six were shooting and seven more were in preparation. Contracts, said to be for five years each, were given by Production Chief Jack L. Warner to 35 girls, to supplement the 13 socalled "Junior Stars" signed recently. The new group, all from Busby Berkeley's chorus, more or less represent Warners' hopes for future starring talent. The names:

Supply Dealers To Talk Code At Convention

J. E. Robin, president, will call to order on Friday morning the third national annual convention of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers' Association, convening for three days at the Stevens hotel, Chicago. An industry code for theatre equipment and supply dealers and manufacturers of related equipment will be the principal business.

Mr. Robin said last week that permission already has been received from General Hugh S. Johnson, at Washington, to draft a code of ethics and fair trade practices for this branch of the industry, under the National Industrial Recovery Act.

"If ever an industry needed regulation it is obviously the equipment and supply business of this country," said Mr. Robin. "With but few exceptions, practically all have been complaining about unethical practices and unfair competition, so prevalent for years generally, preceding the depression of the past three years, during this time and presently. Nothing has been done for the unequivocal good of all."

Non-Theatricals Increase Showings

The Bureau of Mines of the United States Department of Commerce reports that for the fiscal year ended June 30 it received 34,638 requests for prints of non-theatrical films. These were shown to a total attendance of 2,995,898 persons. During this period there were 2,104 reels in the Bureau's library for circulation. The survey states that the demand for the Bureau's films has increased greatly during the past year and that the library is booked for two and three months in advance.

Bureau of Mines films are produced and circulated under the direction of John A. Davis, chief engineer of the information Division. The cost of production is paid by cooperating industrial concerns, but the pictures are free from advertising material.

The main distribution center for the films is the Bureau's experimental station at 4800 Forbes Street, Pittsburgh, where a complete library is maintained. The films are available mostly in 35-millimeter, although some are 16mm.

"We have received reports from heads of colleges stating that owing to economic conditions it was impossible to take the student bodies to visit the mines, steel mills and manufacturing plants of the country and that they were using our films to advantage as a substitute for these trips," said M. F. Leopold, supervising engineer of the motion picture production section.

During the fiscal year just ended the Bureau's cooperators contributed approximately $40,000, which was used for the revision of films and for additional prints.

All the films are silent and depict mining and related manufacturing processes; they show where minerals are found and how they are extracted from the earth, manufactured or refined into various products, utilized and conserved. The prevention of accidents and the protection of life have been given special attention. Several pictures deal specifically with this subject.

Reform School Shows Appreciation for Films

Appreciation of motion pictures in the Colorado Vocational School at Golden, Col., is reflected in a recent editorial in the school's weekly newspaper, the News. More than 200 boys are resident of the Vocational institution and they are permitted to see talking pictures twice a week, on Wednesday and Saturday nights. According to Duke W. Dunbar, secretary of the Denver Film Board of Trade, film is provided gratis through the Board by local exchange members.

The editorial follows in part:

"Over two hundred eager boys look forward every Wednesday and Saturday night to the talkie shows in the chapel. Unless you have seen a part of the school you cannot realize what these programs mean to the boys, some of whom have come to this institution from outlying districts and previously had not heard a talkie. . . . We doff our hat to the film exchange people and cordially invite them to visit our institution and learn what a wonderful place we have."

Morning Glory

(RKO Radio)

Comedy-Drama

Katharine Hepburn is the big showmanship feature of "Morning Glory." All that the young lady promised in "Bill of Divorcement" and "Christopher Strong" is delivered in this show. Though the picture offers a definite novelty of idea and is vivid with human interest, she is the character that should stir the emotions and interest of audiences. While the picture is a straight character study, it has been so developed that the elements of drama and romance occupy a real purpose in consolidating the comedy that is created by the girl's terrific belief in herself.

Essentially "Morning Glory" is a mass appeal picture that should lure the classes. Where ordinarily picture technique is used to strengthen the stage atmosphere, the process has been reversed in such a way that this picture seems to have been acted in a stage manner. This fact gives it a semblance of intimacy that is particularly intriguing. Always colorful, the healthy amount of dialogue in this instance speeds up the accompanying action. The story isn't so much, it's the way it's acted that gives it its punch.

Eva, a country girl, stage struck, comes to New York. Walking through a theatre lobby, looking at pictures of stage immortals, she is convinced that one day she will take her place beside them. Wandering into the office of Easton, a producer, she starts to talk and no one can stop her. It's not nerve, rather sublime confidence, that sits her down with Hedges to relate all her hopes and dreams. The old actor is tolerently kind. The scene is repeated with Easton and Sheridan, amusing and catchy. But the answer is the inevitable "nothing today—leave your name." Then months of waiting and discouragement, but Eva never loses hope. Meeting Hedges again, she is taken to Easton's apartment to a party celebrating the opening of his production of Sheridan's show, which stars Rita. Plenty of relative atmospheric comedy, with the half starved little girl being fed champagne until the Morning Glory recites scenes from Shakespearean plays. They're great, but nobody but Hedges and Sheridan are interested.

More months of stock company work and carnivals, until Easton is preparing to present another Sheridan show. Before the opening Rita goes temperamental and walks out. That's the cue for Sheridan to present Eva. The girl clicks. The ending is quick, but the audiences know that Hepburn is not a morning glory.

Selling Katharine Hepburn looks to be about the most effective way of stirring up more than usual interest. The title and the part she plays lend themselves significantly to a vivid campaign. Audiences have been much interested in Miss Hepburn. Many predictions have been made that she is destined to be one of the screen's greats.

Her work in "Morning Glory" certainly demonstrates that she is not a morning glory. Play up that fact. Develop a campaign that is based on the audience interest in her personality. Use the title and theme as a basis for anything you want to say acclaiming Hepburn as a real star. Inject novelty into your appeal.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

California Trail

(Columbia)

Western

Set in the days of old California is this Buck Jones western, and there's a generous amount of action to feed the customers, and to promise them in getting them to come. There is the intensely masculine turn that Buck gives to his pictures, making the romantic phase decidedly secondary, which indeed is scarcely an important factor one way or another in any case. Helen Mack carries this part of the picture.

Buck is made train boss for Don Marco, who is bringing food to his village. The mayor and the commandante of the post, brothers, are in league to starve the villagers and confiscate their lands.

Don Marco is killed when the brothers plot an Indian attack on the wagon train. The mayor goes to tell the Don's widow and daughter that the train boss killed him. The brothers seize the food on the trumped up excuse that import duties were not paid. They go about the business of catching Buck. He captures a clerk and gives his gold to the villagers to buy the food. Buck, hiding out in the hills, sees a carriage approaching, and disarms the occupant, who is really the governor, traveling incognito to study the villagers' complaints. But the troops of the commandante seize the governor by mistake. He is condemned to death.

As the firing squad lines up the governor and a native whom Buck has befriended, Buck dashes down upon the post with a keg of powder. The villagers, organized by Buck, are prepared to defend the fort, when another guard of soldiers arrives. It's the governor's own forces.

This Day and Age

(Paramount-Cecil B. DeMille)

Drama

Treating a daring topic, modern American high school youth toppling over every established judicial procedure, going to the mat with gangsterism and taking the law into its own hands, "This Day and Age" is unquestionably a sensational and courageous picture. Its predominant audience value is that it is loaded with that power that excites emotion hysteria. There is nothing dainty about it. It's starkly realistic to the last degree. Undoubtedly, because of the way in which it ties high school boys in with its subject, it will precipitate controvery. Yet due to the manner in which De Mille has built up his story, the way in which he has handled mobs of frenzied youths to obtain spectacle, together with the method in which he has adapted patriotic music to inspire audiences, there is something sublime about the show that should stimulate audiences to the same pitch of enthusiasm that it did the preview crowd.

In conception and presentation, the show departs radically from accepted entertainment standards. It contains many things that straight thinking people may consider dangerous. One prominent bit of action places the school girl lead in a questionable compromising situation, and even though it is nicely cleared, it will require delicate handling in explaining.

The story means more than the names. Timed to coincide with National Boys' Week, with the juvenile players assuming various governmental position for a day, Garrett, a gangster, kills Herman, the high school boys' pants presser. The kids know he did it, but in court the defense attorney makes a monkey out of Steve and Garrett is freed.

Determined to get the goods on the known murderer, two of the boys start searching his rooms. Garrett enters, shoots one and with the connivance of his bodyguard, Toledo, makes it look as if the boy's companion committed the crime.

The boys of North High, lead by Steve, plot to kidnap Garrett. They rush him to an abandoned brickyard, where thousands of high school youngsters are ominously assembled. Using many gangster-approved torture methods, highlighting by lowering the racketeer into a rat-infested cistern, the boys force a confession.

In the meantime Gay is fighting the battle of her life to stave off Toledo's advances. Gay escapes as Toledo starts to round up the gunmen for a raid on the brickyard. Arrested for speeding, she manages to convey to the cop what is going on. The reserves arrive at the kangaroo-court simultaneously with the gangsters, and avert a massacre.

Then follows the thrilling spectacle. Mounting Garrett on a fence-rail and timing their steps to the cadence of "Yankee Doodle," "Oh Susanna" and "The Battle Hymn Of The Republic," the mob of youngsters starts its march back to town, the production value here stirring the preview audience to big applause. In town, one group routs the judge out of bed; another grabs the prosecuting attorney, a third terrorizes Garrett's mouthpiece; the fourth sends the Little Fellow (big Boss) scurrying for safety. All converge on the court room again, where the blithering Garrett signs a legal confession before the shaking judge, and the mob of youths marches off in triumph.

Properly exploited, the picture should have a powerful appeal to Young America, yet it should be fully as interesting to adults. The title is a byword.

It's sensational and should be sensationally advertised and exploited. A drive on high school students should be supplemented with all kinds of civic and social as well as educational contacts. There is a moral, directed at the grownups, and this should command support from newspapers as well as governing officials. Don't hesitate to describe it as it actually is—frank, daring and inspiring.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Fighting Texans

(Monogram)

Western

Rex Bell turns in a nice performance in this outdoor story in which horses and six-guns are laced into a drama of oil wells and crooked stock promoters. It is well produced, competently cast, and exhibitors will find in it many of the necessary ingredients expected in this type of entertainment.

Bell, high pressure haberdashery salesman, is fired for rowing with a customer and gets a job selling oil stock in a nearby town, where he falls in love with the local sheriff's daughter, and persuades everyone in town to invest in oil. The "heavy," whose job he has taken and who is in love with the same girl, endeavors to turn the town against Bell. This move almost succeeds when Bell is tipped off that his boss, the head of the oil company, is absconding with all the local money invested in the well.

In the ensuing mixup the sheriff is wounded by an angry investor trying to get Bell, believing him a crook. Bell escapes from the irate townsmen, frees himself of the charges, captures the crooked promoter and dynamites the well into a gusher for a happy finale.

Selling angles are, of course, Rex Bell's personal draw, and where obtainable various oil well accessories can be used for lobby display. If worthless stock certificates can be obtained, these might also hold interest in advance lobby flash, and if enough of these can be rounded up, planted in windows with appropriate copy.

The picture is clean, and should sell children as well as adults.—Vogel, New York.

This Is America

Frederick Ullman, Jr.

Newsreel Culling

An unusual presentation of Pathe newsreel shots, best campaigned as showing the drama of America's life from the beginning of the World War, "This Is America" pictures outstanding activities in this country through the several political leaderships since the era of Woodrow Wilson, but Washington and its doings are only part of the field covered. These serve more as a connecting link. There are bits about the days of Harding, Coolidge, then Hoover, paralleling with business and social highlights of each period, and leading up to the present Administration, additional connection being provided here through flashes from Roosevelt's earlier beginnings as a figure in the public eye.

To draw general attention to the production the showmen will do well to emphasize the romantic atmosphere of it all. There's an impressionistic flavor to the picture, in the thread of developments as well as in the music background and the dialogue, both of which play an important part in overcoming the difficulties of disjointedness inherent in a compilation such as this.

In order to avoid any charge of political bias that easily might arise, it might be well to emphasize the central thought to the effect that here is an appeal to every real American to read in the moving picture the story of his country, its joys and its sorrows, its freaks, foibles and successes, always moving on to a greater accomplishment.

There is considerable action, and youngsters might be attracted for this reason even if the larger thought of the production would be lost to them.—Rovelstad, New York.

Feature assembled from Pathe newsreel shots and new material, from a continuity written by Gilbert Seldes and edited by Frederick Ullman, Jr. Running time, 70 minutes. Release date, July 19, 1933.

Don't Bet on Love

(Universal)

Romantic Comedy

This is one of those light commercial features. Mainly it's a character study, yet it rings in a clever romantic story, has more than its share of comedy, numbers several exciting moments and carries a punch of human interest that should be appreciated by all save that type of fans that is looking for a super-special in every picture. With Lew Ayres and Ginger Rogers in the leads, it is well acted, never assumes pretentiousness and stays right in character all the way through.

The simple plot concerns a familiar topic—race track gambling. Bill is a young plumber who loves to play the ponies. Deaf to the advice of his father and the pleadings of his sweetheart, Molly, he cleans up on a three-way parlay and banks $200. With that set for a nest egg, Molly is happy. However, while fixing a sink, he gets a hot tip and knocks over a 30 to 1 shot and then becomes the "Plunging Plumber," talked about by Winchell, McIntyre and Ripley, as he picks 26 consecutive winners. A big shot, Bill and his pal Scotty, ex-milk wagon driver, take the bookies all over the country and with Molly in the background, Bill himself is on the verge of being taken to the cleaners himself by the golddigging Goldie, until he tricks her out of some letters, which he has written to Molly, but which Goldie has filched. One lesson learned, Bill loses his magic touch. Reduced to betting quarters and half dollars, he eventually is found again by Molly, who brings him back home to go into partnership with his father in the old plumbing business.

The climax comes pretty suddenly, almost too quickly for audiences to appreciate what is happening. The lead characters, however, are built up in such a way that audience sympathy is always concentrated on the lovable smart guy, Bill, and Molly.

Names are adequate and the smart showman can create an interest-stimulating campaign without spending too much money. One dialogue line that can be adapted to many gags is Bill's reaction to the "Plunging Plumber" title which he fears may resolve into the "Plumber's Plunger." Tying ideas developed on that thought onto the popularity of racetrack betting, having a tout in the lobby dressed in the togs of a gambler, and stressing the thrill of gambling should intrigue curiosity. Don't be tempted to go too strong on the racetrack atmosphere. Most of the action takes place "off track" and the picture is anything but a racetrack show.

Novel lobby and newspaper advertising can be developed by taking advantage of the columnist "Believe It Or Not" references.

The men probably will get the biggest kick out of the show, yet there is enough romantic interest centering between the two leads and Bill's father to lure the women folk.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by Murray Roth. Original story by Murray Roth. Screen play by Murray Roth and Howard Rogers. Photographed by Jackson Rose. Running time, 62 minutes. Release date, July 13, 1933.

Romantic Drama

The title, inside revelations of how newsreel material is actually gathered and sometimes forced, and cast names are the outstanding showmanship factors. The supporting romance, drama, human interest and comedy angles are subordinate to the atmospheric action that causes the association of an ace newsreel cameraman and a sob-sister reporter. Despite a definite novelty of idea in conception, the development of the story is such that the greatest appeal should be to the ordinary run-of-the-mill theatre-goers.

The background being exciting, the romantic dramatic yarn is strictly formula. It brings Bill and Jane together while covering a glamorous bathing beauty contest. This sequence is considerably pepped-up by Robert Benchley's radio announcing technique. An earthquake sequence following, Bill finds himself falling in love with Jane, but without reciprocation. Quitting her job as reporter, Jane returns to her Mississippi home as Bill goes back to New York to be seen next covering a big fire, his pal, Mike, sacrificing his life to his job. Heartsick, Bill is on the verge of quitting when his boss Gottlieb sends him to Mississippi to cover a flood. Bill gets some shots that show faultily constructed levees responsible. Because the contractor is a friend of Jane and her fiancé, Caldwell, they ask him to destroy the pictures, but Bill only burns raw stock and Gottlieb releases the real shots.

The story shifts to New York and Jane and Caldwell reappear just as a sensational gangster killing takes place. Again a reporter Jane pries a confession from the gangster's moll on the publication of which she is kidnapped. Bill knows Ricci, the big shot gangster, who must know where Jane is hidden and by showing that picture-struck mug his own features in some trick shots that tie him up with a bombing, he gets the lowdown on where she is, on the condition that he destroy the prints. Together with Caldwell, Bill rushes to rescue the heroine and they arrive at the same time as the police, who conduct a sensational siege which Bill photographs. Jane herself, now of news value, is being pictured by the newsreels when she makes the announcement that she loves Bill.

Smart spot showmanship can generate plenty of interest in this picture. Tying up with a camera man to shoot local scenes for showing in conjunction with the picture, and with the identification idea, looks like a natural curiosity-creating gag. Using a prop camera spotted in dangerous places to gather a crowd and then

Savage Gold

(Harold Auten)

Expeditionary Film

Being an account of Commander George M. Dyott's latest adventures, this time in the land of the Ecuadorian head-hunting Jivaro Indians, "Savage Gold" is a straightforward, undramatically dramatic record, with the events connected by a thread of plot as the experiences of a few white men in search of a lost comrade believed to be in the hands of the weird people whose chief diversion is decapitation of their fellow beings.

This is not the first time this form of activity has been shown on the screen, but it is an unusual attempt to portray faithfully all the fanatical, horrible ritual which accompanies and precedes each orgy of bloodshed.

For exploitation purposes the exhibitor has the internationally-known name of Commander Dyott for the marquee and the stamp of authenticity, which is sufficient for those whose sense of sincerity has not been dulled by years of ultra-sophisticated drama and ballyhoo.

With but little editorial attempt by the producers to make a dramatic motion picture, "Savage Gold" remains what it was primarily intended to be: a factual pictorial record of an expedition. There is no trick photography, no double exposure, and at the same time the automatic camera is everywhere, recording each move, of friend and enemy alike.

Basically the picture describes the actions of Commander Dyott's party in the Jivaro territory. We are shown the difficult ascent of the Andes and the icy descent into the Indian country. For miles the party travel by river until at last they sight the Jivaros. The tribe's witch doctor dislikes the invasion of the white man and loses little time in trying to turn the chief against them. The chief, however, is disposed for the time being to treat his visitors hospitably. The subject of the missing white man is broached, the chief shuts up like the proverbial clam, and the expedition's relations with the tribe become strained. Commander Dyott, following a forbidden trail, stumbles upon the witch doctor engaged in the gruesome task of shrinking innumerable human heads to the size of oranges. The white man looks on, unknown to the medicine man, and finally slips away, sick at heart and fearing for the fate of his lost comrade. The climax comes with a council of war, at which all of the tribe get drunk. During the drunken orgy one of the party slips away and goes up the forbidden path, past the "shrinking ground" until he discovers a thatched hut. Inside is the lost white man, brutally murdered. Watching the discovery is the witch doctor and the white man shoots him, hurries back to camp, and the party prepares to escape. There follows an exciting sequence in which the torches of the Indians follow the Dyott party. After smashing the Jivaro canoes, the expedition makes its getaway.

While this film is not adequate fare for the very young, the exhibitor should be assured, if only by virtue of the picture's sociological and geographical authenticity, of unlimited tieups with schools. There is much of educational value and the theatre man should not be slow to take advantage of the fact. The customs of these strange primitive people, together with studies of the habits of animals and general geographic conditions, should help to assure good box-office returns.—AYER, New York.

Comedy Drama

Contrary to title intimations, this is not a cross between a western and a drawing room play, but rather a slicker story that happens to start in the tent show country. The final windup takes James Dunn out of the unsympathetic role of the carnival and bigtime buncombe expert deluding the trusting little-town girl; this can be cleared by a catchline to this effect; girl's faith and love turn slicker into the straight road. Likewise, patrons may be assured of surprises and action.

James Dunn takes Joan Bennett to a carnival in her Arizona home town, and when a woman charges fakery in the medicine show spiel of Herbert Mundin, Dunn announces himself as a state inspector and takes Mundin away—just far enough so that they can split the proceeds. Dunn finds Miss Bennett on the train and she tells him her brother has been tricked by a big city gang to the tune of $20,000 of an estate's money. Dunn promises to run down the gang, but later privately informs the three others in his own outfit that they'll get the money—for themselves.

The trail leads first to New Orleans, where Merna Kennedy and Earle Foxe try the old outraged husband game on Mundin, made up as a gullible southern gentleman, with Dunn coming upon the scene in time to take the $10,000. Here are two rapid turns of plot, Mundin revealing himself as a "sheriff" and Foxe detecting the wise look passing between them and, pulling a pistol, only to be felled by Theodore von Eltz, a Dunn colleague with Sammy Cohen. The assumption of the southern drawl by all the principals in this sequence drew chuckles from the customers.

Next the trail forks to New York. Joan has won a spot in the chorus of the new production of David Wengren, third man in the trio that slicked Joan's brother. Joan, still thinking that Dunn's plans are sincere, arranges with him to have Mundin led in for a supposed shearing, this time as her uncle, big jam man. Wengren calls upon J. Carrol Naish, a real gang leader, for the $10,000 to flash on Mundin in the switched envelop game. Mundin does a little switching himself, and Wengren finds himself with the envelope of newspaper clippings. Mundin's "secretary," Dunn, takes the $10,000 out one door while Mundin goes out another, but they catch Mundin. Tommy takes over the show, and his men capture all of Dun's group as well as Joan. During the show Dunn gets an opportunity to call a pug-ugly, Max Wagner, and his gang comes over and breaks up the show. The Dunn quartet and Joan escape. Dunn meantime has seen the light and mailed the money to Joan's home.

The story development carries plenty of movement, a cue to abundant audience value and plenty of interest-catching lines.

In James Dunn and Joan Bennett are the names for the marquee, and to them can well be added Merna Kennedy, Sammy Cohen, Mundin and Foxe. Theodore Von Eltz has less to do. Cohen's vigorous run of comedy is evident throughout, highlighting in his frosted removal from the refrigerator where he has taken refuge.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Western

A generous amount of comedy has been injected into this outdoor production and the antics of Roscoe Ates, whose stutterings are matched by the unexpectoed blasts from his putterings with acid in the hope of producing synthetic gold, lend an additional selling touch to the riding and outlaw-fighting efforts of Tom Keene.

Keene, his horse shot down, settles down for a nap, but Al Bridge, as Denver Ed with a price on his head, interrupts it. Keene takes his horse and six-notched shooter. Sent to kill Mary Mason's father so that Alan Roscoe can marry her and thus get title to the mine, Keene learns how things stand and then traps the crook after various misunderstandings due to the pinto and the gun.

The name to sell is Tom Keene. Mary Mason provides the feminine interest in a quiet, large-eyed fashion that serves the purpose, but scarcely warrants more than mention in the billing.

Saturday is the showing time. The Ates comedy should be brought to the attention of the community in addition to the more serious and exciting experiences of Keene.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

The Big Attraction

(Bavaria)

Musical Drama

This German-produced picture serves mainly as a vehicle for the splendid tenor voice of Richard Tauber, well known on the Continent and with some following over here. The dialogue is in German with English titles, but the slight story is not very hard to follow. Action is draggy and the picture should do best in foreign language houses and in localities where there are Germanic groups who have heard Tauber in person or his recordings.

As a whole, the cast is adequate with standout performances by Marianne Winkelstern, the woman lead, and, of course, Tauber. Others contribute interesting bits. Riccardo, band leader and singer, is the head of a vaudeville troupe called "The Big Attraction." On the same bill is a troupe of American dancing girls, of whom Kitty is the lead. She falls for Riccardo, and jumps her future dates to be with the singer, hiding in his railroad compartment, where he discovers her.

Riccardo refuses to employ her, but on the opening night of his engagement in Berlin, Kitty breaks into the act with a novelty bit that goes over and leads to a contract. Everything is going along, until Kitty discovers that Riccardo is married, but does not know that the wife has skipped. The girl then accepts the marriage proposal of an admirer and leaves the act, but things are smoothed for the eventual clinch when the admirer, realizing the situation, assists in bringing the lovers together.

Tauber is the big selling point, and his records should be plugged wherever they are available. The girl also rates extra publicity.

Sleepless Nights

(Remington)

Music Farce

Light, happy bedroom farce, with likable music that permeates it all, "Sleepless Nights" gives the exhibitor something carefree to offer his patrons these hot summer days.

As the names Polly Walker, Stanley Lupino and Gerald Rawlinson may have no great significance in the community, the showman may well promise lively dancing from Lupino, as well as duet singing with Miss Walker, and altogether some engaging music numbers.

The story makes very little effort toward seriousness. One bit has Miss Walker's disappointed fiancé, Rawlinson, trying to steal a precious statue, but the laughs of Lupino as he outwits him make fun of that, too. Lupino, reporter, is sent to get a story about the statue from the wealthy Percy Parsons. After a rumpus in the lobby, Lupino and Miss Walker find themselves, for refuge, in the bedroom. The boss comes to surprise Lane, who to solve the situation calls her his wife. The hotel is crowded, and the boss elects to sleep in Lupino's suite. The problem is on. Several attempts to leave are fruitless. Then Parsons, Polly's father, arrives. He and Mrs. Parsons congratulate the couple, but it only adds to their predicament.

They're invited aboard Parsons' yacht and the cruise develops more efforts of Lupino to escape a troublous situation. When he's been taken back to the stateroom several times he finally gets the idea of explaining that they've lost the marriage license. Whereupon Papa Parsons solves it all by having the ship's captain marry them "again."

It's scarely a theme for the youngsters, though children probably would understand only the music and the dancing. These two elements should be the big ingredients of the showman efforts, and in both the patrons should find enjoyment.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Midnight Club

(Paramount)

Drama

A crook yarn, offering three or four interesting departures from the prosaic style, the production is mainly dramatic but carries an odd romantic twist and builds into complicated situations which permit some unique comedy. Yet, while the cast carries some big names, the show is hardly more than a standard program attraction. The double idea used by the gang of jewel thiefs, having Raft in an undercover detective role, though posing as an Ace American thief, and the use of the two dumb detectives, plus the Scotland Yard atmosphere of the Oppenheim yarn, make it possible to concoct some showmanship exploitation that may be more effective than the picture itself in concentrating interest.

The locale is London and British players predominate in the cast (a worth-while showmanship asset where English or people of English descent constitute a large part of the audience). The story tells of the activities of the Colin Grant-Iris Whitney-Arthur Bradley gang, who adopt the ruse of employing doubles for alibis. Too much for Scotland Yard's Commissioner Hope, he employs Nick Mason, an American detective, to get the goods on the gang.

Posing as a crook, Mason first robs Iris of some fabulously valuable swag, then falls in love with her and gets himself mixed up with the doubles. Finally muscling his way into the gang, he learns the secret of their alibi, but he's so much in love with Iris that anxious as he is to turn Grant and Bradley in, he wants to keep her out of the mess.

Grant finds out Mason is a detective and trusses him up. He is ready to flee with his swag, which has been worked into pottery, when Iris finds she is in love with the captive and decides to remain with him. Hope has to prosecute Iris unless they can find Grant. Then realizing that Mason and Iris are in love, Grant gives himself up.

Trick exploitation, supplementing intriguing ad copy, should be effective in selling "Midnight Club." The title is hardly explanatory of the theme, but by working out contacts with private detective agencies, police departments and possible jewelry stores, the show's real atmosphere can be brought out. The Brook, Raft, Vinson, Skipworth names should be given plenty of attention. Likewise, contacts with book stores and magazine stands should not be overlooked in connection with the Oppenheim angle.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

SHORTS . . .

A Day in Moscow

Travelogue

Detours more interesting than the heavily traveled highway of the travel picture are taken in this outgiving. While movement approaches the deliberative norm of Russian production, with consequent undue length, and the scenic backgrounds have been done before more or less, there is a difference, the point of departure being at the depiction of mass action at play and at work.—Running time, 26 minutes.

Mickey's Gala Premiere

(United Artists)

Clever

In the enormously amusing cleverness of this latest of the Mickey Mouse cartoon efforts, the superior quality of the rodent's concoctions is again demonstrated. In this, Mickey and Minnie star in their own comedy, while dozens of Hollywood's best known stars appear, in admirable caricature, at the grand opening, at which, be it known, Clarabelle Cow, Horace Horsecollar and Pluto appear in full dress, as it were. Among the stars so smartly burlesqued, and rolling in the aisles, are Durante, Fairbanks, Beery, Dressler, Crawford, Rogers and a host of others. Greta Garbo, at the close of the performance comes to Mickey and kisses him, and when he suddenly wakes, it is Pluto and not Greta. Amusing, and very clever.—Running time, 7 minutes.

The Strange Case of Tom Mooney

(First Division)

Newsreel Compilation

The story of Tom Mooney, San Francisco enemy of capitalism who has been under the shadow of the law since his conviction in the tragic bombing 17 years ago at a Preparedness Parade, is told in this collection of newsreel shots with a conclusion in which Mooney says he hopes he'll see the audience later "under more auspicious circumstances." The handling of this picture depends upon local political and labor conditions.—Running time, 21 minutes.

His First Case

(Universal)

Lively

There is at least a goodly portion of liveliness in this Vince Barnett comedy, though it rather lacks in cleverness. The action to a great extent borders on slapstick, but there is plenty of that when Barnett and Fred Kelsey, "ham" detectives, are called on their first case to guard the life of philandering business man Bert Roach, whose life is threatened by an excitable woman. The manner in which they shoot the wrong people, are themselves frightened out of their wits and wreck Roach's home forms the reason for it all. For the patrons who like their slapstick, this should be liked. Barnett is a reasonably amusing comedian.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Arabian Tights

(MGM)

Fair

Despite valiant efforts on the part of Charley Chase, this comedy never gets very far in the laugh direction. Chase, with three buddies, at an American Legion session in Paris, become mixed up in trouble, and suddenly find themselves members of the Foreign Legion, tramping the desert. They are enticed by dancing "girls" who turn out to be bandits in disguise. They are about to be tortured when Chase and the boys sing their way out of trouble and back to the United States. Chase's contortions in an effort to be amusing have their moments, but on the whole the comedy cannot be rated as more than a fair attempt.—Running time, 20 minutes.

The Wonder Girl

(Paramount)

Interesting

Any sport fan, all women and the general public should find interest in this number of the Grantland Rice Sportseye View series, in which is recounted pictorially the extraordinary athletic prowess of Babe Didrickson, famous Texas girl who broke seven or eight track and field women's world records at the last Olympic Games. Pictured in these events, Miss Didrickson is then seen engaged, with truly remarkable skill, in basketball, golf, swimming, diving, tennis, baseball and even football. It is a remarkable exhibition of feminine ability in a field generally conceded to man.—Running time, 10 minutes.

40 PER CENT AS TOP PERCENTAGE IS VOTED BY BRITISH EXHIBITORS

Cinematograph Association, Meeting in Glasgow, Is Told That the American Film Has Had Its Day in British Isles

by G. HOLMES
Special Glasgow Correspondent

Decision for a united stand to prevent maximum percentage on picture rentals rising above 40 per cent was voted at the summer conference of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association of Great Britain, meeting this year at Glasgow, Scotland, with more than 300 in attendance.

One daring speaker proposed, as a lever to force down rentals, a boycott on one film of each distributor, but no one supported this experiment and it was pointed out by one speaker, Councillor MacDonald, that the renter was not entirely to blame for the situation, as the exhibitor permitted himself to be "easy prey." One of the London representatives declared that 90 per cent of the associate members had agreed on the 40 per cent maximum.

The place of the conference was the MacLellan Galleries and the doors were guarded by the masks of these two ministers of mirth —Laurel and Hardy. Inside one saw more evidence of clever publicity.

The curtain rose when Mr. Thomas Ormiston, Commander of the British Empire, and Member of Parliament, welcomed everybody and recalled the momentous conference of 1925 in Glasgow when British films, so to speak came on the map. James Welsh, president of the Association and also a Scotsman, added a cheerful note and the company saw the night out by dancing the Reel of Tulloch and listening to "The Wind That Shakes the Barley" on the bagpipes.

Theatre Losses Cited

The real business began with an address by Victor Davis of Cardiff, a veteran who can paint word pictures with astonishing ease. Mr. Davis pointed out that the depression and the Snowden Tax have depleted the cinema of millions of weekly attendances; they have closed 500 cinemas, reduced many hundreds of others to a struggling existence.

In the silent days, he said, the cinema might be filled with the brightest and dullest intelligences and with all the mental grades between, and if the picture was moderately good they all went away satisfied. But the talker tells a different story. Its appeal is limited by its technique and alarming are the practical results.

Draw Is Final Determinant

Mr. Davis spoke of the big family quarrel on high film rentals and likened the renters to Budd Manning, the parachute jumper, but Budd's object was to see how far he could drop down; the renters' object was to see how long and high they could stay up.

As a fair percentage system the speaker laid down the following propositions:

The merits and costs of the picture have nothing to do with the question. It stands or falls by its power or failure to attract the public. It may have cost £5,000 or £250,000. If the £5,000 pictures attracts it has the right to be rewarded in proportion to its attracting power. If the £250,000 picture fails to attract it has no right to be rewarded beyond the measure of its failure.

The percentage charge for a program or a picture should be fixed by a graduated scale agreed upon by exhibitor and renter which will fairly share the risks and the rewards between them

The Rev. Harry Miller, who is known all over Scotland as a trenchant speaker, told the conference the cinema is so powerful an instrument that like the surgeon's knife it might be a most wholesome and valuable thing in skilled hands and the most dangerous in unskilled hands.

Films are far cleaner than many novels, he said, but declared it depressing to find so many pictures in one part ennobling, and in swift succession, in the next part, definitely degrading to the public taste.

One other paper read to the conference covered the ground dealing with the Film Institute which seeks to establish permanently the position of educational and cultural films in Great Britain.

Says American Film Day Is Over

The banquet held in the Grosvenor Restaurant was a gala night graced by the presence of Lord Provost Swan, (head of civic affairs in Glasgow,) and Lord Wark, (a senator of the Court of Session in Edinburgh).

Lord Wark said he believed the American film had had its day in this country and the British film had come to stay.

When J. C. Graham, the Paramount chief in Great Britain, rose to "say a few words" he received a very cordial hand, for no one personally on the renting side is more honestly respected.

He said the microphone would reveal his nationality which was over 300 years old and had its roots in Scotland. (The clan Graham came from Perthshire).

Any developments the Americans could make had been freely given to the British industry, he declared. Entertainment is not provincial, he said, and he was among those who regretted the advent of the talking picture but the film was still international.

Another midnight show was the first screening in Europe of "The Gold Diggers of 1933." It was exhibited before an audience of nearly 3,000.

The exhibition in conjunction with the conference was in every way successful. The staging of the equipment and furniture necessary for the modern picture theatre was carried out with pleasing effect. A walk around the stands revealed that the technical firms are appealing to every department from lighting and signs to orchestral organs and electric clocks.

An outing to Edinburgh and a trip down the Firth of Clyde concluding with a farewell dance completed the stay of the visitors.

The final impression one retains is that there is an immense vitality in this business connected with the exhibition of films depite talk of high rentals, tax, overbuilding, and unemployment.

BIG NEWS

The Colonist of Victoria, B. C., in a recent issue printed a picture of Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and Kenneth Bishop, English producer, and Clifford Smith of a local company, and puts under the caption: "Will H. Hubbard, Long an Official of SMPE, Dies at His Home

William C. Hubbard, executive of the General Electric Vapor Lamp Company of Hoboken, N. J., and a director of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, died at his home in Plainfield, N. J., last week. Mr. Hubbard had been a member of the SMPE Board of Governors since 1930.

For many years Mr. Hubbard had been one of the most active members of the Society and from 1925 to 1930 occupied the office of treasurer.

Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, president of SMPE, transmitted the following message to the widow of the deceased, Mrs. W. C. Hubbard:

"On behalf of the Board of Governors of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and myself I am extending our deepest sympathy on the occasion of your sad bereavement. We all feel that a close friend and distinguished colleague has passed away from us."

Bomb Throwers Held

Charges of violating the Fort Wayne, Ind., city ordinance which prohibits the placing or discharging of stench bombs in theatres or public places were filed this week against Harry Armstrong and Ray Shepherd after Armstrong admitted that he placed a bomb in the Creighton theatre. They will be tried Saturday.

Paramount Meeting Postponed

Paramount Publix creditors will meet August 10. The session had been scheduled for last Thursday in the office of Henry K. Davis, referee in bankruptcy.

Vocafilm Suing Erpi Affiliates

Interests of the former Vocafilm Corporation, headed by David Hochreich, filed suit late last week in Federal Court, New York, against American Telephone, Western Electric and Electrical Research, asking triple damages of $65,000,000 for alleged violation of the Sherman and Clayton anti-trust acts.

A statement from the offices of the plaintiff's attorney, Col. Lewis Landes, of 50 Broadway, said that Vocafilm Corporation, "in effect, charges that the three defendant companies strangled competition and forced the exhibitors to use the defendant products," during the time, some few years ago, when Vocafilm was preparing to market sound equipment and talking motion pictures.

Contracts which it had with Educational and with the Shuberts, Al Woods, and W. A. Brady were said by Vocafilm to have been called off. Profit for five years from the Educational contract would have totaled $8,384,000, Vocafilm declared, while agreements to produce stage plays of the Shuberts, Woods and Brady would have netted $13,000,000, it was stated. Triple damages for these deals, plus $600,000 which was said to have been invested in Vocafilm by W. Harry Williams, Pittsburgh capitalist, and Hochreich, totals the $65,953,000 asked by the plaintiffs.

Hochreich said that the recent decision of Judge Nields, at Wilmington, in the Stanley-General Talking Picture-Duovac case against Erpi, et al., involves a case which parallels Vocafilm's suit.

Both Sides Differ in Form of Decree in Stanley Suit

Efforts to draw up a form of decree of preliminary injunction in the cases of Stanley Company, General Talking Pictures and Duovac Radio, against Erpi, Western Electric and A. T. & T., before Judge John P Nields in the United States District Court at Wilmington, Del., last week, failed. In drawing up the decree, both sides differed widely.

Forms of decrees were submitted by each side in the three separate cases and Judge Nields will pass upon them next week. The plaintiffs asked that the decree cover the services charge of $35 or $40 a week for each theatre using the patented equipment, but the defendants objected to the injunction covering such service charges on the ground that the subject was not passed upon in the opinion of the court in the preliminary injunction given June 28, and should be left for determination at the final meeting.

Glenn Joins Warner

Allen Glenn has been named southern advertising and exploitation manager for Warner, by S. Charles Einfeld, head of the advertising and publicity department. Mr. Glenn will work out of the Dallas exchange, under Fred M. Jack, district manager.

David J. Chatkin, partner of Milton Feld and Harry Katz in the development of a new circuit in Ohio and West Virginia, leaves shortly for Cleveland, where he will make his home. Headquarters will be established there. Each theatre will operate under its own corporate identity.

A GLINT OF PERFECTION

Life is made bright and satisfactory by glints and flashes of perfection. It may be a glimpse of apple blossoms falling in driving rain, the antics of a kitten with a ball of yarn, a view of illumined lower Manhattan in a late dark winter's afternoon, a line of crystalline dialogue on page or stage, the best ankle of the season in a Fifth Avenue breeze, or the first julep of a hot afternoon. It is always an evanescent expression of the moment, perfect in that moment, for that moment and no other. Once in a while an advertisement can be like that. Such an instance came last week when we turned to the inside cover of Motion Picture Herald, *and discovered with what neat and complete grace and propriety and blithe humor the nimble wits of M-G-M's weavers of advertising had seized upon a special and particular moment and opportunity to answer questions important to the whole industry.—T. Managers' Basic Agreement With Equity Abrogated

The basic agreement between the Actors Equity and the Managers Protective Association, which had governed the relationship between actors and producers since 1924, was abrogated at midnight Monday by the failure of the association to make payment of $5,994.86 on a judgment in favor of the actors' group.

The agreement permitted Equity to make its own rules governing foreign actors, established an eight-show week, provided a standard contract for actors, made managers responsible for actors' property used on the stage, and stipulated that 80 per cent of the cast of a production be members of Equity, and that those not members pay the equivalent of Equity's dues.

PROFIT AT 'SACRIFICE OF INDUSTRY'

SACRIFICING FILMS TO FAN ARTICLES

To the Editor of the Herald:

In your July 8th issue under heading of "Some Day Producer Will Wake Up" appears a very true article, over the signature of Mr. John Guthrie.

In 1912 I entered the motion picture business, and have been connected with it ever since. This business was built to its height before the dear public knew much of how pictures were made and the lives of the stars. They wondered at the many seemingly impossible scenes, they idolized their screen favorites, thus getting real entertainment when they attended the theatres. Now every newsstand and corner drugstore, besides thousands of other places, are literally covered with hundreds of magazines telling the world of everything connected with the motion picture business, much of which is not true. Of course we know it would be impossible to prevent all these articles from being published, but much could be done by the producers to curb these harmful publications.

Do you know of any other business of merchandise that is offered to the public, that magazines and even the press attempt to tell the public of its value, and most often criticize it? The public believes that every one connected with the production end of this business is base, which I know is not true, but these petty magazines have brought out with elaboration every flaw they could find, trying to swell their pockets with gold at the sacrifice of the motion picture business. So I say in conclusion that I think it is due time that the producers wake up and stop these unnecessary and harmful publications.—T. F. Ware, Capitol Theatre, Clarksville, Tenn.

NOT THE CAUSE BUT THE DETECTOR

To the Editor of the Herald:

Believing that I may be, perhaps, of some help in the controversy over the "findings" some weeks ago, printed in your magazine, Motion Picture Herald, by the Motion Picture Research Council, I thought that I'd jot down briefly some information on the subject—of which, apparently, little is known. [The article concerned principally the effects of the motion picture upon the child.—Ed.]

H. H. Goddard, professor of abnormal and clinical psychology, at Ohio State University, who is a recognized authority on the subject (the child, etc.) wrote, contributing to the Children's Foundation, in "The Child: His Nature and His Needs," that:

"It is because children of low mentality, often coming as they do from homes where the parents have equally low mentality, can not adjust themselves properly to such situations as the movies give rise to, and as a consequence their deficiency becomes manifest. Thus the movies are found to be not the cause of the condition, but the detector of it." (Italics—underscored words—are the author's.) And he continues: "The average child in the public school is not injured by the movies. Up to three years ago, of the more than four hundred delinquent boys and girls examined at the Bureau of Juvenile Research of Ohio, not one ever claimed that his delinquency was the result of attending the movies, or that the misdemeanor he had committed had been suggested by the movies. Since that time, there has been so much discussion of the evil effects of the movies, that the children have discovered that it is a good alibi, and it is consequently given more frequently."

That, and it is the most reasonable explanation to be had in all the confusion that surrounds the "problem," clears the question up as regards whether movies do cause delinquencies. To my mind, the movies help to clarify the idea of a crime when the details are pictured. With a minimum of detail the mind that is susceptible to criminal ideas, can not "see" the how-to-do and so how-to-get-the-dough.

My belief is that the "findings" are being "used" more for the sake of moralizing generally against all pictures than for the sake of helping the "character in children." For that is a natural inference to me, in that the logical place to go would be to the schools, and particularly, for that is where the cause rests ultimately, to the parents of the youth. The problem as they see it lies in the movies. They can't seem to see that the movies are what a striker is to a match—the match lights only when it has sulphur on it. Who put it there? That question they evade.—Sigmund Rutkowitz, Trenton, New Jersey.

DUBBED VERSIONS BRING "PANNING"

To the Editor of the Herald:

In the item, "War and Films," you state an interview you had with Mr. John B. Nathan, district manager of Paramount for Central America, West Indies and northern South America, Colon, C. Z., which I want to rectify at least as much as it concerns El Salvador Republic, but believing that the public opinion will not differ much in other countries, with the exception of Panama, West Indies and Venezuela where they have a high percentage of negroes and more foreigners than in C. A.

We have shown during the last eight months two outstanding musical comedies, which should have been hits, but came pretty near failure, i. e., "Whoopee" of United Artists (starring Eddie Cantor) and "Il Est Charmant" of Paramount (starring Meg Lemonier and Henry Garat). "Whoopee" was exhibited five times, a record low, in our Teatro Principal and only once in Santa Ana and in no other theatre of our circuit, in spite of a lot of advertising and of a fine trailer we made in the four shows after the release, a record low. "Il Est Charmant" was the first French talking picture we exhibited. Mr. Nathan knows our receipts and those of the Palace in Guatemala, as Paramount pictures are exhibited at this end at a percentage rental over gross receipts. Including the money paid by the French speaking community the gross receipts were those of any ordinary picture, discounting it, this picture, in spite of the fine tunes it had, would have been a failure. You will easily understand that we were afraid when we read in Motion Picture Herald that the producers will drown us with musicals. I do not mention all those other musicals of minor quality like "Pagliacci," "Viennese Nights," etc. However, this is changed when it concerns Spanish talking pictures with popular Argentine, Cuban, Mexican or Spanish songs, but those pictures contain songs while 70 per cent of each picture is talking and not singing.

I agree with Mr. Nathan that American pictures are preferred everywhere, as European pictures generally are sophisticated and lack the minimum of action our customers are accustomed to, and, last but not least, European pictures have generally too much local color to suit foreigners in the long run, not to mention that American companies, even if they are in receivership, have a better paying market in New York City than the whole Germany is for the German producer, and for this reason they can spend more money in a picture.

As far as dubbed Spanish versions of English talkies are concerned, I am surprised to read that Mr. Nathan said they satisfy the cinematic appetite of Latin Americans. We get always an awful panning after having shown a dubbed version, the motion of the lips in speaking English or Spanish is so different that we would prefer to show rather an English talkie silent, than to show it with Spanish dubbed version. The only dubbed versions which give some results are those made from French talking pictures like "El Payaso" of Paramount.

Depression is very heavy on us, but Paramount and Fox thought that they can brighten up things for the industry raising their rentals at a time when one has to work very hard, even in places without any competition, to keep the theatre out of the red. The raise was 10 to 15 per cent of the gross receipts. Fortunately MGM and Universal keep on their live-and-let-live policy and charge the same rentals as they charged in former years, which is very fortunate, as they have the best material and enable the exhibitor to keep his theatre open. If all producers would have the same policy like Paramount and Fox soon the last theatre would be closed. Their pictures the last eight months were very bad. Bad pictures in connection with high rentals will make them lose pretty soon their best customers.—O. Beer, manager circuit of Messrs. Meardi Hermanos, San Salvador, El Salvador, C. A.

Kennedy Bringing First Two Features to New York

Aubrey M. Kennedy returned to New York Wednesday from his new Kennedy City, Florida, studios, bringing with him the first two "Kennedy Sunshine Specials," both of which are completed and ready for immediate release. The two features are Marshall Neilan's "Chloe," and George Melford's "Playthings of Desire."

Prominent among early subsequent releases will be Buster Keaton's first independent production, which goes into work immediately. Another picture well on the way is "The Tom Cat," a farce comedy by Margaret Mayo and directed by Ford Sterling. Announcement as to distribution arrangements will be made soon.

Aileen Brenon Handling "Songs"

Aileen St. John Brenon, noted motion picture publicist, is handling the publicity on the premiere in New York of Paramount's "Song of Songs," with Marlene Dietrich. Miss Brenon, who was for many years at Pathe, has had charge for a year of fan magazine publicity at the Paramount home office.

BLAME RADIO AS 'KILLING OFF' SONGS

distributors for talking films is received by the American Society.

Producer-distributors pay royalties to another group, headed by John Payne, for mechanically recording copyrighted music. This group is not connected with ASCAP in any manner, according to Mr. Mills, who said that the members of the Payne organization are publishers who have banded together and appointed Mr. Payne their trustee and collector. Electrical Research Products and RCA Photophone are the principal paying agencies for the producers. Some publishing members of the Payne group are also members of the ASCAP.

Societies similar to the American Society of Composers function in practically all civilized countries. Most of them are co-related, functioning as collection agencies on royalties.

Radio Called a "Parasite"

In charging that mechanical music has "murdered" the life of the song sheet and the phonograph record, Mr. Mills said that the Society is not campaigning against the advance of science, but rather to educate the new forms of presenting music that they must "pay their way" out of profits.

"Radio is one of the greatest contributions to mankind," he said, "but it is parasitic in its activities of competition. We would gladly give the broadcasters a free license for performing rights if they would keep music off the air for two days each week, so we could sell some sheet music.

"Music is becoming increasingly popular but its constant use by the radio and the talker has cut the rightful returns to authors, composers and publishers to almost nothing. Before the development of the radio broadcasting industry, the principal income of the members was derived from royalties on the sales of sheet music and phonograph records, but the radio has displaced the piano and the phonograph."

The net proceeds from the licenses issued for specified fees to theatres, broadcasters, dancehalls, cabarets, amusement parks and the like, are distributed at quarterly periods to the members of the Society, which was founded in 1914 by the late Victor Herbert, to prosecute infringements of copyrighted music. Under the present copyright law, enacted in 1909, the initial copyright is granted for a period of 28 years, and may be renewed for an additional 28 years, making the maximum protection term some 56 years.

The American Society took its case to the public last week in a graphically illustrated brochure on "The Murder of Music," in which the era of mechanization is indicted. One hundred thousand copies were dispatched to all members of Congress, librarians throughout the country, musical societies and clubs, women's associations, theatrical and motion picture publications and 3,000 newspapers.

Said a foreword: "The charts . . . show graphically and impressively what is happening to the . . . income of its creators as a result of the mechanization of music. . . .

"These charts constitute a serious challenge . . . Under present conditions the art of music and its creators are being starved to death. . . . The way to encourage and to stimulate musical creation is to enable musical genius to secure, under these changed conditions, such remuneration as will adequately compensate it for the exercise of its talents."

Typical of the argument being advanced is the decline in the number of regular retail outlets for sheet music. They have dropped from 8,000 a few years ago to 2,000. Comparable with 1,750,000 copies of sheet music sold in 1927, as in the case of "Ramona," is the present current maximum of 200,000 copies on a best seller. The principal reason given for this decline is the constant repetition of musical numbers by broadcasters. Eighty-six per cent of all radio programs are made up of music, it was said.

Although broadcasting and the talking motion picture developed a new source of revenue for the Society's members, the returns from both do not make up, even closely, for losses sustained by the authors, composers and publishers through the decline in sales of sheet music and records, according to Mr. Mills.

Charts presented by the American Society follow:

GROWTH OF THE RADIO AUDIENCE

1926	20,000,000
1927	26,000,000
1928	30,000,000
1929	38,000,000
1930	46,000,000
1932	60,000,000

The growth of the radio audience was estimated by multiplying by four the number of radio sets in homes, as reported by the Department of Commerce, four being the average size of the American family, according to the last federal census. Proportionately as the radio audience increased, the sales of pianos, phonographs, records and sheet music decreased. At the outset of 1933 the radio audience in the United States was officially estimated at 68,000,000.

TOTAL SALES OF RADIO SETS

1926	200,000,000
1927	168,750,000
1928	388,000,000
1929	592,068,000
1930	332,198,000
1931	212,040,000
1932	124,860,000
TOTAL SALES IN 8 YEARS	$2,182,916,000

The compilation was based on information supplied ASCAP by the Department of Commerce. "During the last decade one of the most profitable industries in the country was the manufacture of radio sets," said the Society. "This industry is absolutely dependent on music for its existence. Sales reached a peak in 1929, with a total of $592,068,000. Then cheaper, but efficient sets appeared on the market and the retail price declined. A considerable part of this decline is attributable to the introduction of 'midget sets' which may now be purchased for comparatively few dollars, whereas a good radio set cost over $100."

EXPENDITURES FOR BROADCAST ADVERTISING

(Chain Programs Only)

1927	$3,832,500
1928	10,252,500
1929	18,729,500
1930	26,820,000
1931	35,792,000
1932	39,107,000
TOTAL FOR 6 YEARS	$134,533,500

"During the depression, money spent for radio advertising increased and still remains one of the bright spots of the critical period through which the country and the world have been passing," said the Society. "The figures in the tabulation represent advertising revenues of the National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting System only. They do not represent the receipts of the hundreds of stations scattered all over the country. They would further swell the impressive total annually expended for radio advertising. Music makes broadcasting interesting—this interest sells sets—the use of sets establishes the audience as a 'circulation' which can be sold to advertisers. In eight years advertisers have

TOTAL SALES OF PIANOS		TOTAL SALES OF PHONOGRAPHS
1925	$93,670,000	1925	$22,600,000
1927	67,000,000	1927	46,000,000
1929	28,000,000	1929	31,656,000
1931	12,000,000	1931	4,869,000

Taking as its source the Music Industries Chamber of Commerce, the American Society decries the decline in the sale of pianos thusly: "Constantly fewer people play or are learning to play the piano, and the market for sheet music has accordingly almost disappeared. This decline is attributable to the change in musical habits of the people who, rather than learn to play their own music, now prefer to listen to it over the air. The same songs are played so frequently over the radio that the period of their popularity has been drastically reduced, resulting in a lower income to the composer, and imposing upon him the necessity of creating many more compositions than previously. The result is inferior music—an enforced product."

With regards the drastic reduction in phonograph sales, the Society commented: "A decline of 90 per cent was not caused by the depression."

TOTAL ROYALTIES FROM PHONOGRAPHS (Of Three Leading Firms)

1926	887,514
1927	877,723
1928	765,012
1929	598,150
1930	366,949
1931	169,248
TOTAL ROYALTIES IN 8 YEARS	$4,531,764

"By Act of Congress, owners of musical copyrights receive a royalty of two cents for each phonograph record of their music," Mr. Mills' statement continued. "The royalty on a record with music on both sides is four cents. This was formerly one of the largest sources of income to the composer and writer of music." This decline, as noted in the foregoing, is attributable to the fact that "fewer and fewer people are buying records. Music is more popular than ever, but people are listening to it over the radio."

EMPLOYMENT OF MUSICIANS IN MOTION PICTURE THEATRE ORCHESTRAS

1932	3,000

Mr. Mills subsequently pointed out that, because of closed theatres, bankruptcies and a general cutting down in orchestras, there are now less than 900 musicians employed in motion picture theatres.

TOTAL SALES OF SHEET MUSIC (Of Three Leading Firms)

1926	3,447,775
1927	2,797,518
1928	2,790,862
1929	2,130,722
1930	1,261,137
1931	861,382
TOTAL SALES IN 8 YEARS	$16,755,902

Said the Society: "Before radio, people bought sheet music in large quantities. They no longer use their pianos—they 'listen in.' Sales of sheet music, by three leading firms, whose record indicates the trend in the whole trade, have decreased . . . 75 per cent because of the radio use of music. Even in the prosperity year of 1929, sheet music sales were less than two-thirds of what they had been previously."

THE AVERAGE LIFE OF AN OUTSTANDING "HIT" SONG
Before Radio, prior to 1925

Average Life ..... 6 months
After Radio, Since 1931
Total Sale ..... 229,866 copies
Average Life ..... 3 months
(Source: American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers).

"Before radio, song hits had an average sales life of 16 months. People heard a song in theatres and music stores and bought copies. The total sales advanced slowly, reached a peak and maintained a steady peak sale for several months, thus assuring a fair remuneration to the composer for the exercise of his creative genius. Then the sales began to drop off gradually. An outstanding song hit would sell at the average rate of 1,156,000 copies.

"Then radio came. The composer's income from the sale of sheet music and phonograph records declined. Nevertheless, hundreds of stations play his songs over and over again. Always on the lookout for something new, the radio seizes each new hit, plays it to death in a few weeks and then—CRASH! The song is done to death in three months because it has been overplayed. Total sale for even an unusually outstanding song hit now averages 229,000 copies."

"WHO GETS THE MONEY WHICH THE PUBLIC SPENDS FOR MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENT?"
(Annual Average for 1928-1929-1930)

Motion Pictures	$1,500,000,000
Radio	525,000,000
Theatres & Concerts	166,000,000
Dance Halls & Night Clubs	23,725,000
Composers, Authors, Publishers	1,704,000
Annual Average for All	$2,216,429,000

(On the basis of this annual average spent by the public on all forms of entertainment, total expenditures for the three years, 1928 to 1930, would approximate $6,649,287,000. "Each of these commercial amusements . . . is dependent solely upon music. Without music, each would cease operation. Yet, for every dollar paid by the American people for commercial amusements, the creators receive less than one-tenth of one per cent."

Moule General Manager Of Trendle Theatres

Thomas J. Moule is to be general manager of Detroit Theatres Operating Company, under which name George W. Trendle will operate 10 Publix theatres he is taking over from Paramount. Mr. Moule had stayed with Michigan Publix a few years ago when John Kunsky and Mr. Trendle sold out to Paramount.

Nate Platt, divisional manager for Publix, will return to Chicago, where he was in the Balaban & Katz organization. Howard Pierce, now with Kunsky-Trendle's station WXYZ, is to be the circuit's publicity manager. L. H. Gardner will manage the neighborhood houses.

Stage shows are to return to the Michigan theatre Sunday.

Service Charge Up To Final Hearing

Efforts to deny Electrical Research Products the right to enforce the service charge clause of its equipment leasing contract must wait the final hearing now pending on that contract, according to a decision handed down by Judge John P. Nields in federal court at Wilmington. The court did enjoin Erpi, however, from enforcing the clauses on interchangeability and parts which Judge Nields himself declared invalid several weeks ago, the decision on which the plaintiffs, Stanley Company of America, General Talking Pictures and the Duovac Radio Corporation, based their pleas for temporary injunctions.

The court made no reference to service charges specifically, merely denying all parts of the plaintiff's petition except those on the interchangeability and the purchase of parts for Western Electric equipment exclusively for Erpi. But denial of temporary injunctions on the other pleas was made without prejudice to the right of any party to the suit to raise these questions at the final hearing, the date to be set later.

New State Taxes Near; Pettijohn

Prospects of new state levies upon the motion picture industry seem imminent, according to Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Film Boards of Trade, who recently returned from Europe. Seven state legislatures are now in session and eight more are preparing for special sessions within the next few months, Mr. Pettijohn said.

"Most of these states are meeting to devise new ways and means for new financing," he said. "This being the case there can be little doubt that some new form of taxation will be foisted upon the industry."

Legislatures still in session include California, Michigan, Massachusetts, Wisconsin, Colorado, Oklahoma and Utah. Legislatures meeting soon, together with dates, are: New Jersey, August 29; Ohio, August 15; Alabama, August (date not set); Iowa, Sept. 15; Virginia, August 10; New York, July 26; Indiana and Kentucky, dates not set.

Reginald Reubenson Cleared

The court of appeals at Albany, New York, has vacated an order for the arrest of Reginald Reubenson on charges of conversion of proceeds from a motion picture venture, in the case brought by Richard J. Pearl, through his attorneys, Feitelson, Lehrman and Mayers. Frederick Malcolm Wolf represented Mr. Reubenson.

THOUGHTS IN A PROJECTION ROOM!

"THE STRANGER'S RETURN"... that's a good title... I hope it's a good picture"

"OKAY! This is a story of real American people.. close to the soil... well, let's see..."

"Seems to be just what exhibitors have been asking for... good clean homespun drama!"

"Gee, I hope nobody is noticing me... I'm actually weeping... this darn picture's got me... guess I'm really not so hard-boiled!"

"That fellow LIONEL BARRYMORE certainly can act.. my heart's beating so loud I bet everybody can hear it.. this is thrilling!"

"The public will love this picture.. Oh boy, MIRIAM HOPKINS sure makes love realistically... lucky Franchot Tone.. ah there, behave!"

"HA! HA! (Gosh I guess I'm laughing too loud)... but that chap Stuart Erwin is funny... HOT DOG! I can just see the folks packing in for this one!"

"Well, no wonder, it's from the novel by Phil Stong, the guy that wrote 'State Fair' and when KING VIDOR directs a picture it's got everything!"

"THE END... really I don't remember when I've enjoyed a picture more than 'STRANGER'S RETURN' Good old Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer!"

JENKINS' COLYUM

Neligh, Neb.

Dear Herald:

All through the last campaign we heard a great deal about "The Forgotten Man." He was eulogized from the rostrum, through the press and over the radio. Just who this "Forgotten Man" is is still a question in the public mind, as no one has as yet defined him. If you want to know who he is, ask us, we can tell you.

For over eight years we have been associating with that guy, and he can be found in something like eight thousand independent theatres throughout the country. We know him personally and we know him intimately. We have visited him in his theatre and in his home. We know his likes and his dislikes. He has poured into our ears thousands of times his trials and tribulations. We have seen his brow furrowed with anxiety and care, and we have gone away from him many a time with an aching heart, so, if you want to know who that "Forgotten Man" is, ask us.

Some day New York and Hollywood are going to make his acquaintance. They are going to get real chummy with him. They are going to sit down and talk it over with him, because some day they are going to realize that without the three or four hundred thousand dollars that they are sending them weekly the sheriff would be knocking at every studio door in Hollywood, while the New York bankers are standing at the back door to catch 'em when they come out.

Some day they are going to realize that this "Forgotten Man" is one of the important branches of this industry. They are going to realize that when 5,332 of these "Forgotten Men" folded up and quit sending in their weekly receipts it gave this industry a jolt that was staggering. We have heard some exchange managers say that it cost more to serve these men than they received, but films lying on the shelves bring in no revenue.

There is no business in the world that has as much to contend with as these theatre operators. They have to contend with every kind of opposition that the mind can conceive. Amusements are not a necessity. They are a luxury. The grocer can sell his goods because they are a necessity. People have to have clothing and food, but they don't have to have amusements. The exhibitor books a high-priced picture with the hope it will get him some money, but that night the high school puts on a high school play, and fluey goes his business. He spends a lot of money advertising some special and that night the basket ball team has a matched game with some other town. Some church society wants to put on a "benefit" and expects the exhibitor to donate his theatre and he knows he will lose their patronage if he don't do it.

Once in a while he gets a picture that the public want to see—once in a while—and then everything looks rosy. He goes out and buys some T bone steak for his family and surprises 'em. Then, under the block booking system, he gets Girty Gumbo in "Love's Young Dream" and loses his B. V. D's. His wife calls him up and tells him to bring home some more T bone, but he goes and gets a chunk of liver.

He's the "Forgotten Man" all right. The only person who hasn't forgotten him is the sheriff. Somehow that sheriff has the best memory of any man in the community and he knows every exhibitor by his first name.

If you want to know who the "Forgotten Man" really is, get outside of the cities and mingle with these independent theatre men in the smaller communities and you will come to know him as you can come to know him in no other way. He will tell you things about this business you never heard of before. He'll tell you that sex, smut, vulgarity and indecency are driving business away from the box offices.

He will tell you that he can't pay more for a picture that he can take in at the box office and continue to act as a collection agent.

He will tell you also that it goes against his grain to play a picture of some producing company whose president gets more money in one week than he gets in 52. You can't make him believe that there is that much difference in labor or gray matter. You can't make him believe but what something is wrong, and there's no use to try it.

It's about time that this guy was remembered. It's about time he was given a service that he can sell to his public. They can't give him huckleberry pie one week and then limburger cheese for the next ten and expect him to like it and hold his job. It can't be done.

The exhibitor is the man who stands between the producer and the public. They each take a shot at him and they seldom miss. He has to play what's furnished him without regard to quality and he has but little to say as to price. The chains tie up the product and he has to take what's left, and it's generally skimmed milk, a lot of it is clabbered.

Now, if you exhibitors don't agree with these statements, say so. If you do, keep quiet, for that's what you will do anyway, but we'll bet each and every one of you ten bucks (if we can borrow the money) that you will agree with every word of it. Who wants to take the bet?

"Ex-Lady." Wrong title. Should have been "Just One Man After Another."

"Terror Aboard." The action in this one takes place mostly on a yacht on the studio lot. They shot one, they killed another with a butcher knife, another one with a bludgeon, one was hanged, one poisoned, a shark got another one and they put a woman in the refrigerating room and froze her to death. She was stiffer'n a board. Broncho Billy in his palmiest days didn't have adamthing on this one. Our old friend and favorite, Charlie Ruggles, helped to save it from a complete collapse by getting drunk in the steward's room. Charlie has saved a lot of 'em in his time.

"Today We Live." Gary Cooper and Joan Crawford. This is mostly an airplane story, although the billing was silent on this matter.

The picture is slow and draggy in spots, but has a whizbang finish. A guy called "Claude" and his cockroaches helped to put this one over. If you like thrillers you will like this one, for "Thriller" is its middle name.

If we were to act on a committee to award the prize to the best ad writer in this business, we'd vote first, last and all the time to award it to the gazabo who writes the ads and makes up the layouts for the MGM ads in MOTION PICTURE HERALD. We don't know who he is, we never met him and he probably never heard of us, but he's an ad writer whoever he is. He makes old Leo say a lot of funny things. And now he introduces little Leo, Jr., a frisky little kitten that everybody will like. We hope little Leo, Jr., likes warm milk, and when he gets old enough to roar we hope he will tell the truth just like his Dad (Sometimes).

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

CHILD OF MANHATTAN: John Boles, Nancy Carroll—This I call a good program picture. Played on a double bill and came out alive.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

CIRCUS QUEEN MURDER, THE: Adolphe Menjou, Greta Nissen, Donald Cook—A mighty pleasing little program picture, the circus shots are extra good and it brings out the kids and grown ups, pleased and did little better than average business. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 11.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

SPEED DEMON: Joan Marsh, Wm. Collier, Jr.—A very good program picture with plenty of action and a good love story. If your patrons like boat racing, they will eat this up. We played it one day and got by with it and then the audience seemed to be well pleased. Business about average. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 12.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

STATE TROOPER: Regis Toomey, Evalyn Knapp.—Nice little weekend picture about a cop assigned to guard a large oil refinery against competitors who wish to destroy it. Loads of action and suspense. Only average business but pleased everyone. Toomey's Irish mug registers well here and Evalyn Knapp isn't bad either. Running time, 68 minutes.—Played July 7-8.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

WOMAN I STOLE, THE: Jack Holt.—Personally I thought this about the best picture that Columbia has made this year and the best that Jack Holt has made in a long time. But the patrons did not agree with me, as most of those who commented on it said they did not like the picture and it drew less than average business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 12-13.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

First National

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess.—Very good.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess—A very good picture, but a few scenes could have been eliminated and not hurt the picture. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 3-4.—Earle Eveland, Opera House, McConnelsville, Ohio. Small town patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—I read a Herald report of great length on this one not so long ago—but I can't agree that it is a masterpiece of humor by any means, less laughs than any Brown picture I know of. Don't mistake me, it's better to my notion than many previous Brown films, but it's not a load of laughs, but it is a good show if you don't play that funny angle too hard. Running time, 8 reels. Played July 2-3.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

LITTLE GIANT, THE: Edward G. Robinson—This is a show for old and young. Get behind this one with all the advertising you can pay for, it is by far the best picture this star has made so far, as it pleases all classes, there is many a laugh in this one. Did better than average Sunday and Monday business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 9-10.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

Fox

BEST OF ENEMIES: Buddy Rogers, Marian Nixon, Frank Morgan—Surprise picture of the season. Played to capacity two nights. Pleased 100%. Good clean picture which created wonderful word of mouth advertising. Everyone praised this highly. This picture holds interest for all; it has comedy, romance, fast moving everything to make up a good entertaining picture, especially for small towns. Good any night in the week. Played July 7-8.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

HANDLE WITH CARE: James Dunn, Boots Mallory—A program picture that will please the whole family; two youngsters come near stealing the show. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 14-15.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

HANDLE WITH CARE: James Dunn, Boots Mallory—A very fine family picture and 100% clean. Will please everyone and especially the kids. But the title is no draw and any showman that can make money on this should win a trip to the World's Fair. Even so this is one you shouldn't pass up. As a matter of fact hardly anything draws during this hot weather, anyway.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy, Joan Bennett—Very satisfactory program picture, but business below normal. Fox pictures do not draw for me this year. Running time, 76 minutes. Played June 30-July 1.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

PLEASURE CRUISE: Genevieve Tobin, Roland Young—It's pretty raw along towards the last, but our crowd on our cheap admission night seemed to enjoy it, some of the characters are very hard to understand and the whole cast are from dear old London where they seem to speak English that is not suitable for our American sound equipment. This picture will get by on the night when they do not expect much. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 14.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien—Can rate this only a very average western. Recording is not so good and the English characters never go here. Must admit that I was disappointed in this. Business slightly above average in spite of extreme heat.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien — Excellent picture. Good entertainment for any small town, and the type of western that is well worth running no matter how late you play it. Zane Grey's name is sure fire and Fox puts production value into the few they make. Running time, 7 reels. Played July 7-8.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—A very good program picture. Entertaining. Lots of action anl laughs. They all were satisfied. One thing about the picture it was clean comedy.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Fair, some laughs and some action, but you could throw a blanket over Fox's boy and girl stories and they would all come out just about the same with a little different cast. Not an original idea in the lot of them that we have run with the single exception of "Bad Girl" and they have followed that pattern ever since. Why do they do it—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

STATE FAIR: Janet Gaynor, Will Rogers—This one hardly needs a report, it's all been said before, we gave it a tough spot as July 4th is just a vacant date in this town, everybody goes elsewhere. We did just a fair business on it, but I know of no better picture in the past two years. It's pretty nearly perfect entertainment except for the chap who went haywire on the Movietone lot and stuck in the bedroom scene for some unknown reason, and there's been enough written about that already. Running time 10 reels. Played July 4-6.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

WARRIOR'S HUSBAND, THE: Elissa Landi, Ernest Truex, David Manners, Marjorie Rambeau—My patrons got a great kick out of this one. Business good and pleased all. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 9-10.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST: Loretta Young, Gene Raymond—Excellent photography; wonderful acting and direction.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre, (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST: Loretta Young, Gene Raymond—This is a novelty picture. Very good acting and lots of animals. People seemed to like it. Different from the rest, anyway.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

Majestic

VAMPIRE BAT, THE: Lionel Atwill, Fay Wray—Not so good. Just a picture. Played on Saturday program with "Haunted Gold," Warner.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

MGM

BARBARIAN, THE: Ramon Novarro, Myrna Loy—A combination of "The Sheik" and "Morocco," some of the shots were a little ridiculous, as for instance the miles and miles that Novarro made Myrna walk over sands that only a camel could negotiate and get to their destination. Not much originality there. It was done in "Morocco" only better by Marlene Dietrich. However, Novarro had a chance to use his voice and the picture pleased. But the trek over the sands slowed up the picture when it should have moved.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CLEAR ALL WIRES: Lee Tracy—This is another flop from Metro. If any producer can make a picture worse than this, I would like to see it. "The Nuisance" was terrible but this is still worse. We had many walkouts on this and the entire audience was displeased. Metro has cashed in on Tracy's popularity after "Blessed Event" but this should wash him up. Business bad and so was the story. Running time, 76 minutes. Played July 10.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston, Karen Morley—A different type picture that is extra good if you can get them in. Did not please the younger class but had many comments by older people. Will not hurt any theatre to run this picture as it is good. Running time, 85 minutes. Played July 8-9.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. Town and rural patronage.

HELL BELOW: Robert Montgomery, Walter Huston, Madge Evans—Here is a great picture from every angle, I believe the best small town picture from MGM this year. The title for small town killed it at box office. There are just two objections to it. The scene in the submarine where some die was entirely too long, and Montgomery getting killed at the end. Durante and Pallette furnish plenty of wise cracks. Played July 13-14.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HELL BELOW: Walter Huston, Robert Montgomery, Madge Evans, Jimmy Durante—There is no question but what Metro put everything in this picture to make it box office, with Huston stealing the show as usual. But whether it was the war angle that it was built around it only did average business, when it should have done more. The submarine shots are wonderful, it has action and some romance, everything that could be desired in a picture. The public evidently are not going for war stuff at this time, hence only fair business, but not the fault of the picture. It is outstanding as a production.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MADE ON BROADWAY: Robert Montgomery, Sally Eilers, Madge Evans—A good evening's entertainment. Played July 9-10.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MEN MUST FIGHT: Lewis Stone, Diana Wynyard, Phillips Holmes—This was a surprise picture. I call it one of the best I ever seen. Story great and acting splendid. Gave good satisfaction to all. Much better than some of their specials.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

NUISANCE, THE: Lee Tracy—A flop. Good picture, however. Lee Tracy no draw here. We need clean domestic comedy. By domestic comedy I mean domestic comedy, not wise guy office and apartment building dirty comedy. Why not be clean for the novelty of it?—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

SECRET OF MADAME BLANCHE, THE: Irene

WHO IS THIS NEW STAR THAT IS TAKING THE SCREEN BY STORM?

His name is Jan Kiepura.

Pronounced Kee--poo--rah!

Pronounced the youth with the voice of gold.

Pronounced the newest, nicest personality.

Pronounced the darling of the gods!

UNIVERSAL, DELIGHTED WITH KIEPURA'S GLORIOUS SUCCESS IN "BE MINE TONIGHT," HAS SIGNED HIM UP FOR EVEN GREATER BOX-OFFICE HITS. HE WILL BE ONE OF YOUR BEST BETS IN THE SEASON OF 1933-1934. Remember: "Kee--poo--rah!"

Dunne, Phillips Holmes—Good picture. Irene Dunne is fine. Ran this family night during the hottest weather on record and the attendance was not what the picture merits. Those who came liked it. Running time, 78 minutes. Played July 12-13.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SECRET OF MADAME BLANCHE, THE: Irene Dunne—A flop. The producers think men mean nothing to the theatre. They are its most important customers. They buy the tickets. Check them up. You'll be surprised.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

SECRET OF MADAME BLANCHE, THE: Irene Dunne—Fair program.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

STRANGE INTERLUDE: Norma Shearer, Clark Gable—This picture managed to scratch by without putting anybody in jail. Not good for all theatres because of the theme and novelty recording which is a bad thing instead of something good. — R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

TODAY WE LIVE: Joan Crawford, Gary Cooper —This is a mighty good picture. Both stars fine, story entertaining. But did not draw the business we expect on Sunday specials. But all that did see it were satisfied. Played July 2-3.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

TODAY WE LIVE: Joan Crawford, Gary Cooper —War, war, don't they ever get tired of it?—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre, (Leasy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

WHAT! NO BEER?: Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—A fair comedy but I had it too late as Iowa voted for the amendment on June 20th, the interest had gone. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 24-25.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. Town and rural patronage.

Monogram

RETURN OF CASEY JONES: Charles Starrett, Ruth Hall—If this is to be the return of Casey Jones, he had better not return. Story bad, recording bad and acting only fair. If you have not played this one, then don't. We had a train on wheels to ballyhoo this and the train was just about to fall to pieces. Business terrible. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 11.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Paramount

BEDTIME STORY, A: Maurice Chevalier—The kid steals the show, songs.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

EAGLE AND THE HAWK, THE: Fredric March, Cary Grant, Jack Oakie—An excellent picture run to excellent business with excellent audience reaction. By golly, they are not all dead or nuts in Hollywood when pictures like this emerge. March is steadily building draw perhaps because he is clean and in clean roles invariably.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

EAGLE AND THE HAWK, THE: Frederic March, Cary Grant, Jack Oakie—Wonderful acting by March and Grant. Oakie good as usual, supplying comedy relief. No romance. A he-man picture. Very depressing throughout. Am just wondering if it costs so much more to produce good pleasant pictures, that make patrons leave feeling like they had been entertained, than this kind. Played July 6-7.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

GUILTY AS HELL: Victor McLaglen, Edmund Lowe—This was a return date on account of playing last winter during extreme cold. This time it was too hot and did almost record low business. Very good show, nevertheless.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

I LOVE THAT MAN: Nancy Carroll, Edmund Lowe—Fair picture. Nancy Carroll poor draw. Edmund Lowe handles his part well. Sad ending, which always hurts. Running time, 74 minutes. Played July 2-4.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: Peggy Hopkins Joyce—An excellent picture to good business. Feature the "girls in cellophane" even over the big stars. I billed them, "What you knew all the time would come is here—THE GIRLS IN CELLOPHANE—they were inevitable and believe me, they are an eyeful." "Girls will see Peggy Hopkins Joyce to learn her technique, boys to see if she makes them dizzy."—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

JENNIE GERHARDT: Sylvia Sidney—Very much on the order of "Back Street." Strictly a woman's picture; very sad with no comedy relief. Very slow moving. If your patrons like Sylvia Sidney and a sad picture it will go over as the story is interesting. Business fair. Played July 9-12.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook—I opened a two-day run with this on June 13 and possibly for that reason had considerably better than average midweek business. Most reports complain on the poor draw of this. This and "70,000 Witnesses" have pleased the most of any of Paramount's this year. This is positively one of the very best program pictures for this year, or any year, for that matter. Play it by all means!—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Charles Ruggles, Lila Lee, Clive Brook, Frances Dee—Good mystery picture for small towns. Play up the back fence gossip angle. Plot well handled and, thank God, not too bloody. Work of Adrianne Allen, as Brooks' insane wife, is exceptionally good. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 5-6.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

NO MAN OF HER OWN: Clark Gable, Carole Lombard—As we haven't had a Metro contract for years, Gable meant nothing at all here. Business was very bad on this and picture wasn't any great hit either, although I suppose it got by, as I didn't hear any pronounced squawks.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

PICK UP: Sylvia Sidney, George Raft—Good.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—Ned Nedigo of Garber, Okla. (July 8, The Herald), used the same gag I did to get them in on this, or should I say I used the same gag that Ned used? Result? Best gross in over 12 months and no percentage to split so we are going to stay in the show business another month—at least. Picture pleased most everyone, although some expected it would be as hot as we advertised it. This came along when I had moaned for months that nothing was box office any more. Running time, 66 minutes.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—You'll like it, so will your patrons. This picture two years ago would have stood them up. Picture O. K. but conditions not so good. A story of the balmy days of 1890—I missed those days, for I was only about a year old, but they had their fun. "Come Up and See Me Anytime, You Can Be Had" and the finish brought the house down. I still say you'll like it and book it. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 17-18.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. Town and rural patronage.

SIGN OF THE CROSS: Frederic March, Claudette Colbert—A heavy dramatic picture that was enjoyed by my patrons. You will get many new showgoers on this picture. Running time, 118 minutes. Played July 1-2.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. Town and rural patronage.

SUPERNATURAL: Carole Lombard—Poorest picture put out by Paramount this season. Public fed up on pictures of this type. Business poor. Running time, 63 minutes. Played July 5-6.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

WILD HORSE MESA: Randolph Scott, Sally Blane—A Zane Grey western that drew extra business and pleased. Played with Bing Crosby comedy, making a nice program. Running time, 61 minutes. Played July 7-8.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

RKO

BIRD OF PARADISE: Dolores del Rio, Joel McCrea—Here's another old one to be sure, but it's a small town draw apparently. Any picture's good if you haven't seen it; not saying this is a good picture, I don't think it is, but the folks came to see it and they were satisfied. We were closed so much of last year that there have been several old pictures just like this one that have gone over well and have been worth picking up. Running time, 9 reels.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

COME ON DANGER: Tom Keene, Julie Haydon —A fair picture. Will satisfy western fans. Miss Haydon is an excellent horsewoman, splendid voice. She is the Ann Harding type, and we should like to see her in a feature picture. Played July 11-12.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

GREAT JASPER, THE: Richard Dix—Lowest Sunday receipts for nearly two years on this. Folks must have had the lowdown on this ahead of time. Wouldn't rate it quite as bad as some exhibitors have but it is extremely mediocre entertainment. About 3.2% clean.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot—This is one of the biggest flops we have had in quite a few months, both for business and picture. According to the previous writeups, we thought this would be a swell picture. No story of interest and the photography was terrible. We paid about twice as much for this one as it is worth and if you have not bought it, then you are a wise exhibitor. Running time, 100 minutes. Played July 13-14.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LUCKY DEVILS: Bill Boyd—Good stunt picture full of thrills. Good Saturday picture. Running time, 64 minutes. Played July 7-8.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MELODY CRUISE: Phil Harris, Charles Ruggles —A good picture to good business. Would have been a still better picture to still better business if they had left out the "rhymed conversation." The baby that thought of that first should make cream puffs for a living. Nifty offering, though, in spite of that. Harris is a draw on the west coast.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

MONKEY'S PAW, THE: Ivan Simpson, Louise Carter—The acting was very good, the story just wasn't there. Nothing to it. And the crowd said so. Run on a double bill.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

RENEGADES OF THE WEST: Tom Keene—Best Keene to date and Roscoe Ates helps to put it over in fine shape. There is a heap of comedy in this and that's what we want in large doses. Better western than most of the Zane Greys. Business off on account of the heat.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

SAILOR BE GOOD: Jack Oakie—RKO didn't make this and it shows it. Why they took it over we don't know. But it was independently made, poor sound, just a picture that will give your machines something to run some night without hurting anybody but certainly doing no good with all the pictures on the market. Running time, 7 reels.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

SCARLET RIVER: Tom Keene—Keene came to the front in this one. A clever western with plenty of comedy. Roscoe Ates almost stole the picture. Running time, 57 minutes. Played July 12.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Celsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TOPAZE: John Barrymore—The star is great, no question about that, and he worked hard to make a picture out of this story. Possibly he did and it was over our heads. But we starved on the picture and the first night they looked funny at me when they went out. And the second night the neighbors just did not come, and that's that for "Topaze." Played July 8.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

United Artists

MR. ROBINSON CRUSOE: Run over the Fourth of July in a family trade house to very satisfactory business. They liked the picture.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

Universal

BIG CAGE, THE: Clyde Beatty, Anita Page—Personally was afraid to run this one, and was very much surprised to find that it did better than most everything that we have shown for some time. And it pleased the better class of patrons, and all the others. Played July 8-9.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

DESTINATION UNKNOWN: Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy—Just a fair program picture, not good and not bad. Running time, 67 minutes. Played July 14-15.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

KISS BEFORE THE MIRROR: Nancy Carroll, Frank Morgan—Very, very good. I can only agree with all reports in the Herald. Director Whale and Photographer Freund did a splendid job with a good story and excellent cast to make a thoroughly enjoyable, intensely interesting picture well worth while. Running time, 7 reels. Played July 16-18.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

KISS BEFORE THE MIRROR: Nancy Carroll, Paul Lukas—This is a 100% picture in every respect. Poor business but no fault of picture. Running time, 67 minutes. Played July 4-5.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy—Personally thought this a knockout but had lots of kicks on the very sudden, uncalled for ending. To chop off this great little show as was done is a shame. The war scenes must have cost so much that there wasn't any money left to produce the last reel. In spite of the poor wind-up I consider this the best show I have had from Universal this season. Perfect for a Legion tie-up.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

RUSTLERS' ROUNDUP: Tom Mix—A very good action picture. Tom is there with the goods and he certainly pleases the fans on westerns. Saturday they eat them up. Played July 8.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—We played it mighty late. Yes, we were disappointed in the picture personally as we had heard so much about it—but in midweek it outdrew such a really good picture as "Working Man" in two days as against our three-day showing of the Arliss film. I'm not surprised, as it is a natural draw, but it just goes to show a little bit more strongly that all the superlatives of the production and advertising forces in Hollywood don't amount to much with the folks who pay. Running time, 8 reels. Played July 12-13.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Slim

Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Used this against a tent show that plays here every year to big business, so cannot say what it would have drawn under normal conditions. In spite of this severe competition, it did draw average business. Some exhibitors rated this the best comedy for a long time. Can't see it that way at all. When a show goes over big here patrons stop and comment. No comments on this. Consider only fair comedy.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

Warner

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy—Excellent. Awfully old, but wouldn't anyone rather run a good picture that's old than a new one that is not good? Tracy is a good draw with us. His work is great and while the story is rather racy and there are plenty "fast ones." "Blessed Event" is our idea of real entertainment. Audience reaction very favorable. Running time, 85 minutes. Played July 9-10-11.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

HARD TO HANDLE: James Cagney—Plenty of action in this picture and lots of comedy. Gave good satisfaction. Played July 11-12.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

HAUNTED GOLD: John Wayne—A very good action picture. Played on Saturday program with "Vampire Bat," Majestic, that was not so good. Just a picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

KEYHOLE, THE: Kay Francis, George Brent—A good show that seemed to please. Weather too hot for the usual attendance. Kay Francis gives her usual fine performance, with the able assistance of George Brent, while Glenda Farrell and Allen Jenkins furnish the laughs. Running time, 69 minutes. Played July 8-9.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

KEYHOLE, THE: Kay Francis, George Brent—Good program picture.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

PARACHUTE JUMPER: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—A very good program picture. Star and cast all good. Gave satisfaction. Played July 6-7.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

WORKING MAN, THE: George Arliss—We of the Theatre thought this the best of the three similar type Arliss pictures. A nearly perfect bit of entertainment, yet try and get them in. An absolute box office flop, and how can you get around it? Those who would come were unanimous in their enjoyment and praise. One of those pictures the exhibitor would like to have a houseful for, but it apparently can't be done. Running time, 7 reels. Played July 9-11.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas.

World Wide

DYNAMITE RANCH: Ken Maynard—As good as the average western. Barely grossed film rental in two days. Played July 12-13.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

CURSE OF A BROKEN HEART: Take an aspirin after this.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

FIFTY MILLION DOLLARS CAN'T BE WRONG: Smith and Dale—Just another Sunrise comedy. Not quite as bad as the rest of the series but still bad. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

SAFE IN JAIL: Sunrise Comedy—Like all the rest—punk.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

Educational

ONE MORE CHANCE: Bing Crosby—Couldn't give this one much. Print in terrible condition.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

TORCHY ROLLS HIS OWN: Ray Cooke—Just a fair comedy. This comedian has made better.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

VEST WITH A TALE, THE: Tom Howard—Just a wrinkle.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

Madison

SCHMELING-BAER FIGHT: A good drawing subject.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

MGM

ARABIAN TIGHTS: Charley Chase—A mighty good funny comedy. Better than the average nowadays.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

ASLEEP IN THE FEET: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—Just another comedy. Only fair entertainment and very few laughs. Pitts and Todd about washed up, especially with the poor comedies they have been making. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BIRTHDAY BLUES: Our Gang—The best Our Gang for some time. Pleased the old as well as the kiddies. They bake a prize cake and it has some prizes from old shoes to soap. Running time, 18 minutes.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. Town and rural patronage.

CHALK UP: Willie Hoppe, World's Champion Billiard Player—Good and entertaining for all classes. Also ladies. Hoppe makes some wonderful shots.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

GIRL GRIEF: Charley Chase—Chase is not so good any more. Where are his banjo and voice? "High C's" was a knockout, but his later comedies are not so good. Running time, 18 minutes.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. Rural and town patronage.

MUSIC BOX: Laurel and Hardy—Three reels of Stan and Oliver delivering and installing an electric piano, up and down the same flight of steps they delivered that washing machine four years ago. Same old hokum, same old gags, same old audience reaction—they loved it. Running time, 28 minutes.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

NATURE IN THE WRONG: Charlie Chase—A good comedy. Should please any audience.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

OVER THE COUNTER: In color. Excellent.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

SCRAM: Laurel and Hardy—A very satisfactory comedy, judging from the laughs of the patrons. Laurel and Hardy are quite popular here (with everyone but the proprietor).—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WHISPERING BILL: Oddity featuring Chic Sale and very poor entertainment. We paid for this and after screening it the first time, decided not to show it again. This may be great in the large cities, but in the small town it is just another flop. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Paramount

BLUE OF THE NIGHT: Bing Crosby—We advertised this as a special added attraction and our business was better than average. The subject is very good. Bing sings several numbers. Running time, 20 minutes.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

FATAL GLASS OF BEER: W. C. Fields—This is supposed to be a great comedy but did not prove so for me. W. C. Fields is not funny to me, perhaps I do not know good comedy. Running time, 18 minutes.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. Rural and town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 12—Cliff Edwards, master of ceremonies. About on a par with others.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

REACHING FOR THE MOON: Screen Song—A very good Screen Song featuring Arthur Tracy. Tracy sings and it is very good. This kind of entertainment is well liked in our town and personally, I think they are just as good as any one-reelers on the market. Let us have more like these. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SING, BING, SING: Bing Crosby—This is one of the best two-reelers we have played this season. Bing Crosby sings three songs and our entire audience enjoyed it. We always draw extra business with shorts like this and I wish there were more of this type. By all means play this one. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SINGING BOXER, THE: Donald Novis—Not much of a comedy but darn good singing by Novis. Running time, 17 minutes.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. Rural and town patronage.

SONG SHOPPING: Ethel Merman—Better than average. Cartoon part clever.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WHEN IT'S SLEEPY TIME DOWN SOUTH: Boswell Sisters—Screen Song which is good, but the print I received was terrible and the sound was poor, about twenty splices of black film, you could not follow the words in song. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. Rural and town patronage.

RKO

CENTURY OF PROGRESS: We advertised this heavily and did better than normal business. It seemed to please and satisfy. It's fast, passing from one thing to another except three things. They put in too much footage on a dance, a German beer garden, and these items could have been taken from former newsreels. Have had similar scenes before. Had these been eliminated and devoted to the fair it would have been better. However, we had no complaints and several said it was good. If properly advertised should make you some extra money. Running time, two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

GAY NIGHTIES, THE: Clark and McCullough—The best Clark and McCullough have made this year. Running time, 21 minutes.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MICKEY'S BIG BROADCAST: Mickey McGuire—One of the best two-reel comedies I have had this year. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SHE OUTDONE HIM: Dorothy Granger—If you played "She Done Him Wrong," featuring Mae West, be sure and get this. This Dorothy Granger is Miss West's double, and the comedy is a takeoff on "She Done Him Wrong."—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SHE OUTDONE HIM: Headliner Series—A poor comedy for children to see. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Universal

McNAMEE NEWS: Always good. That McNamee personality makes the difference.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

ROCKABYE COWBOY: James Gleason—This seemed to please very well.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

VOICE OF THE VATICAN: Special—Ordinary newsreel stuff at a fancy price. Very disappointing. Not even our local Mexican Catholic trade was interested enough to come after extra work to get to them. High spot (Pope Pius talkie debut) had appeared in identical form in Metro news months ago. What do they mean, exclusive? Running time, one reel.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BUZZIN' AROUND: Fatty Arbuckle—One of the best comedies we have seen in the past year. If the other Arbuckle comedies are as good as this one, we will be glad to get them. Al St. John is very good also. Plenty of laughs and everybody enjoyed it. Vitaphone, let us have more like this. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

C'EST PARIS: Broadway Brevity—Another Broadway Brevity in color. Pretty girls, good music, nice dance routines and clever specialties.—Nuff sed. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

MUNICIPAL BAND WAGON: Melody Master Series—Not good as some of the others, but O. K. Running time, 10 minutes.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

PASSING THE BUCK: Broadway Brevity with Alexander Grey—Novel handling of routine. Two ten-dollar bills swap stories of their experiences. Good music. Good dancing and instrumental specialties grand fun. Rates special billing. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

RAMBLING ROUND RADIO ROW: No. 5—A fair Radio Row that some liked and some did not. Radio Rows are not very popular here. Nothing but comedy goes over.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SPORT THRILLS: No. 4—Fair entertainment. We understand that Vitaphone has discontinued this series and we don't blame them. If this is the best they can do, they should be discontinued. I pity the exhibitors that have to play these shorts. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WONDER SPOTS OF THE WORLD: E. M. Newman World Adventure Series—This is one of the worst one-reelers we have had in our theatre this season. The entire series offer only fair entertainment and I personally think Vitaphone would benefit by discontinuing this series. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

YOU'RE KILLING ME: Pepper Pot Series—Another Pepper Pot headache. Too bad they didn't kill the director and the actors before they made this one. Running time, too long.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Warners Show "Voltaire"

George Arliss' "Voltaire" was screened by Warners Wednesday night for the first time, aboard the S.S. Ile de France, in New York. A dinner preceded the showing. Invitations had been extended to former governor Al Smith, Mayor O'Brien, Mr. and Mrs. Irving Thalberg, other notables and trade and newspaper representatives.

Consolidated Industries Nets $197,177 in Quarter

Consolidated Film Industries' quarterly statement, issued last week, shows a net profit of $197,177 after depreciation, federal taxes, etc., for the quarter ended June 30. This is equivalent to 49 cents a share on 400,000 of preferred shares. It compares with $265,400 for the quarter in 1932, equal at that time after preferred dividend requirements to 12 cents a share on the 524,973 no-par shares of common stock in the preceding quarter, and $192,457, or 48 cents a share on the preferred.

For the six months ended June 30, 1933, a net profit of $462,577 was reported after all charges and taxes. After preferred dividend requirements this is equal to 12 cents a share on the common, compared with $486,609, or 16 cents a share on the common for the first half of 1932.

Atlas Studio Faces Closing This Week

The Bureau of Combustibles in New York City this week moved to close up the Atlas Sound Recording studio in Long Island City on the ground that alterations have not been made to remove seventeen of an original twenty-seven violations noted on the premises last November.

John F. Zinn has been elected assistant secretary of Universal. He formerly was business manager of the studio.

Grosses Higher by 12 to 20 Per Cent, Says Jack Cohn

The motion picture as one of the greatest economic barometers is proving that the long awaited turning of the corner is an accomplished fact, according to Jack Cohn of Columbia Pictures. He notes a general increase in gross receipts ranging between 12 and 20 per cent across the country as a whole, in the face of the fact that midsummer is a natural "low" period.

Calls Increase Heartening

"This month, ordinarily among the poorest of the year, has shown a heartening increase of receipts almost everywhere," says Mr. Cohn. "The big key cities that ordinarily suffer most at this season of the year, due to the universal tendency to desert town over week-ends, involving a sacrifice of Saturday and Sunday business, are reporting the biggest midsummer grosses in two years. I do not speak of Columbia's business alone. A general improvement is manifest almost everywhere from coast to coast, bringing new hope and enthusiasm to a field that has been hard hit.

"As the creator of popular entertainment for the masses, the motion picture industry is among the last phases of big business to feel the sting of depression and among the first to experience recovery. Throughout a period of depression growing more and more acute there is a very natural tendency on the part of the public to say, as financial conditions grow tighter and tighter, "Let's go to the movies and cheer up." This carried the industry along after curtailment in expenditures hit heavily in industries commonly regarded as more essential and of greater stability.

"The same psychology prompts the fellow who has just gone to work to forget his troubles and his accumulated debts through seeking inexpensive entertainment for his family and for himself.

Public Beginning to Spend

"The new situation with its increased box-office returns, following a long period of uniformly poor business, may be explained in a word. The public is beginning to earn money and the public is putting it into circulation through commencing to spend. What now is apparent in the motion picture industry is certain to be felt in other directions. Most assuredly the money that dribbles through the box-office windows rapidly goes into circulation in many channels, ranging from rents and salaries to printing and—for that matter, as far-fetched as it may seem to the uninitiated—to the producer of the cotton and the silver forming the base of all films. It would be difficult to think of an industry that fails to contribute something to picture producing and to share to some extent in the money paid for admissions to view the films shown throughout the country. It is not this phase of the subject that interests me at the moment, however, but the substantial evidence that this country is definitely on the upgrade."

Motion Picture Club In Finance Campaign

The Motion Picture Club, through its president, Lee A. Ochs, is undertaking a financing campaign which concerns primarily the maintenance of the restaurant. Mr. Ochs is asking members to agree to lunch regularly at the club.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

LET'S HAVE A PARTY

A few weeks ago, Bill Brown, skipper of the Marboro Theatre, Brooklyn, and one of the Club's most active members, urged us, on behalf of many other local Round Tablers, to stage a Round Table "get together" so that managers in this vicinity and the nearby territory could meet, become acquainted, and pass a few hours over food and drink, song and conversation.

Swell idea, indeed, and we got right on the job. With the result that the date and spot were arranged, and a letter with all the dope shot out to every manager within reaching distance, requesting reservations. The returns have been gratifying, far exceeding our early expectations. From this end, it looks like a "click".

On page 63 of this issue you will find an announcement with all the necessary info. The shindig will start at midnight so as not to interfere with the day's work, also making it possible for managers in Long Island, Westchester, nearby New Jersey and Connecticut points to join in the festivities which will continue until—(?) A snappy program of entertainment is being worked on, with speeches held down to a minimum. It will be more of a "go as you please" party with all the necessary fixin's.

We hope this will be the first of a host of similar gatherings all over the country, where managers can put aside, for a few hours, the cares of duty. It should be an event to be fondly remembered, and to do their part in making it so, managers who expect to attend should send in their reservations now.

MORE ABOUT "SWAPPING"

Going further into the temporary "swapping managers" idea which was commented upon editorially in the July 15 issue, we find the plan has aroused some enthusiasm. Bill White, New York City Skouras divisional manager, is responsible for the idea and has tried it out in his eleven houses with results, he states, that were far above his expectations.

The move was intended to frustrate any unconscious summer let-down by giving the manager a change of scene for a period of two weeks, and an opportunity to regard and constructively criticize during that time the operation of another theatre in his division different in policy from his own. Managers who were contacted personally on return to their theatres after the temporary transfer period agreed that the plan possessed merit, and in many cases stated that they derived physical and mental benefits from this move.

Such manager help is to be commended providing it is kept within definite bounds. However, its best returns will accrue from the larger spots where the temporary transfers can be made from one section to another without disarrangement of the manager's household. But any expansion of the plan resulting in sudden transfers from one territory to another should obviously be frowned upon.

IS THE BATTLE ON?

As shown in July 15 issue of Motion Picture Herald, pages 9 and 10 to be exact, newspaper film editors again are lamenting the shortcomings of home office and theatre publicity stories. An itemizing of these alleged inadequacies results in an interesting list of "do's" and "don'ts" that might apply to situations in smaller cities as well.

Criticisms from other newspaper film editors will no doubt find their way into print in the Herald columns, as will, we trust, an answering fire from the home office batteries touched off by such able marksmen as Charlie Einfeld, Bob Sisk, Bob Gillham and other defenders.

At least, so we hope, and lick our chops in anticipation of a real "ding dong" free-for-all, the results of which should aid in synchronizing the aims of the maligned publicity purveyor and his critics in the field.

OFF THE RECORD STUFF

To the Managers of Those Broadway Theatres—And to Others Whom the "Shoe Fits"

Of a recent Saturday night with some friends, we strolled along upper Broadway. Well, hardly "strolled," as the weather was a bit autumnlike and not conducive to casual pedestrianism. Passing three well-known neighborhood houses, each flaunted in sizable marquee banners and lobby posters that the theatre was "comfortably cool."

We were silently debating the wisdom of selling coolness on a chilly night, when one of the group suggested a movie. Which suggestion was vetoed promptly by the others for the given reason it was cold enough outdoors without seeking the further coolness inside that the advertising so conspicuously promised.

And so we wondered how many others might have reasoned likewise and how many admissions were thus denied the box offices. Perhaps a few, perhaps many. Nevertheless, it should pay managers everywhere to keep open a weather eye and soft pedal the "cool" copy when the mercury dives.

ROUND TABLE CONTEST FOR WORLD'S FAIR PRIZES CLOSES JULY 31

Three Big Days Left To Send in Those July Exploitation Campaigns for the All-Expense Awards to Chicago; Entries Get Bigger and Better as Managers Speed Down Home Stretch To Finish

by A-MIKE VOGEL

A manager writes stating he is playing a picture July 31, Aug. 1 and 2, and wants to know if he is eligible to enter a campaign on this picture by sending his stuff in, of necessity, after July 31, as it will be impossible for him to get completed tear sheets and photos together before the last day of the month.

Yes, by all means he is eligible, as is every other manager who finds himself in a similar position. If you are playing a date that runs through the last day of July, or into the first few days of August, campaign on that picture qualifies for prize consideration even if it comes in after July 31.

However, be sure to make mention of that when you send in your campaign and mark down the exact dates. But be sure to forward your entry just as soon as you gather all your stuff, for we hope to announce winners in the Aug. 12 issue and we have a "deadline" to meet. So please do not hold us up.

At this writing, the campaigns are coming in a healthy stream, and we receive, by every mail, assurances from managers who have not yet reported that they will be with us at the finish. We are pleased to note the number of excellent campaigns from the smaller towns and cities. Managers of these lesser operations are putting over some fine examples of showmanship which we assure you will not go unnoticed by the judges.

And the winners, from small or large city, can relax in the splendor of the "Fair" feeling that they have been in the race of a lifetime. Incidentally, the fame of the World's Fair is spreading every day. Visitors return with fabulous stories of its wonders and daily attendance is increasing from all corners of the globe. So with the Exposition and the other recreations we are arranging, those fortunate enough to receive the awards can look forward to a notable week.

Let's talk about some of the stunts put over by Edith M. Fordyce, who is the fair skipper of the Princess Theatre, Selma (La.) and sends us a cleanup campaign on United Artists' "Kid From Spain." Selma's population is reported at 800, and as the town does not have a newepspar, Mrs. Fordyce deserves a bow for her fine work, as she reports the biggest gross of the past two years.

The "this is no bull" cow street gag (see column two, next page) went over like a house afire. It was a press book suggestion and brought gales of laughter from the onlookers, many commenting favorably upon it. A personal letter to the mailing list, and a larger than ordinary billing campaign also helped.

Mrs. Fordyce reports a nice marquee valance which she made up herself from eight yards of flaming red calico and white lettering, showing what can be done when the advertising budget is limited. And far from being bored with your report, Mrs. Fordyce, we enjoyed reading it and hope to hear more from you soon. Thanks.

Those wide awake Californians are also being heard from, and Joe O'Connor, district manager of the Monterey (Cal.) Theatre Company, and supervisor of the Golden Gate, Monterey, sends in some nice work on MGM's "Reunion in Vienna."

In advance, Joe fixed up a spiffy modern art lobby shadow box, nine feet high and six feet wide, done in silver metallics and red and black enamel. Two girls in costume stood on either side of the display handing out personal endorsement cards, and in addition, O'Connor sold the picture from the stage.

The rest of the lobby flash is strictly very high grade, the high spot being a wall poster that ran almost the length of the lobby and covered the sidewalk frames. (Photo center column.) It was done in silver and gold metallics on black oilcloth with a china red border around the entire frame, and when spotlighted, the effect was startling. Swell stuff, Joe, and equal to anything we've heard of lately.

The ace de luxers are also stepping fast, as witness the work of Joseph Feldman, managing director of the Earle Theatre, Philadelphia (Pa.), who whammed over a honey on "The Nuisance." What we especially liked was an ingeniously constructed waterfall, with real running water, built over the entrance to the lobby, with colored credit slides thrown on the water (picture center column).

Thousands of imitation telegrams in envelopes addressed to insurance agents and lawyers were delivered by regular messenger boys; 25,000 special heralds on the style of a police bulletin with picture of Tracy and a heading, "Suckers Beware," were stuck on telephone poles and on vacant store windows. These were the "acers" of the bull's eye barrage that we expect from Joseph as is typical of those Bill Goldman Philly hustlers. That, of course, includes Art Cohn, publicity shooter for the Earle, who put a mighty shoulder to the wheel.

We have been expecting to hear from Pete Egan, at the Palace, Calgary, Canada, and just before we were going to press some swell stuff from Pete came in on "Diplomaniacs" and "King Kong," the standout of which was the unique front.

It tied in with the big Canadian Stampede Week, and to make the cow hands feel at home, Pete fixed his front with hitching posts, troughs with free water and hay for the horses. The idea went over with a bang, and you will see a cut of it in next week's issue.

Pete pulled a sweet one on "King Kong" by having a character dressed as Kong pulling a small car in the Stampede parade, which drew over 100,000 spectators. And he clicked again by arranging to have his chief, F. N. Nathanson, inducted into one of the Indian tributes, "F. N." going through the ceremony in the theatre lobby.

The above ideas are just the highlights of the many campaigns Pete has forwarded. The rest will appear in detail in the Club pages, and we know will be read with interest.

We give you these few casually selected entries from the host of those received to denote the general high standard of excellence of the campaigns. Only space prevents us from mentioning others just as good, which, of course, will appear in the regular Club columns.

Go to it, good folks, the contest is still wide open. You have time to click, and click big. If you haven't yet entered—do so now. And if you've already shot us a campaign, send another. Don't pass up any chance to win one of the prizes. For there is no doubt that many managers are not in a position to take a vacation, even for a week, on their own resources. And it certainly seems like smart business to put your noodle to work to earn for you that longed for week of rest and entertainment without any expense.

Remember, the trip of a lifetime. The World's Fair, swimming, golfing, ball games, night clubs, theatres—all sorts of joys, and it doesn't cost a nervous nickel. See you in Chi.

DOES HE SLEEP? IS TOLEDO QUERY WHEN WALLY GETS GOING

Wally Caldwell gets along without sleep, because his consistent box office campaigns at Loew's Valentine, Toledo, must require at least twenty-four hours a day to put them over.

To give you some idea of his bullet-speed, this Toledo Tornado sends along ace campaigns on a flock of MGM's that sure ring the bell.

"42nd Street" got a big advance with five fashion windows in the biggest store, a presentation oil painting display in another prominent store, and six life-size chorus girl figures in as many other ace spots.

When the "42nd Street" special came to town, you may be sure that Wally milked it for every publicity possibility, besides sniping the town with arrow streamers, telegraph boys carrying banners and ushers distributing tabloids along the line of march to the theatre, with everything else topped with a giant banner across the main street.

On "Secrets," Wally put on the World's Fair pressbook contest, that ran thirteen days, the first three of which landed front page stories. 108 Neon signs were placed all over town, with 18 special displays in towntown windows, and a telegraph flower tieup also got lots of mention.

Every taxi in town was bannered with "Today We Live" signs when Caldwell played that picture, and thousands of cough drop samples in theatre imprinted pay-day envelopes were distributed on downtown corners and placed in parked cars.

An effective radio tieup whereby visitors to the sponsor's store were given autographed photos of Crawford went over very well, as six announcements were made daily plugging the picture. Millinery shops and jewelry stores displayed big windows on Joan's new fashions.

These are only some of the highlights of Wally's splendid work, and we hope to run some more dope soon about this member's activities.

F. M. Kendall, manager, Warner Kentucky Theatre, Danville, Ky., got a break for "Gold Diggers of 1933," by planting the serialization in a local daily. For three days prior to the publication of the first chapter, the paper ran a front page ad telling readers to watch for the story. Then the paper broke with the story on the front page, with theatre credit copy carried under the title of the story.

MICKEY MOUSE POP NEWSPAPER CONTEST ACES FOR MIAMIANS

Ond now Mickey and Minny have gone "popularity" down in Miami, Fla., where those "Wometco" hustlers have just put over a newspaper voting contest for the most popular children members. Mark R. Chartrand, manager, Biltmore, gives us the dope.

The contest broke with a free full-page display ad from the gifted pen of Hal Kopplin, Wometco ad chief, which gave all the details and prizes. Three theatres were in on it, the Biltmore, Tower and Grove, each of which has a local chapter of the "rodent" club.

Prizes were automobiles, bicycles, wrist watches, diamonds, sporting goods, fountain pens, skates, toy sets, and six season passes to the theatres. Each admission was good for 50 votes, and the paper ran a daily coupon also good for the same number, no more than one coupon each day for one contestant. Eight week newspaper subscriptions counted for 5,000 votes.

On opening day of contest, theatres put on a Mickey Mouse parade with over 100 bannered trucks and private cars in line, carrying two orchestras, and members from different chapters. Mark says he is not to receive all the credit for the stunt, as the other managers worked just as hard to put it over. Knowing that gang down there, Mark, we well know that. Regards!

OLD TIME BREW BAR AND FREE SUDS JAM SUGARMAN'S LOBBY

Harry M. Sugarman, formerly president and general manager of the West Coast Junior Circuit, now skipper of the Egyptian, Hollywood, sends along his application, and is kind enough to speak kind words about the Club.

Harry sends us a herald and photo of a sock stunt on "What! No Beer?" wherein a bar was placed in the lobby and free brew schoonered out to the thirsty. The photo shows a healthy crowd around the bar, and you will have to take our word for it as the snap is too dark for reproduction.

Thanks for the gag, Harry, and we know that the clubmembers are looking forward to other showmanship samples you are capable of dishing up.

JONES-"DIGGER" GAG PLUGS BUSINESS ON SHORT AND FEATURE

In return for a mention in the lobbies of the Warner Bros. Cleveland theatres, the Cleveland District Golfer, one of the largest local magazines devoted to this sport, gave a double-spread in the June issue to the Bobby Jones' shorts.

In addition to the above, the magazine devoted a full page to pictures showing the Warner Bros.-First National stars in the latest golfing togs. Also a half page was given to the showing of "Gold Diggers of 1933" and the Bobby Jones' shorts at the Cleveland Warner houses.

Sid Dannenberg, Warner Cleveland exploiter, engineered the double hook up, and by working both ends against the middle he aims to reach golfers who want to see Jones and others who prefer the musical.

NO, you don't have to read this but it may mean thousands to you!

Suppose you went into a grocery store to get a jar of caviar. The proprietor insisted, before selling you the caviar, that he show you his latest pickles, prunes, pumpernickel, pap, peanuts, pies and petrushka, giving you a lengthy talk on the excellent qualities of all these products. Whether you want to, or not, you must listen, otherwise no caviar.

Would you resent it? Of course. You can see what he has to offer simply by glancing around the store. You probably would not buy there again after this happened once or twice. You came to buy caviar, and although you might be interested in pickles, prunes, pumpernickel, pap, peanuts, pies or petrushka, you may have no interest in listening to long sales talks on each one.

True, you agree. And yet theatres continue to annoy and anger their audiences by showing many long trailers at each performance. These trailers generally are crammed with silly superlatives lauding each picture to the skies. Who believes them? Not your audiences, you may rest assured. Have you ever noticed how many people get up and go out to the lobby or to the rest room when the trailers are flashed on? The theatre manager very often does not pay attention to this. He is interested in the trailers as a theatre-man, not as a patron.

Audiences are not humbugged by trailers any more. They want to know what pictures are coming. They want the information given to them in short, snappy manner. Beautiful backgrounds with a lot of silly titles don't sell anything. Trailers with scenes from the pictures keep away as many or more people than they attract. Stop and think about it!

Supreme Screen Service has two trailer services which are fast being accepted by exhibitors everywhere as the ideal trailers.

The NEW DEAL Trailers are short and punchy. They sell at the lowest prices in the history of trailers. A complete service, including dates and openings and closings, at half or less than half of what you are now paying.

The ALL TALKING-ANIMATED Trailers are very novel. None of the silly titles. An intimate voice talking to the audience about the story and cast, with a punch in the talk. Even these trailers are probably cheaper than your present service.

ELMER BRIENT GETS BOX OFFICE BREAKS FOR LOEW'S IN VA.

Before arriving in the Big Town for a short visit, Elmer Brient, who does things for Loew's in Richmond (Va.), sent along a batch of tear sheets showing some of the gags he planted in the very conservative Richmond papers.

Especially good was a three-column shot of a flock of Southern beauties in bathing suits getting wet under the fountain spray of the cooling system on the theatre roof, the cut line mentioning both the theatre and the cooler.

Elmer also put on a locally produced show with home talent that landed much extra free space, the reviews lauding it as equal in presentation and entertainment with many regular units and stage bands that had appeared in Richmond. Brient emphasizes lettered copy in his ads and makes them stand out enough to kill everything else on the page.

COOPER'S GAME SHOW IS NEW ANGLE FOR OUTDOOR BALLYHOO

Showmen are becoming more and more lobby wise and are using this valuable space for something more than the conventional showings of posters and cut-outs. M. A. Cooper, manager, Hackensack Theatre, Hackensack, N. J., opens up a new outlet with his recently completed first annual lobby show and exhibit of the Deputy Game Wardens Association of New Jersey, which was advertised with posters as below illustrated.

The idea was to acquaint the public with the sportsmanship of fishing and hunting within the law and the lobby was decorated with live specimens of unusual game fowl such as English Ringneck, Golden, Silver and Lady Amherst pheasants; wild ducks, fox, raccoons, crows and squirrels. A large tank was constructed in which was placed large rainbow, brook and brown trout from the state hatcheries. Mounted birds and fish were also included in the display.

Through the Better Films committee and PTA, school children of the country were invited and state films of the hatcheries and game farms were exhibited, preceded by lecturers by the game wardens. The children took notes and wrote classroom compositions on the subject.

Cooper received invaluable assistance from Charles Roth, staff photographer of the Bergen Evening Record, which paper gave lots of space to the show. The exhibit ran a week, during which the lobby was crowded and receipts showed a corresponding increase.

A swell slant, M. A., and we look forward to hearing of similar shows from other managers seeking novel exploitation angles.

"WATERFRONT" PRESS CONTEST GOES OVER FOR UNITED ARTISTS

Ship news and waterfront reporters along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, Great Lakes and Mexico responded 385 strong to United Artists "I Cover the Waterfront" contest, in which ten cash prizes were offered for articles based on actual happenings while covering their assignments.

Stories had to be based on actual fact, and according to Monroe Greenthal, many of the stories might well be transferred into real screen thrillers.

This idea is similar to the reported press book suggestion, which can be used in any community, coastal or inland. Incidentally, if any of your local newspapermen have taken part in the national contest, you might include that in your campaign.

ADVANCE CAMPAIGN ON "GOLD DIGGERS" CLICKS FOR GRIMES

The folks in Morgantown, West Va., will no doubt be digging "gold diggers" out of their hair and collars for quite some time since Ken Grimes, Warner manager there, blanketed the town with a skyrocking campaign on "Gold Diggers."

Ken called it a premier, and sent two gals house to house announcing the opening, while his cashier called every number in the book. Forty-eight merchants tied in with the theatre to give away a new car, all saying so in their ads and windows.

Every newsboy had a theatre ad pinned to his back for days in advance, window cards were tacked on delivery cars and the house staff carried banners on their personal cars. Four 1,000-watt lamps were promoted for opening night, and lobby and marquee specially decorated.

Grimes' newspaper campaign rates extra mention. He took thirty inches three days in advance, mostly "girl" art and a swell display. The day before, he splashed with a two-column full in reverse that sure killed the rest of the page, and on opening day came back with a sock that could not miss, followed up by other "stoppers."

Plenty of 24's, art display boards, banners for empty store windows, and radio announcements told every eye and ear that the picture was in town, and Ed Seltzer says that everyone was there.

Which we can readily believe. Good stuff, Ken, and an extra bow for making up a campaign book that should rate a special spot on Ed's desk.

ARLISS JIGSAW GAG HELPED HAROLD KAY ON "KING'S VACATION"

Taking advantage of the vast jig saw puzzle popularity, Harold Kay, manager of the Utopia Theatre in Painesville, Ohio, cashed in on this fad when he played Warner Bros'. "King's Vacation" with George Arliss. Kay tied-up with a local merchant and promoted an entire window on the Main Street of the town for a whole week. Cutting out the head of George Arliss from the stock twenty-four sheet and setting it up in the window with the title and cast lettered on it he indicated the jig saw pieces with pencil.

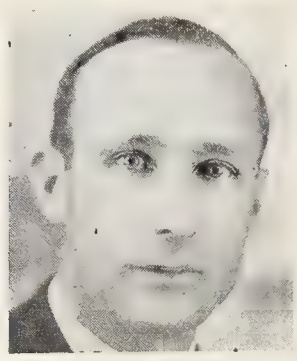
This window display (pictured above) drew plenty of attention since it was advertised as the largest jig saw puzzle in the world and was handled at practically no expense to the theatre. Here is a great ballyhoo which can be used by any one.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

After receiving his discharge from Company I, 345th Infantry, at the close of the War, Oscar H. Miller turned his attention to the theatre business and began his climb up the ladder as a projectionist. Graduating from the booth he tackled advertising and publicity, and then on to assistant manager and manager. At this writing he is manager and lessee of the Alamo Theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.



Biography data reveals that Miller has been connected with Publix, Saenger, Malco Theatres, Inc., and RKO in various capacities. He was born in Stuttgart, Ark., and received his education in the High School at Pine Bluff. He advises the Club that he would start in showbusiness again if he had to commence all over.

DRIVERLESS TRUCK SELLS "BIG CAGE" FOR TOBIN & COHEN

Henry Tobin, manager, and Al Cohen, divisional manager for the Hollywood Theatre in Charlestown, Mass., had a dandy street bally for "The Big Cage," as shown below.

The truck created much word-of-mouth comment and curiosity and sold the picture due to its novel appearance. Henry tells us that no one could see the driver as the entire truck was enclosed in signs, including the hood and the radiator.

The bally itself was made from an old model T Ford with all the levers extended so that the driver sitting almost at the top of the truck was able to operate and look outside without being seen.

Try it yourself, boys, for it sure will work as well for you as it did for Tobin and Cohen, and let's hear some more from you, Henry.

CLUB MEDAL TO SAM MILLER FOR GETTING FIVE PAGES OF ADS

When a manager can go out in these days of Bank Holidays, receiverships and other gloomy proceedings and promote five pages of newspaper cooperative ads at one whack he's certainly entitled to one of the Club medals, mythical or otherwise.

And that's just what Sam Miller, skipper of the State Theatre in Rhinelander, Wis., did a short time ago when business in his town was in a state of jitters. Need we add that the picture he promoted was "Prosperity" and the title was music to local merchants.

Congratulations to Sam for his fine piece of work and thanks to our good friend Fred S. Meyer, president of the M.P.T.O. of Wisconsin, for passing the information along.

HOME TALENT SHOW BRINGS BEVEL GOOD WEDNESDAY GROSSES

Small town operation requires ingenuity in putting out inexpensive exploitation, and L. W. Bevel, manager, Princess, Harriman, Tenn., is another of the members who gets a lot out of a few dollars. He put over an effective auto bally on "So This Is Africa" by decorating an old sedan with banners made from sign paper, and covered three surrounding towns with distributing circulars, all at a cost of $4.

"L. W." also goes for the money-getting home talent night. On Wednesday he presents a local 10-piece band which performs free of charge in exchange for the advertising. Orchestrations are provided by the theatre and music stands have been built for the musicians.

Singers, dancers, trios, and others also appear without cost, being featured with the stage band. Bevel himself acts as master of ceremonies, and injects a nice personal note into the proceedings that the patrons like and talk about. The stage show costs him $3, and the returns prove the value of the event.

SAM WAAGENAAR HAD PARIS ALL HET-UP WITH AMERICAN GAG

It seems that all of downtown Paris, France, was all het-up not long ago when an apparently bona fide page of "L'Intransigeant" made appearance on the street and in screaming headlines announced the theft of the much-stolen painting of Mona Lisa from the Louvre. Believe it or not, the newspaper's own carriers, wearing regular uniform caps, distributed the sheet, causing normally well behaved Parisians to exclaim, "What, Again!" and to start them on a general stampede to the Louvre to see for themselves the vacant spot on the wall.

Not wishing to keep readers in suspense any longer we may as well disclose that the above was a hoax perpetrated by Sam Waagenaar, described by Robert Stern in his movie column in the Paris edition of the "Chicago Tribune" as the "blond and enthusiastic Dutchman who does European publicity for M-G-M." Furthermore, Mr. Stern declared that "Sam bamboozled 'Intran,' which is ordinarily an honorable journal," by having it print a second edition, which, excepting the Mona Lisa story and nicely planted photos of John and Lionel Barrymore, had all the earmarks of a regular edition. The reverse was a full page ad on "Arsene Lupin."

MGR. WALDO EBINGER GETS KIDDIE BIZ AT STRAND IN WISCONSIN

There's no doubt about our good friend Waldo Ebinger being on his toes at the Strand in Fort Madison, Wis.

He recently started a dancing school. The pupils get their dancing lessons absolutely free. All they have to do is to sell a book of theatre tickets and this entitled them to twenty lessons given by an expert dancing instructor whom he hired on a percentage basis.

Waldo tells us that the plan is really working out quite successfully and the enrollment is steadily increasing. If any of you boys want any further information on starting one of these Clubs I'm sure he'll oblige if you write Ebinger and ask him for further details.

Another gag that he says he's working on is a Golden Glove Boxing Contest. Don't forget we've asked you for details of this. We'll be waiting for it, Waldo, so step on it.

STUTENROTH MAKES BIG TIME DISPLAYS WITH SMALL OUTLAY

We have referred before to the fact that small advertising budgets do not deter managers in putting over big time displays, and Ed Stutenroth, Holme, Holmesburg, Pa., proves it with a sock lobby on "42nd Street," as you can see from the photo below for his advance plug.

Ed built it himself, using odds and ends of lumber and reverse sides of compo board posters. The center panel was taken from a regular six, the stars mounted and flittered with mother of pearl. The end panels are composite groups of stills cut up and mounted, which were color tinted and mounted on concave frames with light shields in front.

Catch copy lines were all cut out and transparent, lighted from the rear in different colors, and the border around the center title covered with silver leaf thrown on loose to give animation. Color lamps and baby spots added to the effect.

Ed killed two birds with one stone by using lobby display in his theatre front for current advertising. Every part of the lobby display was cut to fit some portion of the front when the display was moved, so no extra expense was involved.

This is a fine example of inexpensive, effective poster work, and Stutenroth is to be commended not only for his ingenuity but for his willingness to devote the little time he had outside his regular duties to the physical labor involved.

NOW, ELMER

Our old time pal, Elmer Brient, in town from Richmond, Vuhginny, where he skippers that de luxe Loew house, is responsible for this one:

Planning a big splash on his "Gold Diggers" date, Elmer is using Andy Anderson's gag of pasting a 24 on the lobby floor. His assistant, Francis Deering, asked how the paper would be removed after the campaign. Elmer (thinking of Gert Merriam's story on Andy's stunt wherein she stated that the same ingenuity used in pasting it down would remove it) shot back:

"With a can of ingenuity, of course."

That just about ties the Gordon Theatre up 100 per cent, doesn't it? We have lots of good friends out in Middletown who are members, so remember us to them when you see any of them.

is the assistant manager at the Gordon Theatre, in Middletown, Ohio, and he's only eighteen, but he's determined to get somewhere in showbusiness and he's started off on the right foot by joining the Club, there's no denying that. Well, Bob, if your boss is too busy to send in accounts of the various campaigns you're both putting over, we elect you to do the job.

comes from Nashville, Ill., where he manages the State Theate. Seems to us we're getting lots of young blood in the Club, because Roscoe is only twenty-three years old. We'll gamble you're putting on some stuff out in Nashville that the rest of the boys wouldn't mind reading about, so how about obliging with a few accounts?

is the assistant manager at the Missouri Theatre, in St. Louis, Mo., and tells us he's wanted to join our midst for some time, but just didn't get to it. Despite your procrastination, we welcome you with open arms. We remember hearing of you when you were a little nearer to us at the Hempstead, in L. I. How do you like it out St. Louis way, J. E.? You know you have an obligation now that you're "in," so let's hear from you.

writes to us from Lagos, Nigeria, where he manages the Empire Theatre, and if that isn't far-off country we don't know what is. Listen, E. O., your brother members and readers of the Round Table Club are always tremendously interested in knowing how things are done in faraway lands, so please try to make it a point to write to us from time to time. Is that Oke with you?

holds down the fort at the Plaza, in Coventry, England, another foreign member to join the ranks of Round Tablers. We've plenty of other members in England, Syd, but you're the first to join from Coventry. As we told Gabriel (not the one with the trumpet), we're always glad to get the news of our members over the water, so will you, too, sort of look on yourself as a correspondent from your parts and keep us informed of your doings?

hails from way up in Christchurch, New Zealand, where he manages the Regent Theatre. Noel was born during the Spanish-American War, and maybe he has some of the good old fighting blood in him that's needed so much in this business of ours to keep things humming at the b. o. At any rate, the activities of our brother members in distant points are always of particular interest to the rest of us, so let's know what you're doing.

owns and manages the Lyric Theatre in Little Falls, Minn., and if that isn't enough to keep a man out of mischief we don't know what is. We agree with you, Nedry, that anyone following our pages can cash in on many ideas, but it's up to you to pass a few on so that the rest of the boys may take advantage of them. Are you on?

is another who owns and manages his own house, the Dixie Theatre, in Brooksville, Fla., and we're glad to report that he, too, has become a member of this organization. The Club is indebted to many Floridian showmen for a whole flock of interesting show-selling slants and we're going to take it for granted that Ouellette fully intends to do his share toward keeping up the good work. When the opportunity presents, boy, just jot down an account of what you're doing and shoot it in.

does the art work for the Majestic Theatre in Beloit, Wis., and we bid him welcome. Listen, Jesse, you've seen poster work, displayed on our pages, but we haven't had a thing from you yet. Are you trying to hide your light under a bushel? You know you have to work for membership in the Club, so send in your stuff and we'll do the rest. Jesse tells us he used to be with the Coronade Theatre at Rockford and the Fox Studios in Hollywood. Seems like you've had a little experience!

APPLICATION FOR MEMBERSHIP

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Please enroll me in the Club and send me my framed certificate.

(Mail to Managers' Round Table Club, 1790 Broadway, New York)

ROSS A. JONES

manages the New Fruitvale Theatre in Oakland, Cal., one of the Golden State Circuit, and we think now makes about all the managers there are in the Circuit to join the CLUB. Ross tells us he's put off joining from year to year for no good reason. Well, now that you've taken the "fatal" step, you'd better rectify your procrastination and send in an account of yourself. That's about the only way we know of squaring yourself.

owns and manages the Tower Theatre in Salt Lake City, Utah, and we hope he'll do his share to keep these pages full of show-selling ideas. Remember the old Club slogan, Earl, it's One for All and All for One. You can't let us down on that one. So step on the gas and let's go.

operates the Padre Theatre in San Jose, Cal. The land of sunshine and roses, and it's a toss up whether we have more members in California or New York. Maybe Frank's application will tip the scale in favor of his state. Give our regards to the rest of the Round Tablers in San Jose and be a boy scout and do your good deed by writing to us.

is located up in Rochester, N. Y., where he manages the Liberty Theatre, and the Welcome sign is also out for this newly elected Round Tabler. Now that your application has been duly recorded, Sam, get the good old Club spirit intrenched in your mind and put your shoulder to the wheel of progress.

has the job of managing the Mid City Theatre in Chicago and World's Fair or no Fair, Jack, we'll expect you to contribute to these pages now that you're a full-fledged member, so hop to it and let's see what you've been doing to keep the folks from visiting the Streets of Paris and coming to see the flickers instead.

assists Charlie Bassin at the Oriental Theatre in Mattapan, Mass., and from what Charlie tells us, we can and do expect big things from Leo. With this enterprising team up there at the Oriental, the rest of you members had better look to your laurels. What say, Leo?

manages the Tivoli Theatre in Kansas City, Mo., and according to his application he is only twenty-three. Well, Ed, you sure have your hands full keeping the shekels coming into the b. o., so you'd better write and let us know how you manage to keep things humming.

hails from the RKO Chester Theatre, West Bronx, N. Y., and we're glad to acknowledge his application for membership in the Round Table Club. Now that you're on the active list of contributors, Arthur, let's see what you can do to help keep these pages full of interesting slants on what's going on in showbusiness. What was that last stunt you used to swell the box office receipts? Shoot along an account of it.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 183.—(A) What allowance should be made in fusing above normal current requirements on secondary side of motor generator set? (B) Is such excess permissible? (C) For purpose of calculating fuse capacity for primary side of motor-generator set, how would you proceed if only secondary amperage is shown by ammeter? (D) To obtain accurate results in preceding query what would have to be done? (E) Suppose you had a 60-volt arc and a 110-volt generator. Voltage reduced by resistance. Current seven cents per KWH. Amperage 70. What is the cost of voltage reduction per hour of operation?

Answer to Question No. 176

Question No. 176 was: "(A) In various batteries, which is the negative and which the positive elements? (B) How high would it be possible to build voltage by means of ordinary dry cell batteries? (C) How much amperage might be obtained from a battery of wet or dry cells?

I was agreeably surprised at the many really excellent answers. Those acceptable came from Dale Danielson; C. Rau and S. Evans; G. E. Doe; L. Van Buskirk; B. Doe; J. Wentworth; T. Van Vaulkenburg; H. Edwards; H. True; A. Bailey; H. B. Coates; O. Allbright; R. Geddings; F. F. Franks; L. F. Evans; D. U. Grainger; D. L. Dillon; H. C. Lake; E. W. Warner; H. D. Schofield; B. L. Blinkendorfer; O. L. Evans; M. R. Davis; J. Hickey; H. Rogers; S. Mandel; G. Tinlin; R. Geddings; D. Casey and L. Casey; D. V. Peterson and M. G. Greig; T. H. and J. N. Wilson; R. D. Lynn and L. G. Lamb; C. D. Carmody, G. Johnson and N. T. Kane; M. L. George and R. Singleton; S. F. and W. Love; L. Hutch and D. Goldberg; L. Summers and D. M. Banks; C. Reed, D. Sarecky and A. L. Berry; S. Maybe and R. D. Konley; C. Cummings and T. Kelley; L. Jones and B. L. Banning; H. R. Baldwin and W. T. Soare; P. L. Wheeler, M. Scully and A. L. Chambers; D. Holler and D. R. Peters; J. H. Rathburn and D. Little; B. Diglah and P. Jackson, O. L. Daris and M. Simms; A. Breaston and H. Haber; R. Wheeler and R. Suler; P. L. Jensen and A. Ilks; L. Hendershot and R. Rubin; L. M. Oglesby and Son; D. Emmerson; P. L. Danby; E. Harlor and G. Garrison; E. Rymer and B. L. Tanner; R. S. Patterson and L. H. Danville; T. S. Raymond; G. Farmann; M. Spencer and D. T. Arlen; D. L. Mason and J. T. Ballinger; D. L. Howard; G. Wayne and L. D. Stellegos; T. N. Williams and R. S. Allen; E. M. Griffin and L. C. Abrams; D. L. Sinklow; C. H. Blaum; F. D. Hess.

(A) There were many excellent and somewhat diversified answers to this section. I believe Brother Van Vaulkenburg did a bit the best with it. He says: "The positive element of a battery cell of any sort is or should be marked with a plus sign; the negative element with a minus (—) sign. The exact composition of each element varies with different types and makes of storage batteries. In an ordinary wet cell it is copper and zinc. In a dry cell it usually is the same, though some manufacturers vary this. In a storage battery the metal usually employed for both plates is lead, though there are notable exceptions, as in the case of the Edison storage batteries, the plate composition of which is unknown to me."

(B) J. H. Rathburn and D. Little answer thus: "If cost, inconvenience, storage space and insulation requirements be disregarded, there is no limit, since each cell added in series would raise the voltage from one to one and one-half volts. However, in practice the limit is low because of one or more of the before named requirements."

(C) One hundred and ninety-three replied substantially as follows: "As many amperes as may be desired by connecting cells in parallel, each cell adding its capacity to the total."

More Light on Question No. 150

Section C of Bluebook School Question No. 150 was, "Should a circuit five-tenths of a mile long be attached to a one-volt battery, same completely insulated from earth and from each other, would the circuit show one volt pressure at any point in its length?" In answering that, Hutch and Goldberg said that with only the very small circuit used by a voltmeter, while theoretically there would be a drop, they doubted if for practical purposes it would exist.

In commenting upon this answer I said I was not myself quite certain and had been unable to dig out any dope bearing upon such a proposition. I invited comments from correspondents. To date several have been received, from which number I have selected one by a prominent New York projectionist, who says:

"You say you have been unable to get data covering this question exactly. To start with, to me it is difficult to picture voltage without amperage or resistance somehow being present. That is to say, there is no pressure exerted unless there be some sort of resistance. I am not myself sure about this and am too busy with other matters to really look the matter up thoroughly.

"Suppose we change the problem to make it a bit easier to show that most of the voltage should be present in the circuit. Let us add amperage so as to have some sort of problem to work on, say one one-thousandth of an ampere, for example. I suggest this infinitesimal amount for the reason that it would cause very slight voltage drop.

"In your question you only mention the circuit length (five-tenths of a mile), not giving wire diameter. In order to make a problem we must know size of wire, which I will assume to be No. 18, B. & S. gauge. We then would have a total of 5,280 feet of No. 18 wire. In Hawkins Electrical Guide, page 744, and following pages, the resistance of commercial copper wire is given as 10.8 ohms per mil foot. Also there is an example illustrating voltage drop calculation caused by any definite length of wire, as follows:

"With this as our example we should be able to put things together and secure the voltage drop of this particular circuit. We then have $$\text{Volts} = \frac{1/1000 \times 5280 \times 10.8}{1624} = .035 + \text{of a volt drop.}$$

"We thus see that we have only lost .035 + of a volt, so that the actual voltage would be .964 + of a volt if the impressed voltage be one volt. But if we increase the wire size we decrease the voltage drop, hence would have a still higher voltage reading at any point at which the measurement be made. However, no matter what changes be made there will be a voltage drop so long as any amperage flows. However true this may be technically, we may safely say, as Hutch and Goldberg have said, that the voltage reading under the conditions (almost imperceptible amperage) would be essentially the same as full voltage—one volt.

"By the way, I almost overlooked the fact that the mil foot resistance is figured at 75 degrees Fahrenheit, therefore any change in temperature would alter results. Ouch!"

I left the wire diameter out purposely, wanting to see just what effect others might believe wire size would have on such a problem. What this good brother says is all correct theoretically (though he omitted voltmeter and battery resistance).

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified.

THEATRE SUPPLY DEALERS CONVENTION FEATURES LATEST REFINEMENTS

Scores of Manufacturers Display Newest Improvements for Theatres

CHICAGO, July 28, 1933.—The Third Annual Convention of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association opened its sessions today at the Stevens Hotel. Enthusiastic over the remarkable demonstrations of the latest developments in theatre equipment by the country's leading manufacturers, Association members are taking full advantage of the opportunity to study the new achievements designed to improve conditions at the good old institution dear to every exhibitor . . . "the box-office."

The manufacturers' exhibits and demonstrations of new equipment tell a vivid story of scientific progress, so important to the wideawake exhibitor. Association members are making careful surveys and gathering all available data to pass on to their exhibitor customers the first-hand information on what is happening in the equipment field.

The convention is in every sense of the word the "World's Fair" of the motion picture equipment field. The exhibitor can look forward to truly outstanding developments in equipment improvement when the enthusiastic supply dealers return to their territories. Every manufacturer of importance has contributed to the demonstration at this significant convention.

AFTER all, a merchant has only his knowledge to offer—he must know his business in order to pick out a stock of dependable goods. Now that I am setting up as a merchant of projection apparatus I offer my know-how as the most important item in my stock.

SEVENTEEN YEARS CHIEF WITH PARAMOUNT-PUBLIX BALABAN & KATZ

The projection supervisor of a chain of theatres that maintains quality standards second to none must know projection machinery. He must know all the tricks of the trade. All projection developments come to him for test, acceptance or rejection. He does research work to find better methods. He builds models, experiments, improves. His constant aim is highest quality projection.

FINEST EQUIPMENT OF LEADING MANUFACTURERS

I didn't hold that job for seventeen years because my aunt married Somebody's brother-in-law. I base my bid for your business on the quality of projection you have seen in the Paramount-Publix Balaban & Katz theatres. Your projection will be of equal quality if you use the equipment I offer. Out of my full line I will select what best fits your individual needs. And because I have learned economy as well as quality, you will not be overcharged.

MACHINES THAT DELIVER: REPAIRS JUST LIKE NEW

I will sell you the projector my seasoned judgment honestly tells me will give you shows that make the most money. I will offer you only accessories which my experience assures me will be profitable to you. I will rebuild or repair your projection and sound equipment thoroughly and for reasonable charges. I will deliver exactly when promised, or sooner, so that "The Show Will Go On."

Observations

¶ Holding its third convention as this issue of BETTER THEATRES is published, the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association commends itself to the friendly attention of motion picture theatre owners and managers throughout the continent. Those institutions which are the sources of the supplies of operation and maintenance in an industry, are too intimately allied with the methods and prosperity of that industry to be considered otherwise than as a part of it, and the theatre equipment companies meeting in Chicago July 28 for a four-day discussion of their aims, seem to us of the very spirit which has come into the industry which they serve.

We hope we are right in interpreting this convention as another expression of the broader democracy in the motion picture industry as well as throughout business in general. If the members of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association are combined for the purposes of co-operation, but not of domination, then their organization conforms perfectly to the new style in industrial combines.

Independence, in fact, may often be better served by collective action than by individual struggle. The group gives the member the resources of size. He becomes, as it were, big enough to be independent. But he does need to secure that independence further by a wary insistence that the group be merely a co-operative association and not a corporate entity independent of him. So often in business that has happened: The group, given the strength of its members, so grew in the administration of the affairs of each that it dominated all. Thus in time it became itself a business property of a kind inviting the shrewd interest of the bitterest foes of independence.

But we are assured by the career of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association that it has been organized on a basis which properly safe-guards the individual interests of each member, giving him a broader access to his market without, however, taking from him his own immediate contact with that market, and without administrative and financial dictation. That is combination in the best sense—in today's sense. Our sincere best wishes go to this great group of theatre equipment companies in the splendid co-operative effort they are making.

¶ The adage is familiar enough: "There's nothing new under the sun." But this isn't an age in which one can put much faith in it. To the contrary, we nowadays expect something new all the time, and are so confident of miracles that we are gullible. There's nothing very impressive about the Drive-In theatre, the Camden venture described in the last issue, but it certainly seemed to warrant identification as the first of its kind. But it isn't, as witness this prompt response from Mr. E. M. Scribner, chief projectionist of the Board of Trade "Open Air Theatre" in Schoharie, N. Y.:

"In 1915, Perry E. Taylor, then and now mayor of Schoharie, conceived the idea of open air movies as entertainment, not only for local people but for the outlying districts as well. Those were the days of the open car. These cars were placed so that a few rows of chairs were available for those not desiring to remain in their cars.

"The screen was raised high so that all would have a clear view of it. The projection equipment was mounted in a small canvas-covered wood frame booth. This arrangement was used for about 15 weeks through the summer months on Thursday evenings. Each year the entertainment gained in popularity. We soon found as years went by that the people would rather sit on chairs to view the pictures than to remain in their autos."

Thus, as Mr. Scribner indicates, the areas for cars on either side of the seating space have been gradually diminished to make room for more chairs. The performance takes place in front of the court house, with the screen stretched across two ornamental lamp posts, patrons in cars or chairs in the street, and the projection booth on the opposite sidewalk. But let Mr. Scribner further disillusion us:

"Three years ago we inaugurated for the first time in this country or any other, open air talking pictures. We had been told that we would have to place the equipment in a large truck or in a permanently constructed booth. This was out of the question. Then we learned that the manufacturer of our amplifier made a sound head. Mr. Weber of the Weber Machine Corporation, the manufacturer, said he had never heard of open air talkies, but that he would send us a head on trial. It worked, and we are now in our third year."

And so you never can tell about these originals.—G. S.

CONSTRUCTING THEATRE ADVERTISING

1. Showmanship in Typography

Introducing a series on printing and lay-out methods for those who prepare motion picture theatre advertising

By GEORGE SCHUTZ

EFFECTIVE advertising of the theatre, its current and coming programs, is so closely associated with the commercial success of show-business that in all its dialect advertising is traditionally the native tongue of the showman.

The word commonly used to indicate all forms of theatre advertising is exploitation, and when the average person of the theatre thinks of himself as a showman, he is thinking of his ability to attract patronage to the theatre by some means of exploitation. He may be the manager of a theatre owned by another, or he may be the owner in active charge, and as such his duties are those of proprietorship, involving both business and technical functions of great importance. Yet he is wont to be most conscious of his function as a showman, which is to say, as a good exploitation man.

Exploitation, of course, is just another name for selling, and it covers whatever methods may be adopted to sell. The motion picture theatre in its exploitation uses street ballyhoos, displays, trailers, outdoor posters, handbills, newspaper advertisements, publicity articles in periodicals and occasionally one or two other devices. Though not exclusively, commonly all these devices involve use of the printed word, while that most generally and regularly employed is the newspaper advertisement. The series of discussions and demonstrations of the physical construction of theatre advertising to which this article is an introduction, will therefore be concerned preeminently with theatre advertising in newspapers.

Much of what is said, however, will apply to all printed forms of exploitation, while supplementary to the main body of the series will be a discussion of these other forms, particularly with reference to those elements which call for separate consideration. But unless otherwise specified, the word advertising in this series shall mean newspaper advertising. The term theatre advertising of course shall signify motion picture theatre advertising.

THE "GOODS" THE THEATRE SELLS

THERE ARE substantial reasons for distinguishing the advertising of motion picture theatres from that of other commercial enterprises. It is in appreciating these reasons, moreover, that we realize fundamental principles governing our method.

For the function of the motion picture theatre is really quite unique. In one respect as a commercial institution it resembles a store, in another it has natural associations with other amusement enterprises. A store, of course, is a permanently conducted business institution definitely identified in its community as a constant source of a certain class of goods. But so, characteristically, is the motion picture theatre. The store, however, sells material goods to be consumed later and elsewhere. Now an amusement park may also be as permanently identified with a form of entertainment, but it does not serve the interests of the theatre. And a stage theatre is identified with the dramatic performance it offers solely as an address. Without extending the process of comparison and contrast to unnecssary lengths, let us attempt to state the nature of the motion picture theatre as a business enterprise:

The motion picture theatre is characteristically a permanent business institution serving a community as a constant source of psychological experiences, mainly dramatic, always essentially emotional.

From this distinctive position of the motion picture theatre, its advertising problems derive distinction, suggesting considerations not necessarily involved in the advertising of other enterprises and therefore calling for a method pretty much their own. It doesn't do to place an abiding faith in the principles confidently and sweepingly laid down in books on advertising in general. They cannot be counted on to apply to such a unique purpose as that of merchandising psychological experiences as though they were a commodity, which, as we have seen, is really what the motion picture theatre does. It sells goods intangible, restricted as to kind but infinitely varied as to appeal, consumable only on the premises during a fixed brief period of time, "goods" purely psychological and predominantly valued according to immediate emotional interests. Of such is each specific program. But the theatre has also itself to sell as a source of a class of "goods," at any time it may be desired, without direct reference to a particular fabrication.

Naturally the preparation of advertising that serves this specialized, dual purpose is indeed a matter of copy. Showmanship expresses itself fundamentally in what it selects to say, and how it says it. But it is a matter of typography, too—of type styles, illustrations, ornamentation and arrangement. For an advertisement has a physical personality. And why should this not be adapted to what is being sold and to those it is being sold to? "Looks" count for much, not only attracting the eye (for a layout totally out of spirit with the message can do that), but entering into the emotional scheme of the sales argument as well.

THE EFFECT OF TYPOGRAPHY

TO SHOW the relationship of the physical structure of advertising to the message, let us suppose your theatre is located in a community of factory workers and that tomorrow's program is to feature a drama of metropolitan life—Big Business, politics, love on the sixty-eighth floor. We should not presume to say here what elements of the drama—what appeals—you should choose to sell. As a showman who knows his customers, you will choose the ideas and words that will interest them. We are concerned here only with the possibility of making the physical structure of your advertisement picture those appeals, thereby re-enforcing your message.

JEAN HERSHOLT
EXTRA!

Another case of star domination—but here the player, long a star of the stage, was unknown to the screen theatre patron. The copy therefore "sells" her recognized talent, and the typography catches that spirit.

The extent to which such typographical expression may be possible depends initially upon the amount of space available. But inasmuch as we are referring to an opening advertisement, we may properly assume that space of ample dimensions has been purchased. How then may the typography be adapted to the message in both spirit and form?

Assuming your community of factory workers to be a typical one, we may expect that you would select type that is extremely easy to read, that is vivid, "swift" and quite "noisy." Your copy is likely to be descriptive and therefore in relatively large quantity, in which case, to avoid monotony and to create an impression of emotional variety, you would want to "break up" the mass of the advertisement into paragraphs of several different styles. The general pattern would conform to the mechanical requirements thus laid down, rather than to any need for artistic effect. It is of course always better to obtain a pleasing balance of elements, for otherwise the very appearance of the advertisement may repel by creating a sense of confusion. But in this instance you are supremely interested in creating above all else a sense of emotional variety and daring "punch."

Now in a community consisting in the residences of prosperous merchants, business executives and professional people, your message on the same picture would be quite different. Especially would it be different in tone. Even if you thought them responsive to a certain amount of sensationalism (and who isn't, these days?), you probably would not want to shout at them in the boldest terms. Many of the ideas selected for appeal to the industrial community probably would be effective in this latter situation, but the personality of your advertising had better be more refined—firm, but quieter, simpler, graceful rather than "racy" in type, patterned to create an impression of clear, intelligent conviction, of sincerity.

FACTORS IN SELLING THE THEATRE

THESE VERY considerations suggest one of the things that determine the institutional character of your advertising. Yo do not want your theatre to seem out of place in your community. To the contrary it is important that it be an intimate part of your community, and this means that everything about it should be as much in harmony with the temperament, background, general interests of the people in your drawing area as possible. Pictures come and go, but your theatre stays right there in your community, and so your advertising should reflect the constant significance of your property locally, as well as attempt to "bring them in" for this week's shows.

The other institutional factor in your advertising is identification. That is, in most situations it is important to adopt certain devices which become characteristic of your advertising and identify it at a glance as representing your theatre. Such devices can be introduced into the copy itself. But by its very nature, identification at a glance calls for physical characteristics readily apparent, and it is therefore essentially a matter of typography.

Thus institutionally also the purpose of theatre advertising may be importantly served by its physical structure. By contributing to its tone, the typography can aid in adapting the message to the character of your community. By providing trademarks and other tags, it can consistently identify the theatre as a permanent source of a certain class of entertainment.

While it is the primary purpose of this group of articles to give those who prepare theatre advertising a knowledge of printing, engraving, type selection and layout technique that will permit them greater facility in their work, these mechanical processes cannot be separated from their ultimate purpose, which is to create effective theatre advertising. We therefore have approached them as parts of the whole typographical method, which in turn is a part of the entire advertising method advised by the nature of the motion picture theatre.

The whole business is psychological—in copy, of course, but in typography, too. How that is true, and how that truth may be applied, will develop as the mechanical processes involved in advertising, and specific problems of typography, are discussed in the articles to follow.

Two of the happiest hours of your life!
—if you read and believe this message!
TOMORROW, we present a picture so unusual, so different, we hardly know how to advertise it! Two of the world's finest actors are in it, yet you may never have seen them; the picture is one continuous uproar of laughs, yet the title sounds like heavy-drama! It is the famous Theatre Guild play—yet it is not high-brow—it's fun for everybody —all about a jealous husband and a wife who had to have a new romance every Spring—and he knew it!

MOTION PICTURES BETWEEN TRAINS

The 181-seat Terminal theatre which adds screen entertainment to the facilities of Cincinnati's new union depot

MOTION PICTURE entertainment as handy as the souvenir stand and lunch counter for travellers waiting for trains is among the services provided by the new Union Passenger Terminal in Cincinnati, a $43,000,000 structure wherein that Ohio city's railroad traffic now is centered. The idea may be said to be Europe's rather than America's. In Paris similar provisions have been made for the travelling public. There, however, the programs are devoted principally to newsreels. That was the original intention in Cincinnati, but the policy has since been modified to include second-run features. This, of course, raises the question as to how well adapted pictures of the length of a feature may be to the time available to the average person waiting for a train, with the ultimate answer probably awaiting a substantial period of operation.

The little theatre, seating but 181 and called the Terminal (though a name would seem to be scarcely necessary), is located at the end of row of stands and shops extending across the entrance side of the concourse. The architects for the entire station project were Fellheimer & Wagner of New York. (For the various general dimensions see floor plan of theatre on page 11.)

The theatre is entered from the concourse through a tiny lobby of its own, with the box office set in the wall opposite the doors. To the immediate right of the box office is another set of doors leading directly to the auditorium. The patron buys, not a pasteboard ticket, but a metal token, and this when dropped into a slot operates a turnstile at the auditorium entrance-way.

The theatre departs a trifle from the simple, utilitarian modernism of the station architecture, but such ornamentation as has been added has been introduced merely to create a sense of comfort and warmth. The theatre too is architecturally modern and simple. It is separated from the station proper by terra cotta divisional walls.

The walls of both the lobby and the auditorium are of marble. The lobby has a marble floor as well. The cement floor of the auditorium is entirely carpeted, partly for acoustic reasons. The walls of the auditorium have a marble wainsot and are surfaced above in fabrikoid laid on plaster, while the ceiling is of acoustic plaster spread in a simple ornamental pattern. The lobby ceiling is likewise done in plaster.

The projection room is located at the middle (see floor plan) of the rear area and is slightly elevated. It is equipped with two Simplex-Acme unit sound projectors and the usual accessory equipment. The projection room is structurally isolated from the remainder of the theatre by a two-foot fireproof wall, while projection is through ports shielded with optical glass. The projection throw is 42 feet, with only a slight angle. The screen platform opening just adequately accommodates a screen 10 feet wide and 8 feet high. A close-in curtain is operated by the projectionist.

The theatre has its own air conditioning plant, consisting in a unit duct system (Surocco) for the transmission of fresh clean air properly humidified, cooled in summer, heated in winter. The air conditioning machinery and intake are located three floors above the auditorium.

The Terminal is operated by Willis Vance, who has a theatre in Latonia, Ky.

ORGANIZING A MAINTENANCE SYSTEM

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

The third article of a series on management and maintenance, dealing with inspection, repairs and replacements

PROPER, EFFICIENT and progressive maintenance of any theatre is the outgrowth of the needs of that theatre as determined by its patronage, its neighborhood, its picture policy, its box office and carefully planned inspections. Many elements enter into intelligent maintenance and all must be carefully considered before maintenance assumes its proper place and part in our business.

Urgency of Proper Inspection

To know what is needed in your theatre is, of course, the beginning. To know what is needed is most easily determined by careful and detailed inspection. There is some hazard in even using the word inspection, because to many managers and others it means only a routine walking about. Such is not an inspection.

To inspect and examine carefully the detailed conditions of your theatre requires intelligence, energy and the fullest use of your power of observation. Planning inspection trips requires a systematic and orderly procedure; a search for definite conditions which need attention. One whole day devoted to a very thorough check-up on conditions is the wrong way to begin. In this way the inspection becomes a tedious, tiring and dirty job far out of proportion to its real importance. Under such circumstances, generally days, weeks and possibly months will lapse before energy enough is accumulated to repeat the inspection.

People procrastinate and shy away from doing regularly those things which do not interest them. Many times interest becomes submerged or swamped in tiring details and physical effort. Therefore, by removing the tiring details and some of the physical exertion by covering only portions of your theatre at any one time, and limiting that time to, say, one hour, the results will be frequent, brief and worth-while tours to parts of your theatre.

Inspections will not in themselves improve the conditions or the maintenance of a theatre. Unless prompt action is taken based upon the inspection, the conditions tend to grow worse as such action is delayed. Consequently inspections should be made at frequent intervals. Don't take somebody's word for it that things are in a satisfactory condition. Go and see the condition for yourself. This type of supervision is expected and is one of the reasons for your being the manager.

If inspections are to be frequent and of short duration the entire theatre cannot be covered at each inspection. That portion of the theatre or equipment which is inspected should be very thoroughly inspected; thoroughness is all that makes inspections worth while.

FOLLOWING AN INSPECTION SCHEDULE

BELOW IS a schedule for one month which you might make an effort to follow at once. See for yourself if it brings you into closer touch with your property. Limit these inspections to one hour.

The portions of the theatre which are open to the public should be inspected every day. At least once each week by the manager and the other days such inspections might be required of one of your best employees. Here is a schedule for a month (which I have indicated as August, 1933):

Tuesday, August 1—EXTERIOR FRONT

Front entrance and exit doors—Condition, door check, push plates, push bars, door stops. Are doors used for display purposes?

Transomes over doors—Are they used for displays?

Poster frames—Condition of paint. General type. Would they be more attractive if you had an artist change the type or color of mats? Would you mask over the entire frame with one cut from wall board and decorated in appealing color or a modern or atmospheric design? (For frames that have become dingy, a good grade of bronze or gold powder mixed with a good grade of outside spar varnish is a very inexpensive way to freshen them up.) Are the posters at the right height to attract attention? Are stills displayed? If so, are they approximately at eye level? Can they be examined with ease by the person of average height?

The Marquee—Roof, condition of paint, lamps, dead sockets, soffit lights, condition of letters of attraction signs. Are tie rods showing any signs of loosening from wall? Does the roof drain properly or does water remain on it after a rain storm? Is the sign flasher properly protected from the weather?

Vertical (name) sign—Condition of paint, condition of wall anchors and supports. Lamps, dead sockets in sign at right height to give you maximum, long-range visibility? Is your front masked by shade trees?

Front of building—Is it clean or dirty? Can it be cleaned inexpensively? What would it mean to your theatre if you had it cleaned?

Is the front of your building flood lighted? If it is, are you getting the most pleasing effect? Using colors in the flood lights?

Are there any unsightly wires or incoming electric services that might be removed?

Are there windows in the front of theatre? Are they clean? Do they add or detract from the appearance of the building?

What is the general condition of the masonry. Does it show signs of deteriorating? Does it need pointing up? Is the cornice coping or cap stones on the front wall or parapet above the roof line safe and secure? Is there any chance that wind or storm might loosen them?

Do you notice any cracks in the front wall? Find out what causes them. If you don't know consult others. Observe them at each inspection to see whether they become worse.

If an inspection has been made after this fashion, it has required the manager to go to the street, and from all angles examine the front of his theatre. He has visited the roof of the marquee and possibly climbed the vertical sign; also visited the theatre roof. Such an inspection has been far from routine and has required intelligent application.

The inspection of the exterior front of the theatre has been especially chosen to expand after the above manner. Most people would tell you that there is not much to inspect on the front of the theatre. The following inspections may be as completely developed by you during the process of the inspection.

Wednesday, August 2—Public lobbies, rooms and foyers.

Thursday, August 3—Boiler room and basement.

Friday, August 4—Back stage, especially including the gridiron, property and electricians' rooms; all dressing rooms.

Saturday and Sunday—No inspections.

Monday, August 7—Fire equipment, exit and fire escapes.

Tuesday, August 8—Projection room.

Wednesday, August 9—Roof of theatre; down spouts and gutters; condition of flashing on parapet.

Thursday, August 10—All toilets and service closets.

Friday, August 11—Ventilating equipment, including pump, fans, motors.

Monday, August 14—Switchboards, panel boards and fuse boxes.

Tuesday, August 15—Draperies, curtains, hanging banners, pictures.

Wednesday, August 16—Furniture and carpets.

Thursday, August 17—Theatre seats.

Friday, August 18—Exterior side walls, parapet walls, alleys, courts and exit area ways.

Monday, August 24—Janitor force, especially watch and check for thoroughness in their work. Note the details of their assignments, quantities of materials used.

Tuesday, August 22—Study your front house personnel. Are they the right types, have they the right attitude towards service to the public? Note condition of uniforms.

Wednesday, August 23—Study the other miscellaneous employees. Are they necessary? Are they so organized that they are directly under some reliable supervision?

Thursday, August 24—Lighting fixtures inside theatre. Are they clean? Are you using the right or most effective types of lamps? Are color, wattage and voltage correct?

Friday, August 25—Inspect for signs of vermin, mice or rats. If you have an organ be sure to check the organ lofts. Don't wait to have such conditions called to your attention.

Monday, August 28—Inside walls, proscenium arch, ceiling. Cleanliness, cracks and causes, condition of paint. Can walls or parts of them be cleaned economically?

Tuesday, August 29—Condition of steppings, aisle lights, all safety conditions generally. Panic bolts and exit lights, emergency lighting system.

Wednesday, August 30—Above false or hanging ceilings, in plenum chambers, undeveloped spaces under lobbies or main floors, any hidden spots that might collect rubbish or trash. That is a fire hazard.

Thursday, August 31—Check memoranda of the entire month's inspections and follow up to see that conditions within your power were corrected, and other conditions of importance were reported to the owner should you not be an owner-manager. Summarize—study results, follow up.

MEMORANDA OF INSPECTION TRIPS

A MEMORANDUM should be made of each inspection trip. Your action on each condition should be noted, with proper follow up date. If this is done carefully, your memoranda and notes, when permanently filed, become a most valuable history of the physical condition of your theatre. Such notes will be of aid to you in intelligently letting out work when it is finally decided to go ahead with repairs or alterations. This inspection file becomes most valuable when making plans for a reopening or for a definite program of reconditioning or improvement.

The most important result of such inspection is that you become aware of conditions before breaks or accidents occur. You are then able to apply profitably the policy of "a stitch in time saves nine." This policy is the cheapest in the long run; the handling of emergency repairs is always costly.

There is another very important and indirect result of such inspections. Your employees will be quick to reflect your attention to details. The employees will become more alert to the physical conditions about them.

MAKING REPAIRS AND REPLACEMENTS

WHEN YOU HAVE definitely decided upon alterations, or repairs, use local labor. Many managers seem to think that mechanical labor required about a theatre must be highly specialized. This is only true for part of your projection equipment, your sound equipment, and part of your stage equipment. Briefly, in practically every case you will be able to locate local labor to make repairs. Don't underestimate the skill of local or small-town mechanics, there are many very capable workmen available to aid you. There can be no question but that the use of local labor is a good-will builder.

When it becomes necessary for you to consider the replacement of any of your equipment, keep in mind that it falls in one of two classes, specialized or standard. Your market for specialized equipment, that equipment developed especially for and peculiar to the theatre business, is of course limited to the manufacturers or jobbers of such equipment. For this market use current issues and Buyers Numbers of BETTER THEATRES.

When other equipment—equipment which also has utility in other lines of business, such as pipes, fittings, plumbing fixtures, pumps, etc.—is required, check the entire commercial and industrial field to make sure that the grade, quality, price and type is most desirable. In most every town there is an architect, and most architects have a recent set of Sweet's Catalogue File. It is advisable for you to visit the architect's office and examine these books, for in this way you will be able to make your selection of standard equipment from the products of the best recognized manufacturers in the country. After making your selection you will be able to obtain such equipment through a local contractor.

GETTING EXPERT ADVICE LOCALLY

WHILE SPEAKING of architects it is excellent practice to consult with them on any major or minor alterations that may be contemplated. Their fee is generally reasonable and their work has a professional touch that is seldom found in a job done by merely skilled labor.

Before starting maintenance work that is going to run into an appreciable amount of money, gather all the information and advice possible from all sources and check against the actual job conditions. In doing so be sure to consider recent materials and equipment on the market.

If your problem is basically technical and your theatre is located near some technical institution, many times you can obtain the most valuable advice and assistance from the professors or instructors there. Contact such people—it will often prove very much worth while.

In a case where your problem is redecorating and the creation of a new color scheme, utilize possible contacts with teachers of art or design—their advice might help you. There are many fine and skilled decorators, but few painters have any sense of color tone or value in combination. Color in decoration is one of the most pleas-

HOW I CHART MY CURRENT COSTS

By JOHN W. CREAMER
MANAGER, FOX WALDO THEATRE, KANSAS CITY, MO.

IF A MANAGER is undertaking to cut down on the current consumption in his theatre, my idea is that he should go at it in a systematic manner. It is all very well to say that we will turn off these lights earlier, and those lights on a little later, but in most cases you will have no definite understanding of what has been accomplished other than perhaps a reduced statement from the light company.

I firmly believe that each situation should keep on paper a month-to-month analysis of the electric current consumed. By that I mean we should show separately the current measured by each meter, rather than depend on a dollars-and-cents reduction as given by the light company.

In one house I recently had five different meters, two for power and three for lights. In another house in that same city I had two light meters and one power meter. I kept a record from month to month, making a graph showing just how many kilowatt-hours each meter was measuring. I had an accurate picture in front of me at all times as to just where we were cutting or increasing consumption.

A graph will show you where additional cuts should be made. It will also show immediately any increase in consumption, which increase can be investigated and cut down if not found to be justified. Meters on exit circuits should show practically the same consumption from month to month. Of course there are some instances where this might be changed, such as relamping with larger bulbs, or not turning the circuit off at the proper time.

I also keep a dollars-and-cents record of each individual meter. This record shows the previous reading of the meter, the present reading, also the kwh. consumption and the multiplying constant (if there is one), then the charge for the current plus the government tax, and the total. By the use of the record I can see from month to month just how much money I am saving.

These month-to-month graphs can also be kept for such affairs as total admissions, matinee business, night business, newspaper space, supplies and other fixed charges. Their value to me is that they allow me to see, quickly and at a glance, information that cannot be arrived at in any other manner except the troublesome task of going through books and records.

REMODELING THE THEATRE INTERIOR

By S. CHARLES LEE

ANOTHER important step in the remodeling program is the treatment of foyers. In the previous article we discussed the front of the theatre. Now we begin our survey of the interior.

The immediate foyer area, or lobby, must be so treated as to present a flash to the patron passing directly into the auditorium, but so as to bear scrutiny by patrons forced to wait for seats. It is usually desirable to take out everything that the steady patron will remember from the old scheme and change the character of the lobby from one style to another. Let us study Figures 1 and 2, which are photographs of the same lobby the second one showing the room after retreatment. The first photograph discloses classic architecture with a Doric column effect and pseudo-classic mouldings. The original color was olive gray, and the appearance on entering was depressing to say the least.

Now note the change in this lobby as shown in Figure 2. The general scheme has become gold and black. The walls are treated in a cream-gold, two-tone effect, and the decoration on the ceiling is carried out in bright blue, silver and other modern colors. The Doric column is covered with wood detail, and the drinking fountain has become a spot of beauty instead of an eyesore. The carpet is of a sand-coral color with a black border. Note the painted treatment on the old glass panels to the left, and the modern treatment of the wood division bars. The lighting trough at the top has been supplemented with modernistic, blasted glass having colored lights behind. The entire appearance now is one of life—of entertainment. The cost of treating a lobby as here remodeled would be today about as follows:

Carpentry	$300.00
Glass	100.00
Painting and decorating	400.00
Light fixtures	50.00
Drinking fountain	40.00
Tile work	50.00
Total	$940.00

A simpler treatment for a smaller theatre with a lobby not unlike that noted above and existing in many theatres today, is indicated in Figure 4. The original is shown in Figure 3. This lobby could be revamped as shown in Figure 4 at a cost of about $400, and that amount of money would thus turn a junk-shop into a theatre.

Figure 5 is a sketch of a simple modern treatment for the first and second mezzanine foyers that can be adapted to most theatres. The forms are simple and clean-cut, but still maintain spots of interest and color.

Possible ways of effectively changing the character of the auditorium are many, and only some are indicated by the sketches shown here. Let us first look at Figures 6 and 7, which indicate the front and side wall of what is frequently called a theatre auditorium. It is, however, merely four walls treated in such a way as to take the sense of humor out of any audience and make a hot picture cold. Submitted by way of bettering conditions are three sketches (Figures 8, 9 and 10). Each shows what might be done at a cost of from one to two

THE BUILDING THAT SELLS THE SHOW

An EDITORIAL

FIRST WE ARE going to tell a story. An absurd little yarn. Absurd because it is true, because the condition it refers to is absurd.

Not so long ago a leading producer was contracting for the exhibition of a very promising special release and in doing so, was attempting to profit by its experience with a previous production of similar character. It was the latter picture that had created a definite revival of interest in this particular type, and as much success was expected of the newer one.

The earlier picture had been commonly held over for the second week, occasionally longer, with the gross remaining above the house average. Yet before the gross fell to the house average, it would frequently be pulled, and regular bookings resumed. The producer was determined to assure the newer production a better chance.

Specifically, the new contracts were to insist that the contracting theatre continue the run until the intake fell to the house average. And further to make sure of all possible revenue, an agreement was to be made that at the end of each performance, the house lights would be turned on and the auditorium emptied.

Well, the latter proposal had to be cancelled at the outset. Why? Because theatres were so shabby that managements did not want them to be seen under the full glare of the house lights!

The shabbiness and technical deficiencies of an enormous proportion of our theatres have been of long duration, but the depression became worse and there was no immediate hope of economic betterment anywhere. Leaders in all industries and in banking had at last lost their faith. Even a governmental administration retired convinced, we are told, that collapse of our economic system, and perhaps of our civilization, could not long be deferred. It needed some hope then even to keep the theatre doors open. To attempt anything like normal maintenance would have been in most cases utterly ruinous.

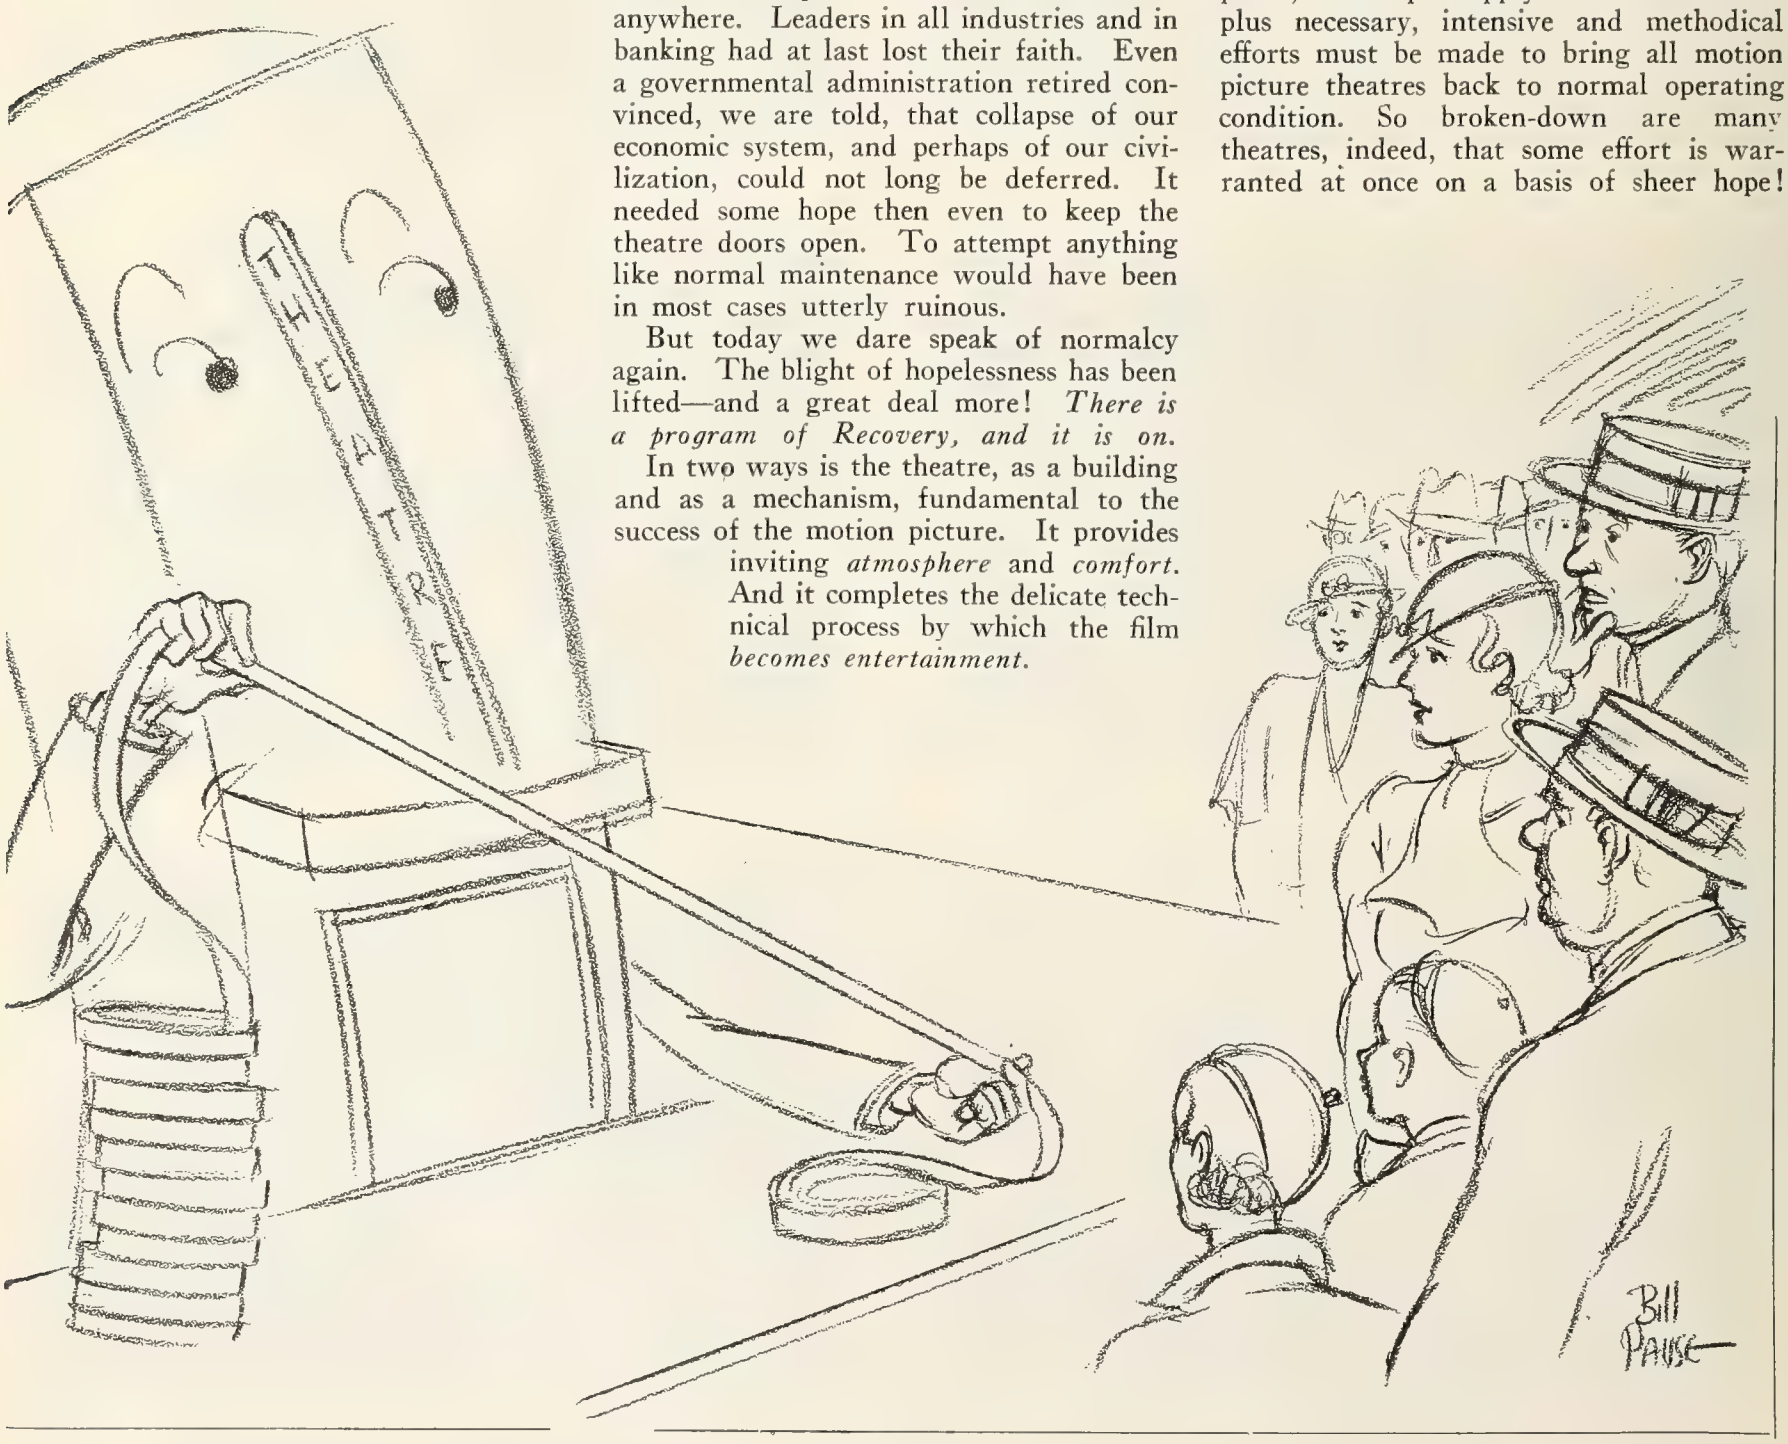
But today we dare speak of normalcy again. The blight of hopelessness has been lifted—and a great deal more! There is a program of Recovery, and it is on.

In two ways is the theatre, as a building and as a mechanism, fundamental to the success of the motion picture. It provides inviting atmosphere and comfort. And it completes the delicate technical process by which the film becomes entertainment.

Indeed, most theatres are to be "sold" to the public in their respective communities. One of the most trusted managers for a great circuit told the writer a few weeks ago that in the operation of his house he made it a policy of "selling" the theatre rather than the picture. Only a few pictures, was his theory, lent themselves to emphatic exploitation. But the theatre had to operate day in and day out, 52 weeks a year, regardless of the pictures available!

Theatres in the larger cities so located that they catch the transient trade are the exceptions. But the motion picture is overwhelmingly exhibited in theatres more or less of community character, and they could not prosper at any time did not millions of people merely "go to the movies."

Therefore, as economic conditions improve, as receipts supply the minimum surplus necessary, intensive and methodical efforts must be made to bring all motion picture theatres back to normal operating condition. So broken-down are many theatres, indeed, that some effort is warranted at once on a basis of sheer hope!



YOUR LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES IN INJURY

By LEO T. PARKER

Analyzing for theatre management recent suits and court decisions involving various types of accidents

THE HIGHER COURTS have consistently held that a theatre proprietor's duty to keep his theatre in a reasonably safe condition for the benefit of his patrons extends to all parts of the premises which he knows his patrons are accustomed to visit. This rule of the law is applicable to all persons who enter the theatre for lawful purposes. Moreover, in order that a theatre owner may avoid liability for damages, as a result of injury to a patron and other persons, it is advisable that all sources of danger on the theatre premises be eliminated so far as possible. And those dangerous situations which are necessary should be conducted in a manner likely to warn all persons of the danger therein.

Patron Must Be Warned of Danger

CASE:

For instance, in the recent case of Ghilain v. Couture (164 Atl. 213), it was shown that a patron purchased a ticket and entered the gallery of a motion picture theatre. The projection room was situated at the rear of the gallery and was elevated about seven feet above the level of the floor. Steps led to the room and a handrail was attached to these steps. The door of the projection room customarily was left unlocked, and there was no sign by which patrons were warned of the danger of entering the room.

One night a patron became curious and ascending the steps opened the door and entered the booth. As he opened the door, one of the reels, which the projectionist had been preparing for use, caught fire. Failing in his attempt to extinguish the flames, the projectionist left the booth. However, the patron failed to leave the room and was severely burned from which injuries he later died.

The heirs of the deceased patron filed suit against the theatre owner to recover damages. During the trial it was shown that on several occasions patrons had entered the projection room for the purpose of satisfying their curiosity. Moreover, salesmen as well as employes of the theatre were accustomed to enter the projection room while the show was in progress.

The assistant manager of the theatre tsetified that it was dangerous for anybody to be in the room, that people were attracted there, and that it was necessary to give the ushers instructions to keep patrons out; that "all people are curious" and "like to find out and see these things"; that there was no notice or anything about the projection room that would give warning; and that "anybody could run up to those machines without being noticed."

DECISION:

In view of this testimony, which indicated to the court that the theatre owner had taken no precautions to safeguard or warn patrons against entering the projection room, and also since he had failed to instruct his employes to keep all persons out of the room, the lower court held the theatre owner liable in damages, and the higher court sustained the verdict.

NO DAMAGES IF PATRON TRESPASSES

IT IS TRUE that a theatre owner is bound to maintain the premises free from known dangers so that injury may be avoided by patrons and other persons who are invited on the premises. How

IF PATRON CHARGES ANNOYANCE

By M. MARVIN BERGER
MEMBER NEW YORK BAR

I DOUBT whether any theatre manager has escaped, at some time or other, the unpleasant experience of being called upon to take part in disputes betwen patrons. Not only are these disputes embarrassing, but there is always present the possibility of involving the theatre in a suit.

Assume for example, that a woman patron runs into a theatre manager's office one day with the complaint that a man sitting next to her in the audience, has been annoying her, and demands that the manager take some action about it. Now assuming the woman's story to be true, what can the manager do? Unless the person to whom the complaint is made, has actually seen the happening complained of taking place before his eyes, he may do nothing except to refund the man's admission and to request him to leave the theatre.

The manager may not, unless he be an eye-witness to the occurence, hold the man against his will while awaiting the arrival of a police officer, or compel the man to accompany him to a police officer.

The use, without legal justification of any force, or the threat to use force, on a person, whereby that person is deprived of his liberty, compelled to go where he does not wish to go, or to stay where he does not wish to stay, is called false imprisonment, for which the person deprived of his liberty may bring action for damages. In some states, false imprisonment is also a criminal offense.

In the case I have given, the fact that the manager may have honestly believed that the man was annoying the woman, will not justify his actions in a suit for false imprisonment.

Even where the act complained of by a patron is a major crime or felony, such as robbery, the manager may not deprive the suspected person of his liberty, unless he saw the happening, or can show that he had reasonable grounds for suspecting the person accused of the felony.

Any dispute between patrons involving a disturbance of the peace, in which you, as manager, are called upon to act, must be very carefully handled. Above all, keep the quarrel out of the audience by inviting the parties involved into the privacy of your office.

Offer the complaining patron a seat removed from the offender, or if this fails to placate, and you consider the complaint to be justifiable, tender the offender his admission and request him to leave. If the complaining patron insists that the offender be arrested, explain that you are powerless to restrain his liberty without having witnessed the occurrence and that the complainant is at liberty, upon his or her responsibility to call a policeman to take action.

To summarize, in any case involving disturbance of the peace by the quarrels of patrons, the policy of management, so far as possible, should be, "Hands off!"

PSYCHROMETRIC CHART: INCLUDING TEMPERATURE LINES FOR STILL AIR CONDITIONS

[The second of four charts applied to theatre air conditioning.]

This chart covers the same field as the Effective Temperature Chart presented in the July 1st issue of Better Theatres, plus some additional information. Though set up in slightly different form from the Effective Temperature Chart, this brief explanation, with some study on your part, should make it understandable.

METHOD OF CHART

DRY-BULB TEMPERATURES: Represented by vertical lines, with the value in degrees Fahrenheit indicated on every even multiple of ten lines; i. e., 30°, 40°, 50°, etc. The distance between each vertical line represents 2½ degrees—therefor, for odd degrees it is necessary to establish a point between two vertical lines.

WET-BULB TEMPERATURES: Represented by lines sloping from lower right-hand to upper left-hand at about an angle of 30°.

Note: On the uppermost sweeping curved line at the point where the figure 65 appears, at this point there is an extended line labeled "65° Wet-Bulb Line." All lines parallel to that line represent Wet-Bulb lines. The value of the lines in degrees Fahrenheit are represented by the numbers noted on the uppermost of the sweeping curved lines. Every fifth line is numbered, hence each line represents a degree of Wet-Bulb temperature.

RELATIVE HUMIDITY: Indicated by sweeping curved lines from lower left-hand to upper right-hand. Each line shown represents the Relative Humidity in percentage (of moisture) in multiples of ten. The lowest curved line is labeled 10%, the next 20%, and so on up to 90%. The uppermost sweeping curved line represents the 100% Relative Humidity line.

At this point it is indicated that when you have a Relative Humidity of 100%, the Effective Temperature is the same value in degrees as the Wet-Bulb reading. At any point on the 100% Relative Humidity line, the Wet-Bulb temperature line and the Effective Temperature line corresponding to that point intersect.

HORIZONTAL LINES IN THIS CHART: Represent grains of moisture in each pound of dry air, for points falling on any particular line.

BODY MOISTURE

The following facts are not directly tied in with this chart, but it is of value to know them.

An adult human at rest in 72° F. Dry-Bulb air throws off about 700 grains of water per hour.

1 pound of water=7,000 grains
8⅓ pounds of water=1 gallon
58,310 grains of water=1 gallon

An audience of 1,000 persons will throw off 700,000 grains of moisture per hour, or 12 gallons of water.

The average performance is 2¼ hours long, so multiplying this result by 2.25, it follows that at each performance there would be 30 gallons of water added to the moisture of the air. From this it is easily understood why people say that the air becomes heavy when a number of persons are gathered in a room with no positive means of ventilation.

The shaded portion of this chart represents the mean winter comfort zone It does not specifically distinguish between the summer and winter comfort zones. For daily records of conditions within your theatre you should use the Effective Temperature Chart (See Better Theatres of July 1).

Example No. 1: Dry-Bulb 72°, Wet-Bulb 64°.

Along the base of the chart line to the right is 72°. Follow up this line until you strike the point of intersection with the 64° Wet-Bulb line. (Remember the Wet-Bulb lines slant at an angle of about 30° from the lower right to upper left.) This point falls just outside the edge of the shaded portion of the chart. Resulting Effective Temperature, 69¼°—Relative Humidity, 65% — Grains of moisture per pound of air, 75.

Example No. 2: Dry-Bulb 77½°, Wet-Bulb 69°.

Locate the point of intersection of the 77½° Dry-Bulb line and the 69° Wet-Bulb line as explained in Example No. 1. This point will represent resulting conditions consisting in Effective Temperature, 73½°—Relative Humidity, 65% — Grains of moisture per pound of air, 93.

Comparing the two examples, we find the Effective Temperature of Example No. 1 about 4° lower than that of Example No. 2—Relative Humidity in Example No. 1 the same as in Example No. 2—Grains of moisture in Example No. 1 are 18 less than in Example No. 2.

Now check these same conditions on the Effective Temperature Chart published in Better Theatres of July 1.

MODERN PROJECTION

PROJECTION • SOUND REPRODUCTION • ACOUSTICS

RCA EXTENDED FREQUENCY REPRODUCTION

The first official description released on one of the new "wide range" systems

THE RECENTLY developed extended frequency reproducing equipments of RCA Victor Photophone—the so-called "high fidelity" type—are all-a.c.-operated systems designed for theatre use. Being completely a c.-operated, all storage batteries with their charging equipment, B-batteries and motor-generators are eliminated. All d c. voltages and currents required for the operation of the tubes, exciter lamps, and the loud speaker fields are supplied by rectifiers incorporated in the amplifier racks. A standard installation consists of two sound heads with their associated motor drives, an amplifier rack placed in or near the projection room, a monitor loudspeaker, and stage loudspeakers located behind a sound screen.

Special sound control units are located near each projector. These units contain the sound fader switch, remote volume control push buttons, and photoelectric cell equalizing potentiometer. Any number of projectors can be accommodated by the addition of a sound head, sound control unit, and exciter lamp supply unit for each projector.

Although the equipment is primarily designed for sound-on-film recordings, the sound head is built for operating turntables by the addition of special gears. These gears drive the turntable through flexible shafts at the standard speed of 33⅓ r.p.m.

An entirely new soundhead attachment is used with this series of equipments. This soundhead attachment utilizes a rotary stabilizer—a rotating drum instead of the usual gate is employed for sound take-off. It consists of a smooth drum pulled by the film, mounted on a shaft having a very light hollow case on the outer end of the shaft. This shaft runs on ball bearings. Inside the hollow cylindrical case is a flywheel concentric with the shaft but running on a ball bearing so that it is entirely free to rotate about the shaft. The remaining space inside the case is filled with a suitable oil which acts to damp out oscillations which would occur in the motion of the drum, were the flywheel connected to the shaft. The flywheel is set in motion through the viscosity of the oil caused by the rotation of the hollow case on the shaft. A ball bearing pressure and guide roller holds the film in contact with the drum at the point it is fed on. The drum runs at a uniform speed regardless of the accuracy of driving gears, eccentricity of the sprocket or other variables.

The motor is built into the roundhead casting. The motor switch is mounted on the motor frame.

Each amplifier panel will operate individually as a single unit. It is possible, therefore, to add additional panels to the rack when necessary for accommodating equipment other than standard.

At the top of the rack is the a.c. switching panel, in back of which is the top terminal board. Below the switching panel is a special input panel and switch. The special input panel permits the reproduction of programs other than the sound-on-film such as phonograph, radio, or microphone announcements.

Below the special input panel is the voltage amplifier panel. The voltage amplifier is standard for all size equipments and consists of three stages of amplification. A UY-224 Radiotron is used in the first stage, and RCA-56 in the second stage, and two UX-245's in push-pull in the last stage. The impedance of the input and output circuits is 500 ohms. The voltage supply for the tubes is obtained from a single UX-280 Radiotron.

Below the voltage amplifier panel is a single stage power amplifier panel which consists of two UX-250's connected in push-pull and supplied by two UX-281 Radiotrons.

A blank panel is supplied just below the power amplifier panel, which is of the same dimensions and provides space for an additional power amplifier in case it is required.

Beneath this blank panel is a loudspeaker field supply unit. This unit consists of a copper oxide rectifier to supply enough field current for five loudspeakers and the operating voltage for the fader relays. A blank panel is supplied below the field supply panel which is of the same dimensions and provides space for an additional field supply panel when needed. Underneath this blank panel are the exciter lamp supply units—one unit being required for each projector. Just below the exciter lamp supply panels is a blank panel for the addition of an exciter lamp supply cone loudspeaker has practically a flat response from 100 to 7,000 cycles. By using a 10-foot directional baffle, or by properly locating two of the 50-inch directional baffles, the frequency range can be lowered to 50 cycles before the characteristic begins to droop sharply.

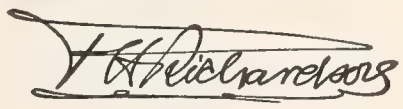
F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •



AN EXPLANATION OF A. C. "DEAD PERIODS"

AS WE all know concerning the action of a single alternator coil, the voltage drops to absolute zero two times each cycle. However, there are several coils and these coils are spread out. How then is it possible that the single phase lines can ever be at actual zero?

I propounded this query to Mr. Hohn Hertner, president of the Hertner Electric Company, whom I regard as one of our foremost electrical engineers. He replies as follows:

"As you know, with a.c. the direction of current flow is reversed twice in every complete cycle. In the case of 60-cycle current the reversal occurs 120 times each second of time. Now in order to accomplish reversal it is necessary that it pass through a point of zero, both of voltage and current flow. That is of course inevitable, just as it is inevitable that if a man walking south determines to reverse his direction without changing the path of a straight line, he must come to a temporary complete halt in order to reverse.

"The oscillograph is an instrument which makes current and voltage values visible to the eye. By its use the variations in either or both may be observed during the period of reversal of direction. The lines traced will be practically identical with the curves of a.c. voltage and current flow shown in standard text books.

"As to the action of separate coils, one may, as you say, see that in the individual coil the voltage values pass through zero, but with so many coils so well spread out they cannot all be at zero at the same instant of time. This is quite true as applies to voltage, and only that portion of the coils laying outside the pole influence is dead, which means that between one-half and two-thirds of all the armature coils are constantly active and generating voltage.

"But the point is that when, in an alternator (single phase for simplicity), the points where the coils are connected to the slip-rings are midway under the poles, the voltage generated by all the coils of the armature balance each other, so that the voltage at the slip-rings is during that instant of time actually at zero. The current flow is also likely to be zero, or very nearly so, at the same instant, the precise time when it becomes zero being dependent upon conditions in the circuit which usually delay it to some extent.

"An alternator could be so arranged that 120 times a second its terminals could be short-circuited for an instant, with no current at all flowing through the short, provided the instant be properly timed.

"Consider this in the light of the mercury of a thermometer, or of water in a pipe. They must perforce pass through zero speed in order to reverse their direction. Electric current in any circuit has what is equivalent to inertia. It cannot change its flow direction instantly since all circuits have some self-induction and capacity. Beside this, an alternator cannot generate top voltage at the end of a half-period, and instantly change to top voltage in the other direction, because from the position where the armature coils balance each other precisely, and where the generator voltage is zero, there is a gradual increase as the points of connection into the slip-rings shift position to a point where they are all working together.

"If I have failed to make any point clear don't hesitate to come back, because I realize that your own difficulties in such points are but a faint shadow of those of many of your readers."

Accept my appreciation, Friend Hertner. Many times in years past I have applied to John Hertner to clear up some knotty point in electrics, and never has he failed to give us as clear and as carefully prepared an explanation as possible.

PROJECTION IN INDIA

FROM FAR away Rangoon, in India, comes an interesting letter from a projectionist named M. Rangaswamy. He has neatly printed letterheads reading, "M. Rangaswamy, No. 284, 40th Street, Chief Projectionist, The Globe Theatres, Ltd." He wrote recently asking about the Blue-books. In answering I asked for some information on projection in India, and he has promptly sent it, as follows:

"Regarding your inquiry about projection conditions in India, I will try to tell you as well as I can about present-day conditions in Burma, not having much personal knowledge about conditions prevailing in the country as a whole, though doubtless Calcutta, Bombay and cities of their size can boast of cinemas where the best pictures are shown.

"First of all, in Burma it is very rare for a picture to run for more than a week. Admission prices compare well with those in America and Europe. We have, generally speaking, four classes of seats. The highest priced are Rs. 2 (about two shillings, sixpence) and the lowest Rs.-/8/, or about sixpence in English money.

"Admission prices in all leading theatres in Rangoon have recently been reduced because of the trade slump. We get precious few productions that are fairly worth four shillings sixpence. [Burma is a strip of territory at the southern end of the eastern part of India. It lies east of the bay of Bengal.—F.H.R.] This is especially true because of the fact that few of our Rangoon picture houses are perfect. In many of them ventilation leaves much to be desired. Only in our best houses, known as 'talkie houses,' are the best of American and English productions shown. They are obtained through MGM, Paramount, United Artists, Fox and Warner-First National.

"Our programs consist of the following: One newsreel, one two-reel comedy or a one-reel news and one main feature, the whole running about two hours. Usually we have two shows a day, one of them a matinee at 6.30 p.m. The other show starts at 9.30 p.m. If a picture draws good houses we may have a show at 3.30 p.m.

"Projection rooms are constructed of bricks laid in cement mortar, with iron doors and steel stools. They are wholly devoid of timber fittings, hence entirely fireproof and usually fairly well ventilated. Floors are of concrete with cement top finish, hence entirely vibrationless. Picture size [Presumably that of the theatre Mr. Rangaswamy works at] is 16 feet wide.

"Wages for projectionists vary from Rs.150 to Rs.200 (About £12 to £15 sterling) for chief projectionists, and Rs.60 to Rs.90 (about £7 to £8 sterling) for assistants. They work mostly about five hours per day, with one hour recess.

"Sound equipments are Western Electric and RCA in our first-class theatres, with other equipments of various kinds in Class-B houses. Projectors are mostly Simplex and the British projector Kalee. Our Rangoon theatres—the first-class houses, I mean—are becoming very modern, with up-to-date equipments and fittings, though they cannot compare with the wonderful theatres we hear about in the West. We now have a new theatre, the Regal, under construction in Bombay, to be second to none in all India.

"And now a few words about other pretty picture houses in Rangoon. In addition to the first-class theatres of which I have spoken, there are a few cinemas where, generally speaking, only Burmese and Indian pictures are shown. Most of them are local productions and silent, though occasionally a local 'talkie' may be shown as well. In the matter of local productions there is much room for improvement in both the acting and in the technique of the pictures. These theatres are not so up-to-date. There is much room for improvement in fittings, seating, etc. They are patronized wholly by indigenous people whereas American and European films are well patronized by both Eastern and Western peoples."

It has been necessary to rewrite Friend Rangaswamy's letter, but save for a few places where I had to take a chance on a word or two, I have adhered to his exact meaning. I was surprised at the wages paid projectionists. It compares very favorably with what our own men receive.

METHODS OF CLEANING SCREENS

● Following are the methods advised by various manufacturers of motion picture screens for cleaning their screens in the theatre:

WALKER-AMERICAN: Experience of this firm that the normal life of a screen can be considerably extended by keeping the surface free of all dirt and accumulation at all times. It is the opinion that the best method is to use a soft screen brush at regular intervals to remove loose dirt before it becomes embedded in the screen surface. There are screen brushes especially constructed for the purpose that have a metal ferrule, to which a long pole can be attached so that the entire screen can be brushed off in a standing position. The screen should be brushed in one direction only, preferably going straight across. Every screen should be brushed off once a week, or at least twice a month, to prevent dust and grime from becoming embedded so that a brush cannot take it off. (This does not apply to beaded screens, the brushing of which might knock off some of the beads.) From their experience it is impossible to wash a screen without impairing uniformity of reflecting quality.

DA-LITE: Da-Tone X screens can be cleaned with ordinary kitchen washing powder (like Kitchen Klenzer), according to directions given on the can. Da-Tone Z screens can also be cleaned in this manner. After the screens have been gone over with the cleaner, a follow-up should be made with clean water to remove all traces of the powder. No soap should be used. Da-Lite screens have a hard smooth surface and can be kept in good condition by going over them frequently with clean wool dusters. Feather dusters can also be used.

WHITING & DAVIS: The best way to clean this metal screen is to brush both front and rear surfaces with a soft brush, thereby removing the larger portion of the dust, then to wash the front surface from top to bottom with a cloth which has been soaked in naptha. It is best to do only a small section at a time because the naptha evaporates very rapidly. This process usually removes all dust and dirt, and after this is done, a refinishing coat of DuPont's screen paint will restore the screen to its original condition.

KEASBEY & MATTISON: Cleaning is not recommended, but refinishing practically restores the original condition of the surface. Refinishing materials are furnished by the manufacturer and can be applied by theatre employees.

ANSWERING FOUR QUESTIONS

M. L. JACOBSON of Flint, Mich., writes, "I have read your writings on projection for years. Never miss a word. Am a follower of the Bluebook School, which I have found to be extremely helpful. The Motion Picture Herald and Better Theatres are both all good, but yours is the first thing I turn to and the only thing I usually read twice, and maybe three times.

"And now, Mr. Richardson, I want your help on two or three matters. First, what was the 'two-pin movement' I have seen referred to several times as used in the earlier projectors? Second, is there any rule by means of which one may determine when electric wires have reached an age that they should be discarded? Third, why does not the International Projector Corporation give us an adjustable tension on its Simplex projectors? Fourth (I said two or three, but here is another), just how may a projectionist ascertain positively whether or not a motor or generator is running within safe limits as to heating. I know I am asking a lot, but please favor me this time, as I don't know where else to seek some of the information."

The two-pin movement was used on the Edison, and if I remember correctly, also on the first Powers projectors. It was nothing more nor less than two actuating pins at opposite positions on the intermittent movement. It slowed up the rotation of the cam-shaft by exactly one-half, hence made the action of the star and intermittent sprocket slow. In fact it required exactly twice as long for the film to move across the aperture as is required when the one-pin movement is used.

As to electric wires, so far as I know there is no rule. Unless the temperature is unduly raised by overload or otherwise, the conductor should last indefinitely. However, insulation wears out. With passing years, protected or otherwise, insulation dries and becomes brittle. Whether its insulation qualities deteriorate so that the wires in conduit become dangerous, I am not sure, nor have I been able to find anyone who is. I have written the National Board of Underwriters concerning this matter.

As to your third question, it is rather a sore spot. I tried for years to get my good friends down there to adopt an adjustable tension, but up to date they have refused. However, now that projection speed is standardized in a manner which prohibits much change in speed, an adjustable tension is not so necessary for the reason that projector manufacturers can ascertain exactly what tension is necessary and adjust every projector to that tension.

The maximum temperature permissible at which generators or motors may operate is set by the authorities at 90° Centigrade, or 194° Fahrenheit. This would be very hot to the touch, the body temperature being normally 98.6 F. To measure, obtain a thermometer of known accuracy, bed its bulb in stiff putty, lay the putty on the part you desire to know the temperature of and leave it there until certain the putty is as hot as the part. It is a good scheme to make a small dam of tin or wood to hold the putty, as it may become pretty oozy at high temperatures.

CONCERNING DIRTY FRAME LINES

I HAVE RECEIVED many complaints from projectionists of dirty (rough) frame lines in prints received. Several spoke particularly of Universal prints, so I went down to Universal headquarters in New York City and took the matter up with Mr. J. V. Ward, who immediately agreed to have it investigated, and anything found wrong, righted. He agreed that the frame lines should be smooth and "clean." Two days afterward Mr. Ward wrote me as follows:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: Referring to your visit to this office yesterday regarding complaint from theatres on positive film distributed by Universal and particularly the ragged frame line as shown by the cut-out submitted, kindly be advised we have already written to our representatives at the coast studio laboratory, citing your visit and the complaints you have received regarding our films. The frame line complaint no doubt was caused at the time the change was made from the hair frame line to the heavier, as now used, and the negatives made since that time, and the positive prints made from said negatives, you will find have clean-cut frame lines. We have submitted this sample to the coast representatives, and while the matter has already been remedied, we assure you they will look further into the matter to prevent any further recurrence or causes of these complaints.

"We thank you for bringing this to our attention and assure you of our heartiest efforts to correct any unsatisfactory positive prints going out to the trade. If at any time there is anything brought to your attention regarding the Universal pictures in general, we would greatly appreciate hearing from you on same, as we are anxious to satisfy the public in every possible way, and have shown to them the best possible pictures under the best conditions."

You will please especially note the last paragraph of Mr. Ward's letter. I have always found producers to be willing to remedy faults when they are brought to their attention, provided they be brought to the attention of some one high enough up to be able to force action. If projectionists and managers will supply competent evidence of specific faults found in prints, I will be glad to report them to the producer involved, and that, I am quite certain, would have some effect.

BAUSCH & LOMB OPTICAL COMPANY
679 St. Paul St., Rochester, N. Y.

"Dear 'Dad': This is my second letter since—well, when you were 'looking 'em over' in the old Powers factory. [I inspected all projector mechanisms in the Powers factory for four years.—F. H. R.] Guess we old timers all occasionally get mooning over the days of the Edison, the Lubin, and Optograph projectors, and the Biograph, Vitagraph, Essanay and Lubin films.

"While you have reached a high position in the profession, I still am peering through a port each night and have done so without a break since 'way back in 1905, when we showed song slides while an alleged singer vocalized the words of the then topical songs. Believe it ir not, there was then no paying patron who followed the pictured story more closely, or who had keener interest in it than did myself, then an 'operator.' I still like 'em and my work.

"As no letter to you would be complete without a question, here goes: Within the past month I have received several first runs from Oklahoma City which in spite of everything I have been able to do, get scratched to the left of the sound track. Emulsion collects, hardens and scratches, and on these films only.

"My contention is that these prints are exceptionally green or 'soft.' The damage begins after projecting about 300 feet of film. I can't stop to clean it off as we once did. Won't do at all now, so it just must pull through. Have tried waxing, etc., but the trouble still continues. Tracks at gate in perfect condition. Never used anything harsh on them to clean deposit off. Can you advise me?"

Accepting your statement as correct, it certainly must be as you say. The prints are soft. However, two things are possible which would add to the effect; namely, (a) excessive tension, or (b) some fault in the polished surface bearing, under tension, on the film.

Were I in your place I would first of all remove the parts and examine their surfaces under a magnifying glass. If they are perfect, then I would see if I could not get along with a less heavy tension, meanwhile writing the distributor, or having your manager do so, concerning the soft condition of the prints and their lack of proper waxing or other treatment to prevent such sticking.

Yes, old friend, we do think of the old hand-cranking days and the many very simple problems that then troubled us plenty. They were then anything but simple, and we should carefully remember that when some beginner asks questions.

FITTING BRUSHES TO COMMUTATORS

J. L. SCHROCK of Hannibal, Mo., says, "I read an article by a Los Angeles projectionist in which was the statement that in fitting a brush to a commutator with sandpaper, if the paper be pulled back and forth, a poor fit would result. The chap said the paper must be pulled only in the direction in which the armature rotates, pulling the brush up each time to pull the paper back, I suppose. I have got good results by just pulling the paper both ways for a long while. What do you say about it?"

Theoretically the advice you quote is all right. The bug in that particular bottle of ointment is that not one man in a hundred would bother to follow it, hence it has very small value. If a brush fits in its holder as it should fit, and the holder itself has proper depth, pulling the sandpaper back and forth will produce practically perfect results. However, if you want something a bit better, have an assistant hold a screwdriver blade flatwise against the brush top with just sufficient pressure to prevent it from tilting as the paper is pulled back. If properly done you would get exactly the same result you would by pulling the paper only in the direction the commutator runs, and with much less bother.

You see, Friend Schrock, if the brush fits as it should, the possible tilting is so very slight that the surface curve would be affected hardly at all in any event, so slightly in fact that the effect would be almost entirely negligible. It is unwise to hand out advice so very finely spun that few if any will follow it. Theoretically it may be splendid. In practice it is rather useless.

My advice is: See to it that your brushes fit in their holders just as snugly as possible without danger of sticking. That is important. If they don't, discard the brushes in favor of ones that do fit as they should. It is wise for projectionists to have record of the precise thickness of brushes needed for his machines. To fit the brush end, remove old brush, examine the holder to see that it is in good condition. Insert new brush and adjust tension. Cut strips of No. ½ sandpaper an inch wider than the brush being fitted. Raise the brush and under it place sandpaper, sand side up, of course. Lower the brush and pull sandpaper back and forth until the proper curve is formed, being sure always to keep the paper ends down sufficiently so that it maintains perfect contact with the commutator curve under the brush. Some prefer No. 1 paper. It works faster. But I myself prefer the finer grade.

Having formed the curve, remove the paper and carefully clean away all carbon dust from both brush end and commutator. Then run the machine idle for a short while, say, half an hour, at the end of which period remove brush and examine its commutator contact surface. If it shows shiny spots, then using a bit of the sandpaper under one of your fingers, carefully sand off just a bit of carbon where these spots are. You may have to do that two or three times, but it is well worth while, and will, if properly done, result in a perfect fit all over.

When doing a brush fitting job one should always make sure (a) that the brushes are set at point of best commutation, (b) that the flexible copper conductor called a "pigtail" is in good condition and clamped tight by its screws (better remove them and make sure the contact is clean) and (c) that the brushes are all equally spaced around the commutator. If only two sets of brushes are used they should be exactly opposite each other. If four or any other number of sets are used they must be spaced exactly equally apart around the commutator.

TESTING FOR POLARITY

EVERY ONCE in a while some projectionist asks how he may determine polarity of an electric wire or battery terminal. In answering a Bluebook School question recently Lester Van Buskirk, projectionist of the Maltz theatre in Alpena, Mich., suggested the following methods, all of which are correct:

In a storage battery the terminal upon which green corrosion gathers is positive. Thrust two wires ends of a live d.c. circuit into an Irish potato about half an inch apart. Presently a green spot will appear around the positive wire. Into a glass of water in which some salt has been dissolved (not too much), thrust the two wire ends of a d.c. circuit. Presently bubbles will appear around the negative wire end. It also is possible to test for polarity by means of an instrument and needle deflection, but since few projectionists would have the instrument available for use it has small value in the matter.

INDIVIDUAL CONTRACT

FROM AN eastern state comes this letter: "I have been out of work for several months. Now have a chance to secure employment as projectionist, but the manager wants to have a written agreement or contract and no one seems to know just how it should read. I am therefore appealing to you for help. Please send me a specimen of union contracts, or tell me what your view would be as to the wording of such an agreement."

Frankly I was puzzled. Such an agreement in writing might not be such a bad idea, but a union contract would hardly help, or so it seems to me. My own view is that such a contract should read something as follows:

Know all men by these presents that (proper designation of employer) and John Doe, motion picture projectionist, have this .... day of ..... entered into the following agreement,

First, said (employer) agrees to and hereby does employ said John Doe to act as projectionist of ..... theatre at a weekly wage of $ ....., same to be payable once each week.

Second, under this agreement said John Doe agrees to be present at least thirty minutes before starting time of each show each day and to remain constantly on duty while such show or shows are in progress.

Third, this agreement is based upon the operation of the theatre approximately ..... hours per day, divided as follows ..... It is agreed that should the hours of operation be changed, then there should be a suitable readjustment of wages sub-

Fourth, It is agreed that the said John Doe shall keep all equipment in clean condition and, so far as possible, in good running condition.

Fifth, It is agreed by said John Doe that he will (a) examine all film received from the exchange and before using said film make written report to the manager of the theatre of its physical condition

Sixth, It is agreed that if films are received in a state unsafe to project without repairs first having been made, and such repairs require in excess of one half-hour, then said John Doe shall be paid for making such repairs at the rate of ..... cents per hour or fraction thereof.

Seventh, It is agreed that said John Doe shall not be held responsible for damage ocurring to either film or equipment from faults which have been previously reported to the manager in writing, provided they be faults for which the said John Doe is not himself in any manner responsible.

Eighth, It is agreed that said John Doe shall be supplied with a suitable cupboard or closet equiped with a substantial lock, in which he may keep his personal belongings while off duty.

Ninth, This agreement shall terminate ..... from this date.

At the moment this is all the points I am able to think of which should be covered. I would appreciate it if readers would add to them such other things as may seem right and proper. Such an agreement would give to the parties a clear idea of just what their rights are.

"I note the request for suggestions. Here is one: In summer business is usually pretty bad. In some instances there is a request for cuts in salary. Something pertaining to this might be added, I believe."

EQUIPMENT AFFAIRS

Equipment News and Comment

DEALERS CONVENE

● A very representative array of motion picture theatre equipment was put on exhibit at the convention of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association which opened July 28th in Chicago for four days, many a display bringing forth new developments. This was the third national meeting of the organization and probably the most elaborately planned, the association, under the direction of J. E. Robin, president; L. G. Dolliver, vice-president; and H. C. Dusman, secretary, timing greater efforts to interest manufacturers in its facilities for marketing their product, with the upturn and new order in business generally. In addition to members, the convention brought representatives of every class of equipment.

One of the items of convention business was the preparation of a fair practice code under NIRA. Mr. Robin received specific authorization from Administrator Hugh S. Johnson for the convention to formulate such a code. Mr. Robin presided at the daily sessions.

Inasmuch as the convention had not ended at the time of going to press, a full report will have to await the next issue, when a description of the exhibit, particularly with reference to the newer things in equipment disclosed, will be given.

THERMOSTATIC MOTORS

● A type of motor which protects itself against danger of burn-outs, has been marketed by the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company. Motors in this line have a built-in disc thermostat and a control device with a separate thermal overload relay.

Thermoguard motors may be arranged, at the option of the user, either to be disconnected from the source of power when the temperature approaches the danger zone, or to indicate by giving an audible or visible signal when an unsafe temperature is being approached. On processes where an enforced motor shut-down would cause a loss of product or other hazard, the thermoguard motor will give advance warning that an emergency exists—and corrective measures can be taken. When desirable, thermoguard motors can be arranged to stop when their temperature is dangerously high and cannot be started until the moment the operator manipulates the control.

A COLOSSAL SCREEN

● Among the big things at the Chicago World's Fair, where magnitude is everywhere, is the screen being used for the projection of George K. Spoor's "natural vision" motion pictures. It contains over 2,432 square feet of material, more than would be required, it is estimated, to make eight screens of 15 x 20 feet. It is but slightly less than 68 feet wide and 41 feet high.

As can be imagined, these dimensions created quite a few mechanical problems of installation, which was made by the National Theatre Supply Company, acting for the Walker-American Corporation, the manufacturer. Over 1,000 board feet of heavy kiln-dried lumber were used in constructing the frame, and the hardwood for assembling it weighed over 200 pounds. The screen was shipped knocked down and rolled the short way. Installation required six stagehands for three days.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● William H. MacDonald, formerly of the Sonolux Company, has been named sales manager in charge of promotion of Amplex Products, Inc. This company, but recently organized, is headed by N. Goldman, while Alexander Senauke, professor of radio communications in New York University, is chief engineer. Nicholas Anton is general superintendent.

Rapid growth in the conviction that air conditioning equipment with cooling facilities is required equipment in the motion picture theatre of today, is well indicated by reports received during the last few weeks of installations made since early spring. One company alone—Supreme Heater & Ventilating Corporation—reports 17 installations thus far completed this year.

A communication from Joe Goldberg, for 17 years head of Balaban & Katz projection, later with Publix in New York, and now operating his own supply company in Chicago, states that he has acquired much of the equipment used in the repair and experimental department of Publix for his projection repair service. This is operated in conjunction with his general equipment service, which is also being expanded.

ing appeals to theatregoers; when inharmonious or badly laid out, the reaction to it is very unfavorable.

Local lighting companies are generally willing to render service in checking lighting and power circuits, establishing their maximum load capacities, and advising on matters of voltage, wattage and types of lamps. They should be able to provide you with valuable information from time to time that has been compiled and distributed by the larger lamp and electric manufacturing companies. It is advisable to make the fullest use of such helpful service.

ESTIMATES AND CONTRACTS

SHOULD YOU CALL on a contractor for estimates on proposed work, insist that such estimates be submitted in full detail. Estimates should be so complete that they in themselves are practical specifications. You as a theatre manager are not skilled in drawing up specifications, therefore, for your protection you must demand detailed and understandable estimates. Without such detail it will be impossible for you to intelligently compare competitive estimates or bids.

The details of job estimates must be compared. Sometimes the cheapest price proves the most expensive in the long run. All bids or estimates should include the fees for necessary municipal or state permits, plans and inspections. Where such are required, the contractor, being more familiar with such details, is in a better position to furnish them. It is not commendable practice to attempt to violate the law on alterations or remodeling jobs, or to cover up work before proper inspection. The chances are you really won't get away with it.

When bids or contracts indicate that a certain portion of the work is to be sublet, it is wise for you to make a personal check on this. This may best be done by calling for special bids on such work from others who do that type of work—then compare with the original bid.

Time and material contracts for theatre work are not good practice. It is too difficult to check the time accurately and there are too many other opportunities for the job to get beyond control and run into much more money than was originally contemplated. Letting contracts is not a simple task. It will many times tax your ingenuity.

If a manager who is operating a theatre that is part of a circuit, will approach his problems with some of these thoughts in mind, such bids and plans, together with a memorandum on job data and conditions, may be sent in to the circuit maintenance engineer for final checking and further advice. Such procedure should provide more economical maintenance, and it places much of the maintenance responsibility upon the theatre manager—where it belongs.

Don't make the mistake of thinking that our particular business is unique with regards to maintenance, or that it is too much to expect of a manager. Your value to your company and to yourself is in proportion to your ability to meet the problems that are presented during the operation of your theatre. Maintenance covers one group of such problems. Maintenance properly and skillfully handled enhances your value.

Maintenance problems are common to all businesses. The manager of the drug store, the candy store, the five-and-ten, the hotel or the apartment house—all must meet the problem of maintenance, in addition to their problems of merchandising, advertising, inventories and personnel. Hence it certainly is not too much to expect this of theatre managers.

In our business, the operation of a theatre probably requires a greater variety of maintenance than many other businesses. The care of items ranging from carpets and draperies, marbles, metals and paint work, projectors, pumps, motors and sound equipment, to major alterations and repairs presenting definite structural, technical and mechanical problems, is a man-sized task and it is definitely part of your job.

thousand dollars to get great improvement.

To demonstrate still further what a complete change in character can be attained in an auditorium, let us examine the theatre represented by Figure 11, and the retreatment indicated by Figure 12. The former shows an array of grotesque ornamentation and mid-Victorian ideas. In the final sketch I have tried to show how this auditorium, as bad as it is, could be readily transformed into a spacious, inviting place of assembly with modern motifs. You will note that while this design is for the same theater shown in Figure 11, the room has been made to look a great deal larger.

Auditorium floors present a particularly important remodeling problem at this time. A great many of the floors are constructed of wood and have been undermined by dry rot, damp rot and constant traffic. These have left a creaky condition hardly consistent with the demands of sound.

In an ordinary theatre of 900 seats or so, you can tear the floors out for about $50, and replace them with concrete floors for about $750. It costs from 25c to 30c per seat to fasten the chairs to the concrete floor, and all in all this change represents a good investment, for once the concrete floor is laid down, it is there to stay.

ever, it has been held that a theatre owner is not liable in damages for an injury sustained by a patron who is injured in any room or location of the theatre premises not intended for his use (although if such a room is readily accessible to patrons, a proper warning should be posted).

CASE:

For example, in York v. Clow (163 Atl. 401), it was shown that a person went in a building with permission of the property owner. The person was injured and he filed suit against the property owner to recover damages. During the trial it was proved that the injury was sustained in a part of the building which was not intended by the property owner to be occupied by persons permitted to enter the building. Also, the injured person had entered this part of the building without knowledge of the property owner. Therefore, the higher court held the injured person not entitled to recover damages, and said:

DECISION:

"The rule is elementary that a property owner's legal duty to an invitee to keep his premises in a safe condition does not extend to those portions of the premises which he has no reason to expect the invitee to occupy."

PROPER MAINTENANCE A DEFENSE IN INJURY

WHETHER or not a theatre owner is liable in damages for an injury sustained by a patron who stumbles or falls on theatre steps depends entirely upon the circumstances. However, if the steps are not defective and are well illuminated so that patrons have ample opportunity by the application of ordinary care to see such steps, the theatre owner is not liable for injuries sustained by careless patrons.

CASE:

For instance, in Garret v. W. S. Butterfield Theatres (246 N. W. 57), it was disclosed that a theatre patron 70 years old, while attending a theatre, went through the women's lounge, a dimly lighted room, to the toilet room, in the floor of which was a step down of four and one-half inches. The patron fell at the step and was injured.

The patron filed suit against the theatre owner and the lower court held the injured patron entitled to receive payment of heavy damage. However, the theatre owner appealed to the higher court and proved that the toilet room was brightly illuminated and that any person who exercised ordinary care should have observed the step instead of not seeing it, although the patron testified she did not observe it.

Therefore, the higher court reversed the lower court's decision and, in holding the theatre owner not liable, stated the following important law:

DECISION:

"The toilet room was well or brightly lighted. There were no structural defects in the floor or steps. Different floor levels in private and public buildings, connected by steps, are so common that the possibility of their presence is anticipated by prudent persons. The construction is not negligent unless, by its character, location or surrounding conditions, a reasonably prudent person would not be likely to expect a step or see it. . . . Toilets are frequently put in left over spaces and have vagaries of construction. The door was a warning that there might be a difference in floor levels. The act of opening the door towards him would require a person to pause long enough to have ample opportunity to see the step. . . . A reasonably prudent person, watching where he is going, would have seen the step. Defendant (theatre owner) is not under legal duty to prevent careless persons from hurting themselves. We think defendant (theatre owner) was not guilty of negligence."

NEGLIGENCE IS FURTHER DEFINED

IN ALMOST all litigations involving injuries to theatre patrons, the legal meaning of the term negligence is an important consideration. In other words, a theatre owner is liable in damages for an injury sustained by a patron where it is shown that such injury resulted from negligence of the theatre owner or his authorized employees. Therefore, it is important to know the exact meaning of the term negligence.

CASE:

In the late case of Cooper v. Winnwood Amusement Company (55 S. W. [2d] 737), a patron sued an amusement company for damages resulting from an injury. During the trial the outcome of the litigation depended upon the legal meaning of the term negligence, and whether or not the negligence of the employee was the direct cause of the injury.

DECISION:

Since it was shown that the employees failed to exercise ordinary care to remedy the defect which caused the injury, the higher court held the amusement company liable in damages, and stated the following important law:

"By 'negligence' and 'negligently' as used in these instructions, is meant the failure to use the highest degree of care. By 'highest degree of care' as used in these instructions means such care as a very careful and prudent person would use under the same or similar circumstances. . . . The rule in this state, and generally, is that the proprietor of a place of public amusement owes to his patrons that duty which, under the particular circumstances, is ordinary care or reasonable care for their safety."

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in isgnin gthe questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

The Question:

I AM planning the remodeling of my theatre, and while most of the remodeling will be redecorating, reseating carpets and electric light fixtures, the most important part will be a new projection booth, and I want to be sure that when finished it must be absolutely of the latest design, therefore I take the liberty to ask you to publish a general description of requirements for such a booth. Thanks for your kindness.—M. D. L.

The Answer:

A PROJECTION ROOM should be located on a separate floor above the balcony. If the balcony of your theatre is of fireproof construction you may be able to support it on same. Should the construction be non-fireproof, it would be well to start independent fireproof supports from the basement. The room, of course, will have to be entirely fireproof, and the floor must be substantially constructed, not only to support the machines, but also to avoid any vibration.

All openings for projection or observation shall be equipped with automatic closing devices to insure the immediate closing of all doors and shutters in case of fire. The room must also be provided with exit facilities for the operators in case of emergency. These exits shall be of the automatic self-closing type. The port holes shall be of the correct size and location.

It is advisable that you submit the drawings for the room to the firm you are dealing with for the projection material so that they can check them and see that the sizes conform to their product. There should be provided four types of portholes: observation, projector, stereopticon and spotlight. Openings for projection, operator's view and for ventilation shall be provided with gravity sliding metal plates not less than ¼-inch in thickness, held in position by combustible cords or fusible links, placed in series and so arranged that one of the links is directly over the film or magazine. Plate slides shall be at least twice the height of the opening.

Ventilators not less than 10 inches in diameter shall be placed directly over each projector to exhaust the heat generated in the operation of the projector, and to afford an outlet for gas and flame in case of fire. Such ventilating conductor pipes shall be heavy gauge sheet metal, riveted together. Connections must be made with a masonry flue or directly to the outside of the building, so arranged that escaping gases or flames will not come in contact with combustible materials, and insulated from all combustible construction by at least four inches of porous, insulating, incombustible materials. No dampers of any kind shall be placed in such ventilators.

Fresh air registers with a combined area equal to the vent outlets shall be provided in the walls, not more than 3 inches above the floor line. Such supply registers shall not be more than 6 inches in height and shall be covered with metal screen and provided with a sliding shutter, as above described. An average projection room requires portholes for at least one spotlight, one stereopticon, two motion picture machines, and two for observation. Do not plan the projection room less than 12 feet deep or 23 feet wide, as ample working space is essential to the operation of the machines by the operators, who must always be able to work quickly and unhampered.

Adjacent to the projection room provide for a work or rewinding room, which should be equipped with a metal work bench and a fireproof cabinet for reel storage. You should also plan for a rheostat room and battery room. If possible provide in the basement a motor-generator room, as this is the best way of eliminating noise and vibration. A wash and toilet room should be provided for the projection staff.

The Question:

I AM the owner of a summer resort in Ohio and want to build a theatre of frame construction. Will you be kind enough to let me know through your magazine if there is a state law governing that type of construction. I will appreciate an early reply.—H. P. M.

The Answer:

THE OHIO building code has the following requirements for the type of theatre which you described:

Summer theatres of frame construction shall be not to exceed 4,500 square feet in area, not more than one-story high, without balconies or galleries, without a cellar or basement, with the stage, dressing rooms, property rooms, scene dock and storage rooms lathed with metal lath, plastered and firestopped with incombustible materials. Summer theatres shall be located thirty feet or more from any other building, structure or lot line, shall be of no greater seating capacity than 750 persons and shall be provided with open sides or double means of egress required for theatres. No heat of any kind shall be used, and no tent or awning or similar covering shall be used as a roof over the auditorium.

Are You Thinking Of Remodeling Your Theatre?

If you are, let this department help you. Peter M. Hulsken, its conductor, is a practising architect who has designed many theatres. He will be glad to advise you on your methods and selection of materials, and will help you calculate the cost. Write to him in care of Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

OLD "DOUBLE BILL" THE VILLAIN

THE heat wave has been bad enough without having that perennial and dusty issue about "double bills" come up again, but it is freely forecast that we shall always have it with us in some guise. Out in Southern California, where previewing has become an integral part of the process of production, the try-outs of pictures added to the programs have in a practical sense started well on the way to establishing an actual but unadmitted double bill policy at some important theatres. Up in New England the double bill is chronic.

As long as exhibitors can buy and sell screen entertainment for the purpose of operating their own businesses the problem will have to be their problem. It may be remarked, also, in behalf of the independent exhibitor, that the most rampant "fire sale" and giveaway policies ever observed in theatre operations have been in some of the circuit houses, allegedly controlled by New York offices.

It is all so painfully, so tediously simple, after all. The customer is looking for value, entertainment value. The motion picture is obviously worth just precisely what the customer thinks it is worth. The exhibitor rents a canful of celluloid tape to make shadows for his customers. He pays for it something in relation to what he thinks he can make the patron think about the shadows. The exhibitor and the customer both buy their own states of mind, both of which are made up by information about the product—which is another name for advertising. Entertainment pertains to emotion. Emotion is not importantly affected by volume. One murder is a stark, dramatic tragedy, ten murders are a riot and any more are likely to be just a mere war. The circus comes to town and does a whale of a business—once a year, and jolly well presold at that. If there were two circuses in town every night business would possibly not be so good.

However, double billing was not originated by showmen to make pictures cheap. It has more largely been the consequence of pictures of a calibre to invite the notion. Today competition, too often cut-throat competition, is the most responsible factor in the continuance of the double bill.

We are reminded that a few years ago two big Chicago newspapers got engaged in circulation lottery contests and through competition got to giving away so much money that they both were happy to have the Government intervene and stop the process.

A man can have brains and exercise intelligence. A few men together, a board of directors for instance, can have honest opinion, but not much intelligence. A big corporation or an industry or a trade or an association has neither in appreciable quantity. All the important problems, and the double bill problem, are one man issues. Masses have impulses and trends, not minds, therefore majorities never make up the minds they haven't got.

OSMOSIS A LA GISH

A REAL sprightly quality overspread the ship news this week by grace of the arrival of Gloria Swanson and Lillian Gish aboard the Olympic, all a-twitter with fun. It seems that Miss Swanson introduced the passengers to the game of squat tag and made such a hit with it that one previously glum passenger bought a cordial for all hands.

That, however, is trivial news alongside the scientific discovery reported by Miss Gish, the lily maid whose art makes Mr. George Jean Nathan, and strong men like Mr. Joseph Hergesheimer, throw literary fits. Miss Gish, as we were saying, came up from Quarantine proclaiming of all things, a "brandy bandage," which she says is "both soothing and effectual." Miss Lillian has been to Baden Baden taking the waters, etc., and seems to have learned the trick from German medical authorities. You just wrap a thick bandage about the middle and soak it with brandy. This will be recognized by some of our readers as a reversal of the time honored process by which one merely wrapped himself around a quart of Hennessey's Three Star. That was also "soothing and effectual." We look to the fall fashions for a great development in the "Gish belt."

Miss Sylvia Sidney, who will be pleasantly remembered as the girl who got drowned in "An American Tragedy," flew up and out of a Paramount picture in Hollywood and alighted at Newark, making another snappy contribution to the week's star events. It seems that Miss Sidney had a throat gland operation. Paramount thought she ought to stay on or about the job. She thought she ought to travel for her health. They both issued statements, so now at least three of us all have a pain in the neck.

WRONG BIRD

THERE are several things that we have not been consulted about with reference to the current state of affairs and the nation. One of them is the blue eagle emblem of the NRA. An impresario of poster art, schooled in motion picture serial excitement when there was some, would not have endorsed a design showing a Germanic type of bird with one foot in a buzz saw and the other on a third rail. Our notion of the bird to symbolize industry is the woodpecker, redheaded, honest, industrious, even if he is a bit of a chiseler. On the other hand the eagle is given to racketeering his living by stealing fish from the osprey which knows how to catch them. That is no policy to admit.

IN the passing of Louise Closser Hale in Hollywood last week the dramatic stage and screen have lost a most capably articulate friend. Mrs. Hale was quite as able a writer and observer as she was an actress and playwright.

THIS WEEK - - - -

SIGNIFICANT STROKE

At once a sharp blow and significant precedent was the decision last week rendered in New York supreme court by Justice Cohn against William Fox and his Tri-Ergon Corporation, suing practically all companies for sound patent infringement, under the able hand of clever attorney Louis Nizer, defense counsel. Immediate decision denied a motion by Tri-Ergon attorneys for judgment without trial, supporting Nizer's contention that patent infringement action stood without the jurisdiction of a state court, was a federal matter. Though Leo Brecher and his corporations, Max Goldberg, Associated Cinemas, Inc., were immediate defendants, the decision is seen as significantly strengthening the position of other sued companies. . .

UNION LAW AND ORDER

With a promise of "law and order," no toleration of racketeering in union ranks, former Kansas City policeman Frank Dowd, projectionist at Loew's Midland, has become new business agent of the Kansas City operators' union, appointed by William C. Elliott of the parent IATSE as adhesive tape to patch the long severed diplomatic relations between the union and local independent theatre owners, headed by Jay Means. "Willing to do business" with Mr. Dowd and H. H. Dunavan, newly named union president, is Mr. Means. Commonsensible is Dowd's declaration: "We want as much employment for our men as possible at a fair living wage, but . . . we want to be on good terms with the exhibitors, because after all they pay the freight. . .

ZONING DISTRESS

Fuming, wrangling for three months in an effort to concoct a satisfactory zoning schedule, independent theatre owners and circuit chiefs in Los Angeles have appealed to the local Film Board of Trade to call an unofficial meeting for distributors, exhibitors, affiliated or not, to apply the iron in a new attempt to straighten the situation. On one point alone are both sides agreed: the necessity of price zoning as the only remedy for theatre rackets, two-for-ones, giveaways, bought previews, dual-billing. Immediate relief from numerous existing evils is seen as coming from an effective zoning program in the district. . .

PERENNIAL WESTERN

Staunch in his allegiance to his field of success is Tom Mix, perhaps greatest of all cinematic stars of the screen's early backbone, the Western. In Kansas City, vaudeville touring last week, Mix proved the courage of his convictions, announced early formation of a new company, in which he and the foremost writer of Western fiction, prolific Zane Grey, would be partners, Grey to write, Mix to produce, star. November will see the start of production. Thinking of his "kid admirers," the hero of many a small boy's dreams has no desire to "rob banks, steal horses, hold up stage coaches, gamble, get drunk." His own boss, the youngsters will see "honor and romance and clean action." With hard cash, Mix will back his firm belief that the Western is not passe. . . .

CAREER vs. MARRIAGE

Automatically becoming subjects in one more experiment revolving about the modern complexity, career vs. marriage, Gloria Stuart, young Universal player, and husband Blair Gordon Newell, promising sculptor, have entered into an unique compact. For one year they will remain apart, living alone, having concluded: "Our work prohibits devoting much of our time to each other." No budding Renoites are this pair, they insist, but rather two artistic temperaments, trying to give each other an opportunity to steer around marital reefs. Hence, the marriage recess. Frowned upon yesterday, perhaps, such a marital bargain today brings a tongue-cluck of sympathy. . . .

MEMORIES REVIVED

Many and many a long day has passed since motion picture history was made at the old Biograph studio in New York's Bronx Borough. Now reported under serious consideration are plans for reopening the elderly plant, aimed at independent production, with none less than the Empire Trust Company called financially interested. Though denying reports of substantial backing, RCA Photophone said discussions had been held for installation of RCA equipment in the event plans materialized. Numerous long memories will be stirred to recollection if once more the hum of activity pervades the old Biograph studio. . .

REEL'S RIVAL

New, startling possible rival of the motion picture and especially the newsreel, comes to light via a press dispatch from Madrid, in Spain, where an Argentine youth, Farando Crudo, has demonstrated his so-called photoliptophone. Virtually talking newspapers could very possibly be the result of development of the invention. Applying the principle of the sound film, the magical photoelectric cell, the invention, through photography of sound waves, makes records of paper, printed from the negative, which may be printed in newspaper, magazine. The paper is placed on a revolving cylinder in reproduction; a ray of light picks up the sound waves, reproducing the sound, as the needle operates in the phonograph. Yet may we purchase a talking newspaper on the corner, hear the news at home, without benefit of newsreel. . .

SLIDING UPWARD

Too slippery is the new sliding scale of sound film values employed by the county in setting tax assessments, say Los Angeles exchange men, rating the slip at 150 to 300 per cent above last year's figures. Assessor man declares allowance has been made for slower depreciation of silent films. Exchange man deponeth not, says fair rate on films with depreciation of from nothing to three months would be $12.50 a reel. Present scale is $50 on film with depreciation of from nothing to three months; $30, one to two months; $15, two to three months. The end is not yet. . .

ACTIVE ERPI

Happy indication of increased activity in time of trial is the gleeful announcement from general sales manager C. W. Bunn of Electrical Research Products that more than 500 United States film houses have contracted for installation of Western Electric wide range equipment during the past three months. Already have 200 been completed. The "corner" may at last be more than a dream. . . .

95 PER CENT OF 1,100 EXHIBITORS WANT DOUBLE FEATURING STOPPED

Many of Them Have Found That Practice Does Not Pay, Says Kuykendall, and Favor Support of Code Abolishing Policy

Ninety-five per cent of America's theatre owners are definitely opposed to double featuring. Of eleven hundred representative exhibitors who replied to a questionnaire sent out by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, all except 5 per cent declared themselves against the practice.

Many of the exhibitors who have put themselves on record against double featuring have been showing two features on a program over a period of years, but according to Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, they have discovered that the practice does not pay. They are willing, with the support of a code to prohibit duals and enforce the provisions against them, to lend support to complete and absolute abolishment. New England was the only section which showed defense of the double feature predominant.

In Milwaukee alone, 75 per cent of the exhibitors in the county this week agreed to the new uniform zoning and clearance schedule, which bars double featuring. Most of the provisions of the agreement are already in effect, with the exception of those referring to the sale of coupons and thrift books, these becoming effective August 14. The plan also provides against gifts and student tickets.

Agitation Steadily Growing

The agitation against dual features has grown steadily for two years, and though there is considerable defense of them from independents and sections of the country where they have long been a practice, it was pointed out that by the time the autumn season is in full swing, double featuring is likely to be a thing of the past as a general practice.

In the original tentative exhibition code, drawn up in June by major distributor and exhibitor representatives, there appeared two clauses dealing with the double feature situation. The first clause read as follows:

No exhibitor shall (except in territories where under the provisions of an adopted maximum clearance and zoning schedule double features are expressly permitted) exhibit two or more features on the same program.

The second clause urged that distributors refuse to permit the exhibition of their pictures on double feature programs in towns or communities where a majority of the exhibitors are opposed to the practice.

Specifically, these two clauses threw the matter into the hands of the exhibitors themselves and, as is the case with the final adoption of a code of fair competition under the Recovery Act, the majority, or 75 per cent, of any industry, will rule.

A few weeks after the first draft of an exhibition code had been drawn up, the MPTOA met in Chicago, and a second draft was drawn. The double feature clauses were changed, certain concessions being omitted. The first clause dealing with the situation in the second code read: Distributors shall refuse to permit the exhibition of their pictures on double feature programs in towns or communities where a majority of the exhibitors are opposed to the practice, the exact wording and intent as the corresponding clause in the original, but the second clause said no exhibitor shall exhibit two or more feature motion pictures for one admission. A feature picture shall be deemed a motion picture originally made and released in more than 3,000 feet in length. This clause completely eliminated any concession of permitted double features under maximum zoning and clearance schedules.

"Double billing must be abolished," said Mr. Kuykendall Monday. "The public does not want it, the exhibitors are against it, and while the chances are that no distributor will actually refuse to sell his pictures in the future to those exhibitors who continue the practice, they certainly will do everything they can to persuade the theatre man against it.

"It is easy to understand in many respects how the situation came about originally. Too many small exhibitors were flooded with pictures they could not possibly use. They overbought, or were forced to overbuy to such an extent that their only way out was to resort to the double bill in order to fulfill their contracts. This particular phase is adequately provided for in both exhibition and distribution codes which have been tentatively proposed.

Doubles Unfair to Distributor

"The distributor also is to be considered in this matter. Elimination of duals would be more of a benefit to him than a loss to those exhibitors who have maintained the practice for a long time. Of necessity the distributor cannot get as high rentals for his pictures on double bills. If this is to be a code of fair competition and trade practice it follows that it would be most unfair to continue to force the distributor to accept low rentals for duals, for producers to turn out cheaper pictures, which they would be forced to do in order to meet the low rentals, and generally jeopardize product."

The independent exhibitors, producers and distributors feel, however, that the entire matter should be left in the hands of the individual theatre man. Their contention is that the double bill has advantages which permit the exhibitor to arrange programs with a diversified appeal. A few independents, however, believe that without double featuring an opportunity would be provided to better the quality of their product in order to compete on an equitable footing. Other independents say that the move of major distributors and exhibitors to abolish double features is "their last move in their fight for life."

Independent producers and distributors for years have vigorously defended the double bill policy. Typical of their opinion is that voiced this week in Hollywood by W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram, who, in declaring for a concerted drive toward the return of duals, intimated they were the salvation of "little independent houses, as well as independent producers."

"Several of the smaller major studios," said Mr. Johnston, "have benefited materially from the present tendency toward dual bills." He added that the matter should be left entirely to the judgment of the individual exhibitor. Any ban against doubles would be in opposition to the national economic program, as it inevitably would close smaller houses, Mr. Johnston declared.

Sentiment among the majority of the independents is that they will support a code which either ignores the situation completely or leaves the matter to be decided by patronage.

Seventy-five Per Cent of Milwaukee Exhibitors Agree to Zoning Schedule Barring Dual Bills in the County

Theatre Would Be Reclassified

In the schedule drawn up in Milwaukee this week every contract negotiated during the 1933-34 and 1934-35 seasons shall contain the following clauses, according to the terms of the schedule:

"The photoplays herein licensed are to be played only on a single feature program and the exhibitor agrees that if he should play any feature on this contract with another feature, he shall thereupon forfeit all right with respect to the remaining unplayed pictures herein. The exhibitor acknowledges that this clause has been added at his request and hereby agrees not to enjoin or in any wise resort to legal recourse in an effort to procure further releases which would become available hereunder if same had not been violated by the exhibitor."

This clause is to be part of every contract, and failure to include it subjects the exhibitor to reclassification of his theatre. The schedule was drawn up under the supervision of Fred S. Meyer, president of the MPTO of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, Inc., and is being submitted to individual distributors.

"There must be brought about a better spirit of cooperation and understanding between all branches of the motion picture industry, major and independent alike," said Mr. Kuykendall.

"There is no doubt," said Norman H. Moray, in charge of Vitaphone sales, Tuesday, "that more and more exhibitors have come to appreciate the definite box-office value that a star name in a short brings to the box-office when advertised. With double features headed for 'no-man's land,' it becomes the duty of every short subject producer to supply the exhibitor with every possible box-office help. Give the exhibitor real star values, make it easy for him to sell these stars to his public, and we need never worry about the double feature."

Harry M. Warner announced this week that in the future the company definitely will not sell film to be played on a double bill.

BETTER FILMS COUNCILS BOOSTING THEATRE INTAKE THROUGH PUBLICITY

Percentage of Endorsed Films Since Formation of Council Raised in St. Louis; Grosses Show Consistent Increase

Exhibitors of St. Louis, cooperating to the fullest extent with civic reviewing organizations, have found their grosses showing a consistent increase week by week for two and one-half years. Organized free publicity from Better Films Councils throughout the country, through their listings of recommended pictures, are pointed to as a factor in such a development as that at St. Louis, where the latest annual report of the local Better Films Council shows that out of 284 features reviewed by five separate committees, 92 were recommended for the entire family, 139 for adults, 52 for young adults and 1 for children.

In the autumn of 1929, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America selected 20 key cities and listed the percentage of pictures in those cities which had been recommended by previewing groups. Most of these cities were selected on the basis of complaints from women's clubs as to the quality of motion picture entertainment they had been receiving. It was discovered in this survey that there was a wide variation of percentage of endorsed films, running all the way from 98 per cent in Beloit, Wis., to 40 per cent in St. Louis. The population of Beloit is 23,611, St. Louis 821,960.

Recommendations Increase

Today the percentage of recommended films shown in St. Louis first and subsequent run houses is nearly as high as it was in Beloit two years ago.

Early in February of this year, Motion Picture Herald published an analysis of the Box Office Champions department which showed that unsophisticated films are as big money-makers as any other type and that 80 per cent of the Champions of 1932 had been endorsed by national previewing groups.

At that time, Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the MPPDA, said: "It's all a matter of getting the exhibitor to cooperate with the civic groups to battle their way out of the depression and put the motion picture on the high level where it belongs. What is more important, through the medium of these (endorsed) lists, the largest potential audience in history be built from the ranks of juveniles."

The St. Louis experiment has tended to reflect realization of Mr. Milliken's prophecy, and is backed by an imposing array of detailed reports for each of the six first-run theatres in the Missouri city.

In framing the work of the St. Louis Better Films Council when it was organized two and a half years ago, two courses of action were open to the group, said the annual report. That of negative criticism and force was vetoed in favor of persuasion and a constructive program, with a policy of preserving complete independence. Pictures were selected and endorsed in the interests of Better Films constituencies.

The working method adopted by each committee involved the reviewing of each picture before its showing and the posting of reports in various civic and private organizations. A committee was appointed for each first run theatre. The reports were broadcast over radio station KMOX each Saturday morning, and they were printed in club magazines or bulletins; given out at meetings of member organizations; posted on 11 bulletin boards of libraries, YMCA, and clubs. These reports classified each picture for "Adult," "Adult and Young Adult," "Family" audiences, and each was rated "Excellent," "Very Good," "Good," "Fair," or "Poor." This information was made available to all theatre owners and was used to help in building programs for Friday Family Nights.

Of the 284 features reviewed, 13 were rated "Excellent"; 48, "Very Good"; 163, "Good"; 48, "Fair"; 5, "Poor," and 7 were not recommended.

Neighborhoods Cooperate

Forty-eight neighborhood theatres have been cooperating with the St. Louis Better Films Council to present suitable family programs on Fridays, and an average of 21,202 children have attended the Friday night shows in the last year.

All forms of theatre advertising carefully were scrutinized, especially newspaper, and only 10 protests were received during the year. Four protests were made on stage shows. Out of the 10 advertising protests, seven were made on the basis that the copy was misleading.

According to the report, surveys proved that few children attend pictures early in the week and for that reason it was considered necessary to adopt some form of special "entertainment time" for them. The success of this plan was borne out in the 21,202 children's admissions on Friday nights.

Mrs. Arretus Franklyn Burt, president of the council, reported that she was a guest speaker at 15 large group meetings and made short talks to a number of smaller groups. Mrs. Burt made 27 broadcasts and held 44 conferences with industry leaders, including Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, who has been largely instrumental in the success of the Council.

With all theatres in St. Louis, outside of the first runs, using double feature programs, and with 92, or about one-third of the product, approved for Family showing, it was necessary for theatres to draw on the pictures recommended for adult audiences or adult and young adult audiences, in order to complete Friday Family Night shows. The Council requested theatres not to show certain adult features either for Family Night or during the week ends. These requests were granted whenever possible. In other cases, at the suggestion of the Council, many scenes were taken out of feature pictures before they were shown in neighborhood houses.

The chief benefit to the exhibitor was noted in the large amount of free and unsolicited publicity he received when pictures were approved by the committees. The Council has followed a conservative line of action, publicizing matters considered necessary but not drawing attention to the actual functioning of the Board, and not emphasizing the activities of any individuals.

48 Neighborhood Houses Cooperate; 21,202 Is Average Child Attendance on Family Nights With Selected Films

Said the Speaker's Bureau, under the supervision of Mrs. Jasper Blackburn:

"Perhaps our greatest weapon is publicity. To be effective we must give publicity to and increase the patronage of worthwhile pictures. For after all, the box-office finally determines what shall be shown in the theatre. The 'movie magnates' can no more go along producing and showing pictures at a loss than can the manufacturer or the merchant face a continual loss in their business."

"St. Louis is the first big city which has demonstrated that cooperation with civic groups can be as successful as it has been in the small towns," said Mr. Milliken this week.

Organization members of the Better Films Council of St. Louis include the Board of Religious Organizations; the Child Conservation Conference; College Club of St. Louis; Conference of Jewish Women; Delphian Council; International Council of Catholic Alumnae; Joint Council of Women's Auxiliaries; 8th District Missouri Federation of Women's Clubs; Parent-Teachers of Hosmer Hall; St. Louis Council of Parent-Teachers, and the County Council; St. Louis Tercentenary Shakespeare Society; War Mothers; Wednesday Club of St. Louis; Women's Auxiliary Twelfth Engineers; Women's Chamber of Commerce of St. Louis, and the Women's Christian Temperance Union. Cooperating with these organizations are the Daughters of the American Revolution and the Patrons Alliance.

Universal Club Outing Scheduled for August 8

The Universal Club will hold its annual mid-summer outing on August 8, with a boat ride and dinner scheduled for Roton Point Park, Conn. The home office employees' organization will be entertained en route by the John G. Thomas Orchestra.

Sign Deal to Operate 70 Paschall Theatres

Contracts have been signed between Publix trustees and R. J. O'Donnell and Karl Hoblitzelle for operation by the latter of approximately 70 theatres formerly handled by E. W. Paschall in Texas. With the deal becoming effective immediately, a new corporation will be formed to operate the houses.

ROSENBLATT MEETS FILM LEADERS IN NEW YORK AUG. 8 TO SPEED CODE

Thousands Expected to Benefit by Blanket Code Operation; Many Employers Sign; Warner Calls Managers' Meeting

A crucial week in the progress of the National Industrial Recovery movement of the Administration is underway. The blanket code went into nationwide operation Tuesday, while efforts were speeded to complete the codes of leading industries. From the motion picture business a large number of messages were received by the Administration insuring support.

Most of the integral parts of the film industry started this week on the new 35 and 40-hour work week basis. Benefit is expected to accrue to thousands of industry employees in the lower wage classifications by the minimum wage provisions, a minimum of $15 a week for "white collar" workers in cities of 500,000 or over, together with a 40-hour week. Mechanical workers have a 40 cents an hour minimum with a 35-hour week.

Companies in Industry Sign

Thousands of copies of the blanket code agreement were distributed throughout the industry late last week. Ameranglo, Warner-First National, Loew's, Inc., Columbia, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and the Rialto Theatre, New York were among those employers who had signed the agreement by the beginning of the week.

Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Bros., who followed his wire to the President pledging the company's support of the re-employment program by immediately raising employee salaries to conform, has instructed every Warner district and branch manager to meet him in New York and Chicago to draw up plans for helping the President's program in each man's territory. At the same time, the men will be instructed in the company's policy for the new season.

Mr. Warner said the cooperation of the Warner organization of some 30,000 employees will be thrown behind the Administration's efforts.

"It is impossible to get back on a sound basis until salaries are so re-adjusted that those of the overpaid and the underpaid meet on an equitable level that will afford a living wage for all," Mr. Warner declared.

Work was started this week by Vitaphone, the Warner short subject subsidiary, on a special two-reel picture entitled "The New Deal," to be made available for theatres, schools, clubs and other non-theatrical showing.

Seek 48-Hour Week

At a meeting Tuesday of the Motion Picture Theatre Industry of the Metropolitan District a resolution was passed asking they be placed under the temporary code, with a 48-hour week, applying to retailers, until the motion picture code is completed. The resolution pointed out that film exhibition is a "seven-day proposition," paralleling the conditions of retail stores, service corporations and restaurants, and the 40-hour week would work a hardship on it. The group, however, signed the blanket agreement.

The 40-hour plan with a $14 minimum would mean employment for about 200 additional persons for a circuit of approximately 100 houses and an addition of $3,000 weekly to the payroll.

Speedy coordination of exhibition and distribution codes was anticipated Wednesday night with the calling for Thursday of the first joint meeting of the various code sub-committees of the two branches at MPPDA headquarters in New York.

The exhibition code proposes elimination of score charges except on existing contracts. The distribution code, completed at a meeting of sales managers Wednesday, does not refer to score charges. The exhibition code would permit rejection of 18 per cent of all pictures in contracts for more than 10 films, without payment. The distributors would permit 15 per

"I have sent the following wire to producer, distributor and exhibitor organizations of the motion picture industry:

"'The motion picture industry, presently divided into groups and factions, must compose its differences and unite so far as possible, to submit a code at the earliest moment. I understand that various groups are working separately. They must work together.

"'I am calling a meeting of all organizations at the assembly room of the Association of the Bar Building at 42 West 44th street, New York City, for Tuesday morning, August 8, at 10 a.m. This is not an industrial hearing, but is to formulate a compact, representative, authorized group for code formulation purposes.

"'Please have three, or a lesser number, of authorized representatives of your organization present who will at once engage in the serious work of formulating a code.'

"If there are any bonafide motion picture organizations now working on codes who have been overlooked, I will appreciate hearing from them immediately at the Commerce Building at Washington and will arrange for their representation.

"Counsel of all organizations invited can be present if they desire, and any group can have present more than three representatives, but I prefer to keep the numbers small.

"Your representative is likewise cordially invited to attend."

(Signed) SOL. A. ROSENBLATT,
Deputy Administrator,
National Recovery Administration.

Rosenblatt, Kemp, Paddock Handling Amusement Codes

Sol A. Rosenblatt, Philip Kemp and Major R. B. Paddock are the three deputy commissioners of General Hugh Johnson's NIRA staff who will represent the federal government in its relations with the various branches of the amusement business. The commissioners will deal as deputy administrators of the National Industrial Recovery Act, advising principals during the formulation of codes, and presiding at hearings when codes are presented. During the two-year life of the codes, the deputies will act in supervisory capacities as official contacts between the government and branches of the industry.

Mr. Rosenblatt will handle the code situation in the motion picture industry and in the fields of vaudeville, burlesque, opera, theatricals, circus and broadcasting also, as it affects music publishers, all theatre operations, performers, carnivals and amusements not otherwise specified.

Deputy Commissioner Rosenblatt already has held several conferences on a code with representatives of amusements, and on Monday made his first official appearance in New York in connection with a code for the industry, holding private conferences at the Astor hotel with William Elliott, president of the IATSE; Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the TOCC; Joseph N. Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians; a representative of the MPPDA, and with leaders in the independent field.

Entire Career at Law

Mr. Rosenblatt was born 33 years ago in Omaha, Neb. He has spent his entire career as an attorney-at-law in the motion picture business.

Graduated from Harvard University and from Harvard Law School, Mr. Rosenblatt some eight years ago, entered the law offices of Nathan Burkan, well-known motion picture attorney of Broadway.

During his association with the Burkan firm, Mr. Rosenblatt has handled, at one time or another, the various and intricate legal and economic phases of practically every branch of the motion picture business and allied branches. One of his most recent appearances before the federal bar in New York was in connection with the receivership hearings on the Paramount Publix case. He represented the Burkan organization, which is the legal voice of the important Paramount creditors' committee headed by Frank A. Vanderlip and including some of the largest unsecured creditors, among them Electrical Research Products.

Mr. Rosenblatt's associates know him as "an excellent trial man and a good lawyer." He resigned from the Burkan organization

DISCIPLINING ASKED FOR SYLVIA SIDNEY

Paramount Files Charges With Academy, Saying Star Walked Out on Picture; Player Says Physician Advised Long Rest

Tuesday Mr. Al Wilkie, publicity manager for Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, issued to the press the following copy:

"Violating the cherished tradition of the acting profession, that a part once begun cannot be abandoned, Sylvia Sidney yesterday became the first actress to walk out of a picture before its completion. Despite the fact that she had received full salary during her recent illness, and that the studio merely asked her to remain in Hollywood until she recovered, so that she could finish her work in Maurice Chevalier's new picture for Paramount, 'The Way to Love,' now two-thirds completed, Miss Sidney preferred to convalesce on an airplane which she boarded yesterday afternoon en route to New York and Europe.

"As she stepped aboard the plane at Grand Central airport with B. P. Schulberg and a party of friends, charges were filed against her with the conciliation committee of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. In brief, the complaint said:

Throat Operation Performed

"1. Miss Sidney started the picture June 14 and played in it until July 13, when she notified the studio she would have to have an operation performed on an enlarged throat gland. This operation was performed the following day.

"2. Because her personal physician stated she could not return to work, Paramount sent Doctors Carl C. Cowin, John P. Lordan and Roland Cummings, noted specialists, to examine Miss Sidney on July 26. The medical board reported that Miss Sidney could return to work within a comparatively short time with no detriment to her health.

"3. On July 27 Emanuel Cohen, vice-president of Paramount Productions, Inc., wrote Miss Sidney stating he did not demand her return on any specified date, that she would not be asked to work until she had fully recovered. Mr. Cohen requested, however, that she not leave Los Angeles until her convalescence was over and her physical condition positively established.

"4. The expense of retaking scenes in which Miss Sidney already has been photographed will add more than $100,000 to the cost of the picture.

"5. In addition to serious monetary loss involved, Paramount feels that Miss Sidney's continued refusal to return to work is prejudicial to the rights of her fellow actors in the cast, who will be compelled to remain available on half salary until production is resumed. Maurice Chevalier will be forced to duplicate his work for a period of many weeks without compensation.

"6. Paramount states that Miss Sidney's refusal to return to work sets up a highly dangerous precedent in the acting profession, one which, if countenanced and permitted, will inevitably undermine the very foundation of the acting profession, both on the stage and screen —that a part once begun cannot be abandoned; that the show must go on.

"Paramount asks the Academy to take not only such measures as may in its judgment be fitting to restrain Miss Sidney from her action or to discipline her but to formulate and declare a rule of conduct for all artists which will make 'a recurrence of such professional anarchy impossible.'

"Production on the English version of 'The Way to Love' was halted on July 13 when Miss Sidney underwent her operation. The French production of the same picture was immediately placed into work under Norman Taurog's direction, and upon its completion Miss Sidney was to have continued with the English version, the cast having two weeks work to complete.

"According to Schulberg, Miss Sidney's physicians urged her to take a long rest 'to prevent a recurrence of the throat ailment.'

"Miss Sidney boarded an especially chartered western air express plane at Grand Central airport late yesterday afternoon bound for San Francisco. The party left the Northern City on a United Boeing plane last night. In the group, besides Mr. Schulberg and Miss Sidney, were Mrs. Beatrice Sidney, the actress' mother, Mr. and Mrs. Marion Gering, the former her director, Bertram Allenberg, business manager for Schulberg productions, Mr. Marchetti, attorney, and Joe Leffert, who will act as guide on the party's vacation through Europe."

Sidney Complaint to Producers' Branch

The complaint against Sylvia Sydney, formally filed by Paramount late Monday, automatically goes to the Academy producers branch, which, coincidentally, is headed by B. P. Schulberg, as chairman. The committee will decide whether the matter should be given a hearing, although, in the meantime, Miss Sidney was asked by wire to appoint a representative within four days.

From Hollywood came word that the executive committee of the actors branch of the Academy had sent a dramatic wire to Miss Sidney, signed by Adolphe Menjou, Hedda Hopper, Chester Morris, Reginald Barlow, Warner Baxter, which read, in part:

"It has come to our attention that you have left the cast of your picture and contemplate an extended trip to Europe. If it is humanly possible to regain sufficient strength to return to work and complete your engagement, we earnestly beseech you to do so.

"No leading player has ever been known in the history of the stage or screen ever to violate the ethics of the profession. We beg you to consider, and do not by any action place everlasting stigma upon your fellow players. We know that as the good trouper that you are will come through and let the show go on."

Release by Paramount of the Sylvia Sidney "walk-out" story to the press of the nation was the signal for reporters to storm the airports both at Chicago and Newark. The newsmen reported that she appeared quite "annoyed" at the charges, which she denied as being "all bosh!"

Miss Sidney said that she did not walk out on any picture, and that, instead of harming her employers, Paramount, she was actually doing them a favor in thinking first of her health, so that she could regain her strength and carry out the rest of her contract. There was nothing in her contract, she told reporters, to prevent her from returning home if she was ill.

Nor was the picture halfway through production, she asserted, but only in the third day of filming. The scenes in which she had appeared were minor ones which could be refilmed with little expense, Miss Sidney told the press. She agreed that studio physicians had examined her and pronounced her fit to work, but she said "they treated me like a nobody" and did not make a thorough investigation of her condition.

Motion Picture Club at Outing

With the thermometer flirting most successfully with the 100 degree marker, and the humidity rising into everyone's hair, the undaunted members of the Motion Picture Club of New York and their numerous guests, to a total number of 150, boarded a boat at 10:45 Wednesday morning, bound for Bear Mountain, up the Hudson, and the Club's annual summer outing.

Appetites were effectually squelched aboard, and the afternoon was featured by fat men's races (in this heat!); tennis matches between Ed Finney of the AMPA and Louis Nizer of the Club, and Al Adams of AMPA and Jack Alicoate of Film Daily, the four later playing doubles, and two baseball games. The first game, between AMPA and the Club, ended in a tie score, 2-2, at the end of the third inning. The most sensational play of the sterling game came in the last, or third, inning, when Charles Goetz, trapped between third base and the home plate, was tagged out for the best reason in the world: he was too tired to run, or even walk, in either direction.

The afternoon over, the outing ended with a dinner at the Bear Mountain Inn in the evening.

FROM THE FLOOR

A number of oldtimers who haven't been seen around conventions for some time turned up at the Chicago meeting of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association. Among them was Max Rubin of Detroit, now operating the Amusement Supply Company in that city.

Aaron Saperstein, president of Allied Theatres of Illinois, made an extra visit to the Stevens to look over the latest theatre equipment. He pronounced it a fine exhibit.

N. D. Golden of the Motion Picture Division of the Department of Commerce, who has always been a valued ally of the motion picture interests, was about the busiest man at the convention answering questions on how the code will affect equipment folk.

Despite a broken leg Irving Fensin managed to cover plenty of ground in meeting all the dealers.

All cards on the table was the policy urged for manufacturers and dealers by J. E. Robin in his opening address.

San Francisco was well represented, what with L. G. Dolliver of the Western Theatrical Equipment Company and R. O. Bemis of the W. G. Preddy Theatre Supply Company.

R. P. Bedore of the Chicago Cinema Equipment Company had a new motor driven color wheel on display that struck the fancy of many dealers.

Walter Green, president of National Theatre Supply Company, shook hands with many old friends when he visited the exhibits Friday. He was accompanied by Oscar Oldknow.

H. C. Dusman, secretary-treasurer of the association, arrived early and received the congratulations of many dealers on the fine way he has conducted his office in the past year.

W. F. Barthel of Guercio-Barthel cut short a fishing trip in order to take part in convention activities.

Bill Kunzman, O. F. Neu and L. Marks had to take a bow on the convention floor for their fine efforts in connection with preliminary details and arrangements for exhibits.

Covering most miles to attend the convention was Tom Shearer of the B. F. Shearer Company who journeyed from Seattle.

SUPPLY ASSOCIATION ADOPTS OWN CODE

And Manufacturers, With Own Organization Formed at Chicago Convention of Independents, To Prepare Instrument

Out of the third annual convention of the Independent Theatre Supply Association at Chicago last weekend emerged plans for two trade practice codes, one for the dealers and adopted by them, another for the manufacturers, who formed their own organization.

Decision to lend the full support of the association to the Roosevelt Administration's trade recovery project was made one of the main objectives of the gathering and results were manifest in two directions. The dealers adopted a code which has for its objective the elimination of faulty trade practices and includes rules governing discounts permissible under list prices.

The manufacturers' code, which will not be completed for several weeks, is to be under the eye of the board of governors, which includes Henry Strong, Oscar F. Neu, E. A. Williford, William Kunzman and Oscar Holmes.

J. E. Robin was re-elected president of the Independent Theatre Supply Association, with L. G. Dolliver as vice-president, and H. C. Dusman as secretary treasurer.

The new organization of manufacturers, with the official title Theatre Equipment and Supply Manufacturers Association, chose as president E. A. Williford, of National Carbon Company; vice-president, O. F. Spahr, head of Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company; secretary-treasurer, Oscar F. Neu, of Neumade Products Corporation.

Forty of the manufacturers had exhibits at the showrooms in the Stevens hotel, headquarters of the convention. The newest developments in the equipment field were in attractive array.

Attendance and accomplishments of the gathering were gratifying to the executives of the association, who pointed particularly to the impressive exhibits. The leaders called attention to the fact that they are making every effort to strengthen and solidify their organization and are placing their cards on the table with National Theatre Supply Company. While National is not a member of the organization, Walter Green, president, was at the Congress hotel and in touch with developments.

New members added to the association were announced as follows: American Theatre Supply Company, Toledo; Joe Goldberg, Amusement Supply Company, Detroit; Independent Theatre Supply Company, New York; Queen Feature Service, Birmingham, and Continental Theatre Accessories, New York.

Urges Rejection Contract Clause

Milburn Kenworthy, owner of the Kenworthy theatre in Moscow, Idaho, and president of Allied Amusements of the Northwest, has initiated a movement to control the exhibition of objectionable pictures in his territory. He has advocated that members of Allied Amusements, comprising numerous independent owners of the Northwest, demand a new clause in contracts permitting them to reject pictures they consider objectionable.

Provision is made in the proposed clause for arbitration of the exhibitor's decision of rejection in the event the exchange questions it. Copies of the clause have been sent to all officers of Allied Amusements for their opinion.

The clause, which would also permit the exhibitor to refuse payment for the objectionable picture, follows:

"It is further agreed that in case a picture is produced that contains sex angles or situations or vulgar or smutty remarks or situations that the exhibitor considers objectionable, that the exhibitor will not have to play or pay for the picture. Provided, however, if the producer or distributing exchange questions the exhibitor's decision the matter shall be left to the judgment of a committee of two, one to be selected by the exhibitor and one by the exchange. In case these two cannot agree a third is to be called in by the committee of two and the decision of the three shall be final and binding on both parties."

cent cancellation provided the first 5 per cent are canceled without payment, the second 5 per cent to be paid for on the basis of 50 per cent of the contract price, and the final 5 per cent with full payment. The distribution code conforms to the 40-hour week and $15 minimum wage.

Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, who on Monday attended the New York meeting of the Federation of the Motion Picture Industry of America, said Wednesday that the exhibition code's present 36-hour week would be made to conform to the blanket code's 40-hour maximum. He goes to Washington Friday to meet NIRA executives.

The first indication of near-completion of an industry code was divulged last week by Nicholas M. Schenck in his wire pledging the support of Loew's and MGM to the blanket code in which the film executive expressed the hope that the industry code would be completed before August 31.

In pledging his support of the President's Program last week Harry M. Warner, president of Warner-First National, said that the company is announcing a payroll increase of $30,000 weekly, to take care of salary advances of several thousand employees who come under the $14 minimum wage provision.

Wage and hour schedules intended to comply with the blanket code were decided upon Friday at a meeting of the Motion Picture Laboratories Association at the Hotel Astor in New York. A minimum wage of $15 was decided upon with a 40-hour week for clerical workers and a minimum of 50 cents an hour with a 40-hour week for factory workers. The agreement applies to 16 laboratories in the East.

Theatre Crafts Mobilize

Mobilization of union theatre crafts got underway in New York Monday, when the executive board of the IATSE, representing affiliated theatre and studio labor met to formulate recommendations on wages and hours of work.

In New York Monday, Sol A. Rosenblatt, deputy administrator in charge of amusement codes, appointed by General Hugh S. Johnson, announced he would take no part in any discussions of a code or codes until it is definitely decided what form the final codes will take. Mr. Rosenblatt had been invited to sit in at a meeting of the Federation of the Motion Picture Industry at the Astor. It was then he announced that he is not at liberty to take part in discussions of tentative proposals. His chief function is to hear codes and to pass judgment upon them when they are completed, he said.

The Federation began a two-day meeting Monday to formulate a final draft for a code of independent production, distribution and exhibition. Present also were several representatives of the legitimate theatre. The possibility of conciliation with the MPPDA appeared "very remote," said P. S. Harrison, president of the Federation. The independents are determined to insure a free market for their products, he explained, but the Hays group "is equally determined that their monopoly shall continue."

Mr. Hays, who was not represented at the meeting, in a telegram to Mr. Harrison and speaking for the entire MPPDA, said he would be glad upon his return to New York from Hollywood to discuss views and proposals of the Federation's conference.

Mr. Rosenblatt, who recently consolidated the interests of the legitimate theatre under one code, was to have spoken at the Federation's banquet, but was called back to Washington early in the evening to attend a meeting of General Johnson's staff. Before leaving, however, he said that he was making definite plans to coordinate the various interests of the motion picture industry. He also said that while no arbitrary date for the submission of a film code has been set, the industry is expected to have a complete code ready prior to September 1.

The independents at Monday's meeting agreed the following were unfair trade practices:

1. Withholding of product from persons willing to purchase the same, that is denying the right to the exhibitor to buy, and to the producer-distributor to sell pictures.
2. Block booking.
3. Buying combines among exhibitors.
4. Interchangeability of playing time, and pooling of theatres.
5. Blind booking.
6. Over-buying, with the intent of keeping product from competing exhibitors.
7. Substitution of pictures without opportunity to exhibitor to determine whether the substituted product meets his favor.
8. Control of theatres by producers and distributors.

On Tuesday a code was completed, embodying the foregoing and with few additions. The full text appears on page 32.

"By immediately increasing wages and employment and reducing working hours, as you are expected to, you are making a sacrifice for which you cannot expect to be repaid for many months, or until general economic recovery is realized," Abram F. Myers told the Federation delegates at the final session Tuesday. "It is a gamble, but one worth taking."

Allied of New York State held a special session Wednesday at Albany to discuss a code for local exhibitors.

No interference with the union strike in Hollywood or any other labor disputes is planned by NIRA until codes have been approved, it was stated in Washington late Monday, after representatives of labor and a delegation of independent producers had conferred with officials.

All members of the Independent Motion Picture Producers Association met in Hollywood Monday to discuss a code which will be presented to Washington within 10 days.

Allied headquarters in Washington this week declared they have been literally "swamped" with exhibitor reports that strict enforcement of the blanket code "would bring about ruinous and fantastic results" in certain localities and theatres. Allied urged its members to send in word of all such examples "in hope that we may get early rulings on the more important ones."

In Chicago Monday, the Independent Theatre Supply Association, meeting in third annual convention, took action on codes for both manufacturers and supply dealers. The code adopted by the dealers is aimed at questionable trade practices and includes rules governing discounts permissible under discount prices. The manufacturers' code will not be ready for several weeks.

The Kansas Council of Christian Education this week launched a campaign to enforce stricter regulation of the industry in that state, and one suggestion was a boycott of objectionable pictures.

Unless there is immediate discontinuance of reported unfair competitive practices among Ohio exhibitors, it will precipitate state action, according to an announcement released last week by Governor White.

Members of the MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois last week endorsed the principles of the tentative exhibition code as proposed by the MPTOA. A wire was sent to the President in Washington pledging complete support.

The national code as drafted by the MPTOA committee in Chicago will be considered by the MPTO of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan at its annual convention early this month. It is expected that the unit will endorse the code without reservations.

Theatre Raises Salaries

Typical of many small theatres' reactions to the blanket code is the report this week that the Rose theatre, Hattiesburg, Miss., owned by A. H. Yeomans, increased the salaries of its staff and added one employee.

Allied Theatre Owners of the Northwest voted to comply with the voluntary wage agreement of the President. Employees of 300 independent theatres in Minnesota will receive wage increases and, in some cases shorter hours.

Bell & Howell, equipment manufacturer, announced an increase in pay for its several hundred workers and reduced working hours.

Eastman Kodak Company, and other companies representing 85 per cent of the photographic industry, this week submitted their code of fair competition, providing a minimum wage of 40 cents an hour for men and 35 cents for women on a 40-hour week basis. A hearing on the code is being held this week in Washington. The company on Tuesday granted a 10 per cent increase in salaries to all employees.

Jobs for 10,000 additional radio factory employees with an annual increase in the industry's payroll of $3,000,000 was the prospect held out Tuesday by the Radio Manufacturers Association as a result of the code filed by the association Saturday in Washington.

Major Film Laboratory, Inc., Tuesday announced a 20 per cent increase in personnel salaries and 50 cents an hour minimum for mechanical workers, as of August 1.

SCREEN PROPAGANDA COMMITTEE FORMING

Mobilization of the film industry to disseminate progaganda for Roosevelt's business recovery program was launched Wednesday by Frank R. Wilson, director of propaganda for NIRA.

A national committee of ranking film executives, with Harry M. Warner expected to be chairman, will be named, their duties being principally to prepare progaganda pictures and recruit the theatres' screens for showing them.

Ranking executives of all large film and theatre organizations will be on the committee, it is understood, among them Adolph Zukor, Sidney R. Kent, Nicholas M. Schenck, M. H. Aylesworth, Carl Laemmle, representative leaders of the various independent branches, with the five newsreels and their editors playing an important part.

STUDIO STRIKE PLACED IN ACADEMY HANDS; COMMITTEE HEARS CHARGES

Electrical Workers Return to Jobs But Leader Says IATSE Cannot Expect Its Support; Many Cameramen Also Back

The Hollywood studio strike situation apparently has been placed in the hands of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. On Monday night the Academy appointed a fact finding committee, which met Tuesday to hear the formal charges of five union heads. Members of the committee are Robert Fairbanks, Lewis Stone, Frank Lloyd, Carey Wilson, Max Parker and Tom Reed. Arbitration is expected to come more rapidly from the committee's work, but the results probably will not be binding, it was indicated.

Already producers have submitted their side of the case, but Pat Casey, producers' labor contact, has issued no statements regarding new terms. M. Briegarts, president of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, said Tuesday that the IATSE can expect no sympathy or support from his organization.

Electrical Workers Return

Electrical workers have returned to work, it was learned Tuesday, but the producers had not yet accepted the fact finding committee as an authoritative medium of arbitration. IBEW, on the other hand, accepted the committee, producers were to meet, with indications they will cooperate with the Academy group.

The producers disclaim completely any responsibility for the strike, maintaining that jurisdiction for the sound men's union rests with the IATSE.

On Sunday the striking technicians announced plans for a long siege to obtain higher wages and shorter hours. They expect to carry their case to the public.

The opening of the second week of the strike found producers as adamant as employees.

At a mass meeting Sunday night the sound section of the striking thousands authorized the dispatch of a letter to William Green, head of the American Federation of Labor, stating the union members did not wish to affiliate with the IBEW.

The move mirrored a dispute between producer and employee as to whether the strike actually was caused by a disagreement between two unions over jurisdiction. The producers have asserted, and the strikers denied, that the walkout was due to differences between the IBEW and the IATSE over control of the sound men.

Point to Ruling of 1921

The letter to Mr. Green said that a ruling adopted at the national labor convention in 1921 regarding respective duties of members of the two unions precludes affiliation of the sound men with the electrical workers.

In spite of the strike, new code hours went into effect Tuesday.

Representatives of the five unions telegraphed President Roosevelt and General Hugh S. Johnson protesting the possession or display of NRA emblems by the companies involved in the strike and against the acceptance of these companies into good standing in the recovery program setup until the refusal of the companies to accept collective bargaining has been settled satisfactorily.

Meanwhile the studios are proceeding with substitute help in the main, built around a nucleus of trained technicians. They say they are operating at about 90 per cent of normal.

Reports are that there were more pictures in work Tuesday than before the start of the strike, with seven each at Paramount, MGM and Warner; five at Radio; three each at Fox and Universal; two at Columbia; one at United Artists, and one at the Hal Roach studios.

Norman De Vol, a cameraman, was found dead from a bullet in his rooming house Monday. Reports were that he had been considerably agitated over the strike situation.

Many Others Return

Many other cameramen who had been forced to accept the decision of their unions have now returned to their jobs. Those reported as returning, all members of the American Society of Cinematographers, include Victor Milner, Charles Lang, Theo Sparkuhl, Leo Tovar, Harry Fischbeck and Karl Struss, all of Paramount; Arthur Rodd, Rex Wimpy, Hans Konecamp and George Barnes, of Warner-First National; William Daniels, Ollie Marsh, Hal Rossen and Max Fabian, of MGM; Nick Musuraca, Edward Cronjager and Henry Gerrard, all of RKO Radio; George Schneiderman of Fox, and Gregg Toland of United Artists.

Considerable apprehension had been expressed as to whether there might be a shortage of product, but a check-up revealed that all the major exchanges in most sections had enough top product in their vaults to keep all first-run accounts operating well into the autumn.

In accepting the offer of the Academy to meditate the strike, the unions Monday sent the following telegram to the group: "Only yesterday afternoon, Pat Casey, producers' representative, refused to meet employee representatives. We feel that producers positively have demonstrated the type of treatment which will be accorded all representatives of employee organizations, should the producers succeed in this attack on the principle of collective bargaining." At a conference with press representatives union leaders accused Mr. Casey of "kidding, stalling and pushing unions around for 18 months, and then injecting the IBEW jurisdiction claim."

It was claimed late last week that several actors and actresses had refused to work with non-union substitutes for striking technicians. Among those reported as sympathetic to the strikers were Mae West, the Four Marx Brothers, Warner Baxter, Wallace Beery and Nancy Carroll, all of whom, it was said, announced they would not resume production until union workers returned to their posts. Denials were issued from the various companies that their stars were involved in any way.

1933-34 Product Plans

Convening of Warner regional meetings at New York and Chicago this week brought the 1933 sales-convention season practically to a close. Announcement of 60 features by Warners (see page 29), and additional plans for companies which already had held conferences, brought the distributors' merchandising program for the 1933-34 season a step nearer completion. Developments of the week in the distribution field were:

Columbia decided to conduct a series of special showings for exhibitors in key cities during the next few weeks. Starting with a luncheon for New York owners at the Waldorf Astoria on Tuesday, each regional office will stage a similar good will get-together function at which 1933-34 product will be screened.

Union Jurisdiction Shown As Factor; More Films in Work Than at Start of the Strike; Distributors Push Their Plans

The company announced it will roadshow Frank Capra's "Lady for a Day," for which 35 screenings are planned in large cities.

Fox officials authorized plans for production of four features in August: "The Mad Game," "Smoke," "He Knew Women" and "Walls of Gold."

Joan of Arc Pictures was organized to roadshow "The Passion of Joan of Arc," a synchronized version of which was completed over the weekend by Pierre Arnaud. Herman Weinberg was engaged to handle a national exploitation campaign.

Aubrey Kennedy in New York

Aubrey Kennedy, head of Kennedy Pictures, arrived in New York from St. Petersburg, Fla., where he will produce some 22 features for 1933-34. Mr. Kennedy's program includes "Chloe," completed, and eight others, while George Melford, who has finished "Playthings of Desire," is scheduled to do "Tomcat," "Gambler's Throw" and seven others. Buster Keaton is contracted to appear in three yearly for the next two years.

Majestic franchise holders, assembled at the Drake hotel, in Chicago, heard Herman Gluckman, president, describe plans for increasing the 1933-34 budget to $2,500,000, to include 12 features designed for Class A houses, to be sold only in a group, and costing between $125,000 and $150,000. Three roadshows are planned, he said. About 50 attended the convention. All officers were re-elected with the exception of B. N. Judell, Chicago, who was replaced by Tony Lucchese, Philadelphia. The convention voted to weld the franchise holders into a national distributing unit, rather than state right exchanges.

Paramount Adds Musical

Paramount closed with Rowland and Brice for distribution rights to their musical, "Take a Chance," now in production at Astoria studio. This is the first "outside" production to be added to the Paramount 1933-34 schedule.

Radio Pictures is said to have set 21 features for percentage playing. The company announced a total of 52 for 1933-34. Fourteen miscellaneous features will be sold on percentage, also "The Lucky Seven," which includes "Anne Vickers," "Green Mansions," "Little Women," "Son of Kong," "Wild Cargo" and two others.

United Artists further emphasized the continuation of its individual selling policy, which will apply also to the Darryl-Zanuck group. Twenty-nine are scheduled for 1933-34, general release dates having been set on five: "Emperor Jones," released August 25; "Better Sweet," September 8; "Masquerader," September 1; "The Bowery," September 29; "Broadway Thru a Keyhole," October 13. The company will remake "Sorrel and Son," originally produced as a silent in 1927. Carroll Trowbridge, formerly eastern representative for the Fairbanks and Pickford units, was named a United Artists district manager, in charge of branches at Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Washington and Buffalo.

Universal's sales staff was enlarged this week with the appointment of James Hobbs to manage the Charlotte exchange. The company engaged Edmund Grainger, son of James R. Grainger, to become an associate producer.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

THEY CALL THE FUTTER BROTHERS, of Wafilms, the "junk-men" of filmdom, because they've made a business of salvaging what the "big brains" of the industry threw away.

In 1926, Walter and Fred Futter started buying up the negatives of bankrupt firms and amateur cameramen for a "stock-shot" library. The business has grossed $99,000 to date, on an investment of about $13,000. And despite the fact that Wafilm has 20,000,000 feet of film on its shelves, it is valued on the books at only one dollar. One hundred and eight thousand subjects are catalogued in the library.

It is impossible to tell which shots are valuable and which worthless. Fred Futter cites one instance where he sold 900 feet of negative of Canadian mounted police to a song "plugger" for $100. Later the songster returned the film to the Futters, gratis, and they sold it again to the Telephone company for $500.

Wafilms' minimum price for stock shots is $2.50 per foot. The highest price ever charged was that for the negative of a fight between a cobra and a mongoose. It brought $100 per foot. A shot of the eruption of Mount Vesuvius cost the purchaser $50 per foot; 165 feet showing an Eskimo fighting a polar bear sold for $5,000.

In 1928 the Futter brothers devised still another method of cashing in on studio "junk." They bought up odd ends of unexposed film and started the first "short end" business. They bought bits of unused film for one-half, three-fourths or one cent a foot, then patched it together and sold $78,000 worth in 1930, $68,000 in 1931. However, came the depression, and the short end business was dealt a staggering blow. Producers woke up to the fact that they had been giving away film that meant money to them. They began to make use of the odd ends themselves.

The appearance on Ray Johnston's Monogram lineup of two stories by the late Edgar Wallace, and of another on Phil Meyer's new Helbar schedule, lends further verification to the ability of one of the world's most prolific writers of detective stories.

Londoner Wallace held a theory that the closer a criminal managed to stay to Scotland Yard the better were his chances of escaping capture. Emile Gauvreau, New York editorialist, tells the story about one of Mr. Wallace's most notorious characters, who lived closer than the proverbial stone's throw to the main entrance of the New Yard. His identity did not become known until he sent for a police inspector to make a dying confession.

HARLEM moved back to 135th Street the other day, from Astoria, where Messrs. John Krimsky and Gifford Cochrane shot O'Neil's "Emperor Jones" with an assortment of African Negroes, West Indian Negroes and "sophisticated" Harlem urbanites. They had a great time, even the 250 flies, used in jungle scenes to add a note of reality.

The flies were etherized just enough so that, though they would fly about like flies in the best of spirits, they wouldn't on the other hand, fly off the set.

Levi Augustus, who doubled for Paul Robeson in some of the rougher work, was a little upset at first about salary. He felt that, as Mr. Robeson's double, he should receive twice Mr. Robeson's salary. This little misunderstanding as to the facts of life was explained to him at great length.

Modern improvements were installed in what seemed to be a thoroughly replete jungle. Typical improvement: heaters to warm up the water so that Robeson wouldn't get rheumatism during the long rehearsals. The swamp was fogged up at times with a little machine like a flit gun.

Hollywood talks more than Congress. A statistically-minded person on the Paramount lot has figured out that 30,000,000 words are delivered by actors and actresses each year in the production of motion pictures. Congress averages 26,000,000 words.

We are celebrating this year, according to a consensus among geologists, the two billionth anniversary of the birth of the world. They do not say whether this terrestrial globe has at last come of age, but they imply that it is getting along in years. Our motion picture industry is, in its present commercial form, only 37 years old. Yet we worry about the next week-end's receipts.

Because typical "locations" are mainly dependent upon nature, Hollywood's location men must be walking road maps. There are only nine of these specialists in the town and each has been with his respective studio more than ten years. Transporting of sound equipment is a major problem, and has doubled the importance of finding suitable places for filming near the studios. Since sound trucks weigh eleven tons and the average county bridge is made to support only six tons, permits frequently have to be obtained to fortify bridges or build new ones to support the additional load.

LYNN FARNOL'S picturesque phrases telling the world about those "gorgeous Goldwyn girls" can't hold a candle to the press agent's blurbs on the "Marcus Show of 1933," a burlesque presentation currently making weekly stands in middle western film theatres.

Advertising of the RKO Mainstreet in Kansas City described the show, labeled "La Vie Paree," this way: "Peeking over the transom at the gay night life of Montmartre. . . . A veritable bower of American Beauties, hand picked by A. B. (Abie?) Marcus, Master Connoisseur of Feminine Charms. Here are convoked at One Time and in a Single Place, in this COLOSSUS OF ALL EXTRAVAGANZAS, Nimble Nymphs, Voluptuous Houris, Chic Grisettes, Statuesque Odalisques, Dashing Demoiselles and Resplendent Mannequins."

A one-time "midnight frolic"—"no pictures all flesh, positively no children under sixteen admitted"—was, according to newspaper copy, "an orgy of Unbridled Jollity such as might regale Devotees of Texas Guinan, or the Gay Resorts of Montmartre and Mont Parnasse—As untrammeled as Bal Des Quartre Arts. Bring Your Own Horns."

The midnight performance was enticingly titled "A Night at the Folies Bergere." The advertising lured a standup crowd but what they thought of the show was something else again. Their "Bronx cheers" and catcalls seemed to imply that the performance failed to meet the promise of the advertising.

An eerie effect achieved by Cecil B. De Mille for his latest Paramount picture, "This Day and Age," is contained in a sequence where a youth is being buried, the entire scene having been shot from the dead boy's "viewpoint." Instead of the camera shooting at or down the grave, it was placed in a coffin-like box, with the camera and the photographer assuming a corpse-like position.

Throughout the entire proceedings, from the time the burial service starts until the earth is thrown in the grave, audiences will see it all from the strange position. The throwing of the dirt over the lens is the fade-out.

The telephone rang—someone wanted to know who was in the feature, "Today We Live." Gerry's new job is the renewal of an association formed 22 years ago when he was editor of the Buffalo Enquirer. "We can't make beer fast enough, and boy, it's great," he reported. "I was on the wagon for seven years, but I am now giving Schreiber a run." (Advt.)

ACADEMY WRITES OFF VOTES OF PRODUCERS

Bylaws Make Producing Companies Corporate Members Without Voice; Members To Act on Artist-Agent Code

The voice and vote of producing companies in the affairs of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences were ended officially on Tuesday, when the new bylaws of the Academy became effective. The new setup was overwhelmingly ratified last week, and is intended to create an entirely new structure, providing for:

Complete new elections immediately.

Submission of artist-agent-producer code for action by membership.

New policy toward producing companies—the Academy is placed in a clear position as the organization of the creative employee professions and crafts.

Action on general motion picture code under NIRA.

Report on the practical effects of producers' arbitration agreement.

Investigation of actors' working conditions and enforcement of 12-hour rest period between calls.

Extension of writers' credit regulations and protection.

Formulation of new codes by the individual branches.

Expansion of conciliation procedure and other Academy services.

The first step in the new program will be the election, under the new rules—designed to be "politics-proof"—of new officers, governors and branch executive committees. Machinery for this election is being developed and the organization will have its new leaders within 30 days. With the installation of new officers, governors and committeemen, the last of the "old order" of things will be passed in the Academy. Election of the governors and committee members will be made by secret ballot of the entire membership, and election of officers by an electoral board chosen by the electoral committee of the board and the executive committee.

Nominating Committee for Each

Each of the five branches will appoint a nominating committee. Those committees will then nominate candidates for the board of governors and the executive committee of their respective branches. The nominations will be forwarded to the executive secretary for posting on the bulletin board in the Academy office. By August 14, the secretary must forward ballots to the membership at large. Voting will close August 21.

A code of practice to govern employment negotiations between artist, agent and producing company will be the first code presented for the approval of the membership under the new bylaws. The committee has now completed its work by putting its conclusions from numerous hearings and discussions into the form of a code. This contains reforms which the committee said it believes will not only give the artist adequate protection but will give the agent full protection as well, "and will have sufficient 'teeth' to make a code that will really operate."

Some of the conditions which the code undertakes to outlaw from the industry include:

One-sided contracts, collection of unearned commissions, excessive commissions, neglect of the artist's interests by the agent, betrayal of trust, refusal of the agent to free an artist for whom he has not obtained employment, expensive legal battles, loss to the artist through agents being barred from studios, improper efforts by any producer to deprive the artist of his right to representation by his agent, and secret financial interest in any agency by a producer. (Text of the actors-writers-producers code appeared in MOTION PICTURE HERALD issue of June 24.)

Fight Against Abuses

The committee which drafted the agreement pointed out that its work has not been in the nature of a fight against agents, but rather a fight against the abuses of agency function. Its work was undertaken after both the agents and the producers had failed in attempts to solve the problems.

The new code has been based upon the premise that the agent is an employee of the artist. A number of agents have given their cooperation to the committee, although some do not fully approve of the pact.

Producing companies hereafter will be affiliated with the Academy as corporate members, according to the new arrangement, and will have no voice or vote in the organization's affairs. The Academy will be composed of five worker branches. The name of the producer's branch, to which executives previously belonged, will be changed soon.

New codes of ethics will be drafted for each of the branches; actors, directors, writers, technicians. Disciplinary provisions for each branch will be incorporated in the new codes. Benefits and services of the Academy hereafter will be limited to members only, with each branch setting its own qualifications for membership.

"From this point on," said J. T. Reed, Academy president, "the Academy can be whatever the members have the will to make it. The essential improvement brought about by the new bylaws is that the organization now has the machinery to enforce the policies which the members undertake. The sane, self-reliant use of this power will be the test of the reorganized Academy."

New Policy Toward Producers

The production colony recognizes that one of the most important immediate effects of the adoption of the new laws will be to put into effect definitely the new policy of the Academy toward the producing companies. The Academy is now clearly an employee organization. The creative workers may establish harmonious relations with the companies and cooperation will continue to be the aim of the organization, but in all such cooperation the Academy will represent the members as employees.

The fees paid by the companies, as corporate members without voice or vote, will be used solely for the financing of the work of a Research Council for production improvements.

Another point in the program concerns action on the industry's code of practice under the National Industrial Recovery Act, work on which is being continued by a subcommittee which already has submitted one report to the membership.

Sam Rork Dead; Veteran Producer Of Stage and Film

Samuel E. Rork, stage and screen producer, died in Hollywood hospital Monday of a heart attack. Mr. Rork had undergone an operation for a gall bladder ailment a week before. He was 63 years of age.

Sam Rork was born in Albany, N. Y., and entered the theatrical business at an early age. For 25 years he was associated with various ventures in the legitimate theatre field, working with and managing productions for William A. Brady, A. H. Woods and the Erlanger interests. Eighteen of those 25 years he was directly associated with A. M. Palmer. His last engagement in the theatre was as general manager for Fisher and Riley's original "Floradora" companies.

As a very young man, Rork sold operetta books at Wallack's theatre in New York. He then became a racetrack employee and secretary to the handicapper at Sheepshead Bay. Later he managed Wallack's, after which he affiliated with Mr. Palmer. After managing "Floradora," Mr. Rork produced "Trilby."

Seeking new fields, he went to the Coast to learn picture making under Mack Sennett and, when he considered he had acquired sufficient knowledge, he produced a picture independently as his official bow into the industry. After this he became personal representative for Mr. Sennett and in 1919 organized Katherine MacDonald Pictures Corporation and produced that company's first seven feature pictures. B. P. Feinman was associated with him in this venture.

In 1920 Mr. Rork sold his interests in the MacDonald corporation, and with Col. W. N. Selig organized Snowy Baker Productions. With Col. Selig he also organized Selig and Rork Productions, which, in 1921, was producing two-reel classics and single-reel animal comedies for Educational. During the same year he also produced "The Rosary" and three other features.

Later he made "Ponjola" and "Wandering Daughters" for release through First National, after which he produced six more features for that company, working at the United Studios. Late in 1926 he was taken ill and arthritis kept him confined to his bed for nearly three years.

After his recovery, in 1929, he produced a Will Rogers picture, "The Texas Steer," and in 1932 joined Fox as an independent producer. He was responsible for the comeback of Clara Bow in "Call Her Savage." At the time of his death Mr. Rork was still under contract to Fox and was to have produced another Bow feature.

Surviving are his wife and a daughter, Mrs. Paul J. Getty, formerly Ann Rork, motion picture actress.

PICTURE'S GROSS TEN TIMES COSTS SPEEDS INDUSTRY IN AUSTRALIA

Two Financially Powerful Companies Break Open Field and Are Making Money; Clears Way for Attracting Capital

by CLIFF HOLT
Sydney Correspondent

America may now be inclined to scoff at Australia as a film producing country, but it is well to remember that he who laughs last frequently laughs best. The producing business here is fast developing from a joke into a joker capable of taking a few tricks.

For the first time in our history as producers we have two financially powerful companies seriously engaged upon the job of making pictures as a practicable commervial venture. We have a dozen more in flotation. This may mean little to a country which can afford to pay its leading stars and directors in a week as much as we would pay a high court judge in a year, but it means a very great deal indeed to a colony where the production of pictures has always in the past been the shortest cut possible to insolvency.

Making Money, Too

Not only are these companies now busily engaged in making pictures, but they are also happily engaged in making money. From the first day that a camera shot a scene for an Australian film, the public's idea has been that the man who put up the cash for its production deserved to lose it. Now the idea seems to be gaining prevalence that he who hesitates to sink his money into Australian film production deserves to lose it equally as much. The reason is that Australian-made films were so successful in 1932, and that they have so readily found a market in Great Britain, whence highly remunerative returns have already started to trickle in to swell home coffers.

I wonder if America completely realizes that Australia made a picture last year at a cost of £7,000 which grossed, in Australia alone, the staggering total of £70,000. And that under the title "Down on the Farm" (it was "On Our Selection" here) it obtained remarkable bookings in England, where a market infinitely greater than ours is waiting to be conquered.

The facts this development reflects are rapidly forming the foundation of a secondary industry destined to become of immense industrial benefit to this country. The film companies of the United States grew out of the nickelodeon; yet here we are, starting off with all the benefit of America's experience, with all her profound knowledge at our disposal, and with only one supreme task confronting us—the task of converting that knowledge to our own use.

Certainly it is years since any imported picture—even million dollar productions—earned anywhere near that amount proportionately in our diminutive market. So it is little wonder that capital can now be found for right men who are entering the production field.

I confidently predict that within three or four years Australia producing organizations will deliver a product comparable with the world's best.

Rosenblatt, Kemp, Paddock Named

three weeks ago when General Johnson appointed him to the federal code staff.

Mr. Rosenblatt is married, has two children, and is an in-law of General Johnson. His home is at Great Neck, Long Island. He now has offices in the Department of Commerce Building, Suite 4225, Washington.

Kemp Engineer and Attorney

Philip C. Kemp was appointed by General Johnson, two weeks ago, to be deputy commissioner under the NIRA act, with supervision over all motion picture equipment and machinery branches, including fire extinguishers and related appliances.

Mr. Kemp is also an attorney, born in Colorado some 37 years ago. He was graduated from Colorado School of Mines and became a mining engineer until the war, in which he held a lieutenant's commission in the Army. The Armistice settled Mr. Kemp in New York, where he attended Columbia Law School. After school he engaged in the study of law with the well-known firm of Simpson, Thacher and Bartlett of 120 Broadway, becoming a member of the practicing staff about eight years ago.

Simpson, Thacher and Bartlett is known to the motion picture industry principally because of Judge Thomas D. Thacher, who, in 1929, ruled against enforceable arbitration of exhibitor disputes, although the firm variously has done special work for member companies of the MPPDA.

Mr. Kemp resigned his law post last month upon his appointment as deputy administrator by General Johnson. He lives at the Carlton hotel in Washington.

Paddock a Consulting Engineer

Major R. B. Paddock, the third deputy commisisoner with which branches of the film industry will have contact, was assigned by General Johnson to oversee code activities in the field of photographic apparatus and supplies. The raw stock companies are the principal factors in this business.

Major Paddock was a consulting engineer in the mechanical and electrical fields at Memphis, Tenn., where he was also well-known in association work. A descendant of an old-line military family, he was born in 1891 in Buffalo, Wyo.—a military post during the Indian Wars.

Following the family tradition, young Paddock attended West Point, was graduated in 1914 and went overseas as a Signal Corps member of Pershing's original staff.

Louise Closser Hale Dies in Hollywood After Long Career

Louise Closser Hale, veteran stage and screen actress and novelist, died last week in Monte Sano Hospital in Hollywood as the result of having been overcome by heat, followed by two attacks of apoplexy. Mrs. Hale was 60 years old.

Mrs. Hale was born in Chicago October 13, 1872, and during her career had enjoyed professional triumphs in several fields. She traveled extensively for Harper's Magazine, wrote travel articles which were illustrated by her husband, Walter Hale, and was the author of several novels, notable among them being "Home Talent" and "An American's London." It was during this writing period that the actress authored "Mother's Millions" in which May Robson scored her biggest success on the stage.

As a stage star Mrs. Hale played three years in the London engagement of "Mrs. Wiggs." Other stage productions in which she played were "Miss Lulu Betts," "Beyond the Horizon" and "Expressing Willie." She entered motion pictures three years ago and appeared in "Hole in the Wall," "The White Sister," "Letty Lynton," "Son Daughter," "Shanghai Express," "Today We Live" and two new productions, "Another Language" and "Dinner at Eight." At the time of her death, Mrs. Hale had just been assigned a role in "Little Women," for RKO Radio.

Mrs. Hale, who wrote more than 100 short stories, published her first book, a novel entitled "A Motor Car Divorce," in 1906. She visited Europe during the World War and wrote a number of articles about the battlefields. The book of Mrs. Hale's which caused the greatest sensation was "Her Soul and Her Body," published in 1912.

Interested in politics, Mrs. Hale, in 1928, was one of a group of women who aided the Hoover campaign.

Walter Hale, her husband, died in 1917 while they were living in New York. She is survived by a sister, Mrs. Talbot Wilson, and a brother, Milo Joe Closser, who flew to Hollywood for the funeral. Mrs. Hale left instructions that she be cremated. Services were held in the Hollywood Chapel. She also requested that friends who wanted to send flowers should divert the money to a good charity instead. The funeral was arranged by Grant Mitchell and Jesse Ralph.

60 WARNER FEATURES; WILL NOT SELL DUALS OR 10 CENT HOUSES

Product Barred from "Cut-Rate" Theatres, Convention Is Told; Special Appeal to Women Will Be Emphasized in Films

[Picture in Pictorial Section]

The 1933-34 sales season of the combined interests of Warner Brothers, First National and Vitaphone officially got underway Monday at executive conferences in New York, at which the following developments regarding product and policy were announced:

Sales contracts hereafter will stipulate 15 cents, instead of 10 cents, as the minimum admission at which a Warner picture can be shown.

New feature product will not be permitted to be played on double feature programs.

Product will not be sold to "cut-rate" theatres.

Exhibitors will be encouraged to increase admission prices generally.

Warners' salesmen were requested to contribute toward the elimination of unfair trade practices in the field.

Sixty features and 130 shorts were announced for 1933-34, including ten specials. Fourteen features and 55 shorts will be made available by September 1.

Special sales reel to be carried by each salesman directly to each exhibitor by Vitaphone salesmen.

Responsibility for 1933-34 sales placed on district and branch managers.

Women's angles will be emphasized in new feature product.

District and branch managers of the East who were assembled at the two-day "round-table" conference in New York were told by Andy Smith, distribution executive, who presided, that minimum admission prices at which Warner Brothers' pictures will be shown will now be 15 cents instead of 10 cents, and that, "in keeping with President Roosevelt's efforts to eliminate unfair competition under the blanket NIRA code, Warners will not sell their product to cut-rate theatres."

Furthermore, Mr. Smith indicated that the company was unalterably opposed to double features, and for that reason would not permit Warner product to be played on that basis. He said that "by giving exhibitors consistently strong pictures, the double feature evil can be eliminated." Two-for-one admissions will not be permitted for Warner product, he indicated.

In keeping with the trend of President Roosevelt's NIRA program to increase wages and increase employment, Mr. Smith pointed out that an increase in theatre admissions during the coming months is both inevitable and logical. He said also: "For the first time in the history of the business our product will be offered to independent exhibitors at the same terms offered to major circuits."

Major Albert Warner, vice-president, urged the branch and district managers to develop greater cooperation with exhibitors. He asked the distribution division to bring pressure to bear on those exhibitors who fail to get behind the company's pictures with advertising and showmanship exploitation. Major Warner cited instances of exhibitors who, after spending an additional $50 or $100 in advertising, grossed from $500 to $1,000 more than other houses with conditions practically the same.

In stressing the company's objections to cut-rate practices, Major Warner said, "'Sharpshooters,' 'chiselers' and 'price-cutters' are no help to the industry. Because their pernicious practice is a detriment to the entire motion picture industry, and because their practice is at variance with the code of President Roosevelt, Warner Brothers will not sell them."

"Warner Brothers are going to combat the double feature evil, to which they are opposed, by making their pictures strong enough to render double feature playing unnecessary," continued Major Warner. "We will try further to correct this harmful practice by refusing to permit the Warner product to be played on any but a single picture program."

Andy Smith brought the meeting to a close by making a strong plea to every man selling Warner product to set up "your own code of square dealing, to follow it and do your bit to eliminate any unfair practices that exist."

Do Not Owe Banks, Says Warner

Harry M. Warner, president, likewise dealt with the corporation's stringent policy regarding double bills, price-cutting and minimum admissions. He said, "It is no longer possible to operate as we did five years ago, even one year ago. Those who won't change with the times will find that time has changed them—out."

"Warner Brothers can proceed on the route we are travelling," continued Harry Warner. "We do not owe a dollar to any bank and our house is in order." He advised the branch and district managers not to do business with any exhibitor who refuses to work toward the two objectives of the President's code: first to create work for more persons, and, second, at a living wage. "It is indeed a short sighted man," said Mr. Warner, "who fails to realize that more people employed at more livable wages means more money at the box-office."

Warners will deviate from the musical cycle to a women's cycle in pictures. Women's angles will be featured in most of the 60 features scheduled for 1933-34, although the company will not entirely discontinue making musicals. "In the women's angle lies the successful picture," Andy Smith declared, "because once you get women interested in a picture they will bring the men."

The Feature Lineup

Fifty-one titles out of 60 scheduled were detailed to the convention group at New York by Albert Howson, who, for the ninth consecutive year, analyzed stories going into new product. The two principal production units—Warner Pictures and First National Pictures—each will contribute five specials and 25 features. Stars, stories or both are already set for the 51 pictures outlined, leaving stories and stars for only 9 more pictures to be announced. Warners have 16 stars, 30 featured players, 14 junior stars and 35 other players under contract.

In the new group of 60, Paul Muni will be starred in three, Leslie Howard in one, Ruby Keeler and Dick Powell, as a team, in four. Edward G. Robinson will star in three, Barbara Stanwyck in four, Richard Barthelmess and William Powell, three each, and James Cagney and Ruth Chatterton in two each. Kay Francis and Adolph Menjou are set for two each, and Joe E. Brown, for three. Joan Blondell and Bette Davis will appear in several.

Special Sales Reel Will Be Shown Exhibitor by Each Vitaphone Man in Field; Responsibility on Managers

The five specials to be released by Warner Pictures follow:

"Gold Diggers of 1933," pre-released this season.

"Massacre," by Robert Gessner, starring Paul Muni.

"Sweethearts Forever," musical, co-starring Ruby Keeler and Dick Powell.

"As the Earth Turns," by Gladys Hasty Carroll.

The five First National specials are:

"Wonder Bar," starring Al Jolson, and featuring Kay Francis, Joan Blondell, Adolph Menjou, Aline MacMahon, Dick Powell, Warren William, Bette Davis, Glenda Farrell, Frank McHugh, Allen Jenkins, Guy Kibbee, Ann Dvorak, Pat O'Brien, Patricia Ellis, Lyle Talbot, Claire Dodd.

"British Agent," story of Russia, by Bruce Lockhart, starring Leslie Howard.

"Classmates," about West Point, co-starring Ruby Keeler and Dick Powell.

"The World Changes," starring Paul Muni, with Mary Astor, Aline MacMahon, Jean Muir; an American "Cavalcade."

"Broadway and Back," based upon three generations of a family in the theatre (Barrymores?), starring Barbara Stanwyck, featuring Ann Dvorak and Patricia Ellis.

Barthelmess, Chatterton Vehicles

In addition to the specials, the company announced the following 41 features, which with the 9 yet to be selected, round out the program:

"The Varsity Coach," college story, starring Ruby Keeler and Dick Powell, with Pat O'Brien and Ann Dvorak.

Untitled Leslie Howard production.

"Ever in My Heart," starring Barbara Stanwyck, with Otto Kruger, George Brent, Ralph Bellamy, Ruth Donnelly; from novel by Bertram Milhauser and Buelah Marie Dix, directed by Archie Mayo.

"Seven Wives, with Adolphe Menjou, Kay Francis, Ann Dvorak, Bette Davis, Glenda Farrell, Joan Blondell, Patricia Ellis, Margaret Lindsay.

"A Modern Hero," by Louis Bromfield.

"Gentleman from San Francisco," starring William Powell, with Bette Davis and Guy Kibbee.

Untitled James Cagney-Joan Blondell production.

Untitled Barbara Stanwyck production, with George Brent, Bette Davis, Lyle Talbot.

"The Kennel Murder Case," by S. S. Van Dine, with William Powell and Mary Astor, Michael Curtiz directing.

Untitled Barbara Stanwyck production.

Untitled William Powell-Kay Francis production.

"From Headquarters," about modern science and crime.

"The Life of Rothschild," about the noted banking house, by George Hembert Westley.

"Country Club" (tentative title), social

"Wild Boys of the Road," with Frankie Darro, Grant Mitchell, Rochelle Hudson, Arthur Hoerl.

"Diamond Dan."

Untitled Richard Barthelmess productions.

Three untitled features to co-star Allen Jenkins and Aline MacMahon.

Fourteen Ready by September 1

Warners will have completed 14 of the new feature group by September 1, said Major Albert Warner, who listed the following as already completed or to be finished before the new releasing reason actually starts:

"Gold Diggers," "The World Changes," "Bureau of Missing Persons," "Wild Boys of the Road," "Ever in My Heart," "Female," "The Kennel Murder Case," "Shanghai Orchids," "As the Earth Turns," "Sweethearts Forever," "British Agent," "The Varsity Coach," "Havana Widows," "Footlight Parade."

Instead of making the usual lengthy address about forthcoming short subject product, Norman Moray, Vitaphone sales manager, screened for the delegates an eleven-minute short made up especially for the meeting, in which were contained a brief message for the exhibitor, the Vitaphone announcement in series, pictures of each star in each short, clips from shorts already completed, together with dialogue, music and dance sequences. Every Vitaphone salesmen will be supplied with a copy of the reel for use when calling upon exhibitors. In addition, prints will be kept in each exchange. Ed Selzer wrote the titles and dialogue.

Mr. Moray explained that he will make available a complete line of accessories. There will be individual one sheets for each of the two and three reel subjects. A set of 11 x 14 colored stills, a release sheet containing advertising and publicity for each subject, and one-half column newspaper mats suitable for newspapers and programs will also be merchandised with every subject. The same will apply to one-reelers.

The company will emphasize star appeal in its new Vitaphone group, it was said, with at least one star appearing in each release.

Fifty-five Shorts Completed by September 1

Mr. Moray announced that Vitaphone would have ready for delivery before September 1 no less than 55 of the 130 shorts. Twenty-nine are ready for delivery. Twenty will be at the exchanges by August 15. Among the 20 will be at least two each of the seven series, the various groups including: "Broadway Brevities," Technicolor two-reel musicals, "Big V Comedies," "Melody Masters," "Pepper Pots," "Looney Tunes" and "Musical World Journeys."

The delegates were told by Mr. Moray that Vitaphone billings for the past three weeks had exceeded any other three weeks in the last three years. Andy Smith also talked about an increase in feature billings, indicating that during the warm months so far this year, they have been higher than at any time during the entire season.

The first of the three Warner "round-table" sales conferences got underway Monday morning at the Waldorf Astoria in New York. Andy Smith, in charge of eastern and Canadian distribution, presided over the 14 assembled district and branch managers. The session was concluded Tuesday noon, when Major Albert Warner, Andy Smith, Gradwell Sears, Norman Moray, Charles Einfeld, Sam Sax, Al Schwalberg, Arthur Sackhson and other home office officials left for Chicago where the second meeting was to take place, starting Thursday, at the Drake hotel, with Mr. Sears presiding.

Present at the New York gathering were, besides those already mentioned, the following home office executives: Harry M. Warner, president, Joseph Bernard, Moe Silver, Skip Weshner, Harold Bareford, Albert Howson.

At New York, district manager Robert Smeltzer had on hand the following branch managers: Ray Smith, Albany; Thomas Spry, Boston; Harry Seed, Buffalo; Nat Furst, New Haven; Bob Mochrie, Philadelphia. Roy Haines, district manager of Cincinnati, headed a group of the following managers: Milt Mooney, Cleveland; Fred North, Detroit; A. Shmitken, Indianapolis; Ben Kalmenson, Pittsburgh. Joe Vergesslich, New York; Harry Decker, Brooklyn, and Harry Hummell, of New Jersey, were also present.

S. Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity, outlined exploitation plans. Announcement of each campaign will be withheld until release time.

Salesmen were not called to the New York session, nor will they attend the meetings at Chicago and Toronto. The reason for this, according to Smith and Sears, was that the branch and district managers know their own salesmen and their own problems best, and, therefore, it was decided to place the responsibility for next year's distribution in each man's territory directly upon the district and branch manager.

The third "round-table" conference will be held August 6 and 7, at the Royal York Hotel, Toronto, Andy Smith presiding.

One of the important announcements at the New York convention was that Loew's Metropolitan circuit had purchased the complete Warner-First National-Vitaphone output for 1933-34, the first time such a deal has been negotiated. This is the first major film deal for the new season, and is said to involve nearly $2,000,000.

A wire from Jack Warner, vice-president in charge of production at Hollywood, to be read at each of the three conferences, asked district and branch managers to request salesmen to be on the lookout for stories, titles and persons that can be used in Warner pictures.

Following the eastern conference, Mr. Smith announced the promotion of Roy Haines from the post of district manager at Cincinnati, to the same position in New York, with supervision over branches in New York, Brooklyn and New Jersey.

Maurice White, formerly salesman at Cincinnati, was promoted to the post of branch manager at that exchange.

APPLIES SCULPTORS' ART TO FILM MAKEUP

A flair for sculpture, a reversal of technique, and Jack Dawn of the Fox makeup department at the Coast studio has made a definite name for himself among the artists of the physiognomy. Mr. Dawn, who fell into motion picture makeup work purely by accident, operates contrawise to the usual sculptor. First he models in clay the head of the character called for by the script, then he proceeds with the human subject, shaping that to the likeness of the sculpture. His miniature heads, three or four inches in height, are much sought after, it is said. Mr. Dawn claims his most difficult feat was that of making up 34-year-old Frank Atkinson to look like George Bernard Shaw for his role in "Paddy, The Next Best Thing."

McCarthy, Operated Upon, Recuperating Rapidly

Charles E. McCarthy, director of advertising and publicity for Fox, was operated upon for appendicitis Monday morning at the Presbyterian hospital in Newark, N. J. His condition is reported as being excellent.

Mr. McCarthy had been spending the weekend with relatives in Massachusetts and was stricken on the boat returning to New York from Boston. On arrival in New York he was rushed to Newark.

Sues on Fight Film Returns

Albert Dezel of Road-Show Pictures of Chicago has instituted suit against E. N. Judell of Chicago, for an accounting of money collected by Mr. Judell for distribution of the "Schmeling-Sharkey" fight pictures in Illinois.

Reorganization of Publix Subsidiary Is Underway

Final reorganization plans for Publix Enterprises are being speeded by the trustees in bankruptcy with the completion last week of the filing of claims by creditors.

The bulk of company liabilities is intercompany indebtedness, with the Paramount-Publix claim of approximately $6,000,000 ranking as the largest filed against it. A number of the claims filed may be contested by the trustees, it is understood, following which reorganization plans are expected to advance rapidly.

Referee Henry K. Davis warned bondholders of Paramount Publix to file proofs of claim before September 14, the final date under federal law. To date, bonds totalling about $8,000,000 in face value, of the $26,000,000 in bonds affected, have been deposited with Mr. Davis. The original bond must accompany the claim. No fee is required.

Complete Text of Federation Code

[Following is the complete text of the code completed by the Federation of the Motion Picture Industry.]

The following shall be deemed to be unfair trade practices, and should be eliminated:

1. Withholding of product from persons willing to purchase the same—that is, a free market—the free right of the Exhibitor to buy and the Producer-Distributor to sell.

This is of first, foremost and paramount importance. The opening of the market will mean the re-employment of a large number of persons in varied lines. It will bring into circulation millions of dollars, in that investments in theatres will be made without the constant spectre and fear of having a theatre, but no product to exhibit therein.

2. Block booking.

The elimination of this sore will mean the employment of double and triple the number of employees in distribution and exchange offices. Also, it will cause many persons who, because of this practice, have only seasonal occupation, to be employed throughout the year. Moreover, it makes it possible for the entire picture industry to be placed in the control of a small group, thus creating large combinations in restraint of trade. This group, by obtaining the outstanding players, directors and stories, as a result of unfair competitive practices, can thereby control all the possible available output, and thus eliminate all other Producers and Distributors; and will put the Exhibitors entirely under the domination and control of such group.

3. Buying Combines Among Exhibitors.

This belongs in the same category as Block booking, and its practice also results in the reducing of labor.

4. Elimination of interchangeability of playing time, and unfair pooling of theatres.

This practice has for its fundamental purpose the elimination of labor to the greatest extent, because by the making of private agreements between the large companies, all salesmen and incidental employees are eliminated. Moreover, it removes from competitive bidding any and all of the pictures so interchanged.

5. Elimination of Blind Booking.

Opportunity should be afforded to Exhibitors of prior definite knowledge of artist, director and subject matter of story.

6. Over-buying—with the intent of keeping the product from competing Exhibitors.

Or obtaining control of theatres, when done for the purpose of making it impossible for other Exhibitors to obtain pictures for exhibition, and to restrain competition.

7. Substitutions.

The substitution of pictures without opportunity to Exhibitor to determine whether said substituted product meets his favor.

8. Divorcing control of theatres from Producers and/or Distributors.

9. Double Features.

Any attempt to interfere with any person who shall exhibit or offer for exhibition more than one feature picture, or any attempt or threat on the part of a Producer or Distributor to terminate contractual relations with respect to delivery of motion pictures, or any refusal on the part of such Producer or Distributor to make delivery of other pictures, because of the exhibition or offering for exhibition of more than one feature picture by any Exhibitor, shall constitute unfair trade practice.

Beyond these major points, there are many incidental commercial practices which have been found injurious to the business in general, and which should be eliminated. Among these, the following should be mentioned:

a. Holding over prints
b. Bicycling
c. Failure to promptly report correctly the result of percentage bookings
d. Commercial bribery
e. Inducing a breach of contract
f. Obscenity in motion pictures
g. Obscenity in advertising

RE·ARBITRATION

We are wholly in accord with the principle of arbitration, but this must be based on the principle of arbitration under a contract, the provisions of which has first been duly arbitrated.

THIS PLAY "WOULD CLEAN UP BIG"

Says DeCasseres of "Run, Little Chillun"; Faint Possibilities in Five Others of Broadway Stage

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

RUN, LITTLE CHILLUN

This is the most gorgeous, dramatic and thrilling all-negro show that I have ever seen. It is, besides, written by Hall Johnson, a great Negro chorus-master.

It is a folk-drama. But the high points in it do not lie in the drama itself, which is a love-story of primitive passion, but in the Pilgrim Choir, the Tongola Dancers and the stupendous revival meeting in the Hope Baptist Church, the like of which for sheer erotic and religious frenzy has never been seen anywhere before.

There is also the open-air meeting of the New Day Pilgrims and their Dionysian and devilish dances and contortions which are a combination of Ravel's "Bolero" and the old Witches' Sabbaths.

Nothing for years has stirred me so profoundly. It is the one unique show in New York.

Someone ought to do this in pictures with this cast and the Hall Johnson singers. I'll wager my utter pajama that it would clean up big.

$25 AN HOUR

Hey! Hey! Do you (anybody) want to see a picture in which the big scene will be two blondes rolling on the floor in ye deadly battle?

Speak up quickly, for here it is in "$25 an Hour," all writ friskily and slashingly by Gladys Unger and Leyla Georgie.

There are a lot of big names connected with this modish show: Tom Mitchell, Georges Metaxa, Olga Baclanova and Jean Arthur.

It can be worked for the screen for what is known as the post-war generation of sophisticuties.

The epic centers around Claude Rozay, a young Rumanian who went boom in his operatic career because of stage willies, and Germaine Granville, who runs a modish gown shop, who is his mistress and "studio" backer. They have their differences in mediocre dialogue.

Germaine gets ready to go to Paris, leaving Claude to the wide, wide world. Lucy, one of Germaine's stunning customers, another plat., and a star in the wide-open world, starts to vamp Claude.

Germaine changes her mind about going to Paris, and comes into the "studio" just in time. Then comes the grand bout.

LONE VALLEY

This opus by Sophie Treadwell has some strong dramatic possibilities for the Circle of Serious Listeners.

There's a poor young farmhand who is bothered by poetical and religious things. He's a nize boy, but needs an "awakener."

It always comes. And it is always a she with a double-benjamin It. She blows in on the farm, having cleaned up in the city with a Life of Shame. Now she wants to clean up spiritually and settle down.

Romance with redemptive trimmings comes a-peeping up like a shy daisy. This doesn't even surprise the fireman loafing in the wings.

Big Force of Evil looms. It is a hard and g-narled farmer who roils the boy's soul the wrong way and hitlers him all over the place. He, too, has "spiritual" problems (should be made a bootlegger if this thing ever comes to the films).

There are other characters: a city slicker who meets a hay wagon-riding country goil. She comes to a Bad End. Then there is a country preacher who snortles out the usual drivel (me no like).

MASKS AND FACES

Paul E. Martin, the author of "Masks and Faces," has dived into psychiatry, which is a glamorous word for dream-necking. Uncle Rollo used to call it something else, but as the Greeks and all bartenders had a word for it, why enlarge upon it?

Dr. Ballou, a lady psychiatrist, has a patient in Geraldine Keith, wife of a puritanical banker. She is obsessed with the idea that she is in love with another fellow.

The bilious banker has noted a certain flaw in Gerry's caresses. She thinks he is the other fellow—name unknown. So the phantom lover looms. Some curious inhibition prevents her naming this ancilliary necker, however. It just keeps nibbling her.

Doc Ballou advises that husband and wife take different roads for a little while. She also tries to find out whether this shadow-lover is really in the pants—or the flesh, so to speak. There is a fellow, just off the gang-plank from Russia, that Doc. thinks is the phantom Clark Gable; but he's elsewhere.

Who d'ye think it is? It's Schuyler Ewing, the family lawyer, and a bach. Doc. gets Keith out of the house and lets Schuyler live there with Geraldine for a week.

Per-esto! Geraldine's jinx is fanned off the scene! For she really loves hubby!

There is some good dialogue in this dish of boob-porridge. It's a pleasant comedy for rainy, drinkless nights.

Picture value, 20 per cent.

MARATHON

The only thing that hasn't been spoofed and exposed is why men wear shirts.

Not that anything is really reformed or done away with when it is "unveiled." In fact, to show the machinery of getting-away-with-the-goods generally inspires someone to try the racket who never thought of it before. Just human nature.

Well, "Marathon," a play in 23 scenes by Isabel Dawn and Boyce de Gaw, is supposed to be the undressing of the dance racket.

And d'ye think there'll be no more dance marathons and hoofing nuts. Apfelmus?

Everything except sound drama is jammed into this play: the exhausted dance-maniacs, racketeers muscling in, murder, prize-money, welchers, bois an' goils.

So there is, maybe, a build-up for a picture in the idea; but my spies on the Coast report that crime pictures are "passing away." More sauce de pomme. Crime, sex and money are as eternal as themes as the lief of Old Nick on this here green footstool.

Picture value, 10 per cent.

IT HAPPENED TOMORROW

This play, laid in "the United Provinces of Mythica," is in some future time when we have a dictatress running the old shebang that used to be called the U. S. A.

The play was pure ice-fritters, but there is the idea here for a corking farce in the films that I believe would net big b. o. with, say, Mae West, Alison Skipworth or Marie Dressler as the American Mussolini.

She puts it over on us boobs, the men! No more male babies are to be born. That's the way she gets rid of war, by lopping off men. She never heard of the Amazons or the Russian Battalion of Death (all skoits)!

There's a lot of other amusing hokum in this play that might have gone over big if it had been worked up in the key of "Of Thee I Sing."

The idea's going to be done some day in the films. A good title for such a picture would be "Lipstick Over the White House."

Picture value, 5 per cent.

Clyde Elliott Returns From Malayan Jungle Expedition

Clyde Elliott returned to Movietone City last week with thousands of feet of film of the Malayan jungle, for use in Fox's "Three Against Death," which he is directing. Mr. Elliott, who was associated with Frank Buck in the making of "Bring 'em Back Alive," narrowly escaped death twice while heading the Fox unit in its Malayan film exploration. James Spearing, who wrote the continuity, returned with Mr. Elliott. The picture formerly was called "Man Eater."

DANCING LADY

MGM

Although Joan Crawford is starred and the title is remindful of the "Dancing Daughter" type of picture, "Dancing Lady" is entirely a theatrical story. Adapted from the Saturday Evening Post story by James Warner Bellah, it's a character yarn, tinged with romantic, dramatic, comedy atmosphere of the stage, of a girl who wants to be a dancer and hounds and pesters a producer until he gives her her opportunity.

Directed by Robert Z. Leonard, whose screen accomplishments need no mention, Miss Crawford's supporting cast includes Franchot Tone, Grant Mitchell, Frank Morgan, Winnie Lightner, all of whom are well known. Additionally, it rings in some colorful new names, principal of which is Fred Astaire, the internationally famed dancer, and two well known orchestra directors and radio broadcast personalities, Jean Malin and Jay Whidden.

A valuable feature is that this picture brings Joan Crawford back to the type of roles by which she initially rose to success. Although her part is essentially dramatic, it is contrasted by the sparkle and color that is particularly Crawford's. This is made possible by the plot, which first has her making a dance director fall in love with her and give her her chance, only to have her meet and marry a wealthy playboy in order to get him to finance the show.

While there is much glamour and excitement, there nevertheless is a vein of human interest apparently surrounding the two-timing dancing girl inasmuch as her heart is always with the dancing director and she eventually comes back to him.

LOVE, HONOR AND OH, BABY

Universal

Varying the recent Summerville-Pitts domestic comedy romance trend, this picture and adaptation of the stage play, "Oh, Promise Me," is a situation comedy, carrying a romantic twist and developing a hokum atmosphere. The screen play by Norman Krasna and Eddie Buzzell contains much hilarious dialogue, calls for a lot of funny action and as it is being directed by Buzzell, who has "Ann Carver's Profession" and "Child of Manhattan" to his credit, the picture promises much in the way of amusement.

Slim Summerville and Zasu Pitts, starred, have in the supporting cast Lucille Gleason, currently in "Don't Bet on Love"; Veree Teasdale, erstwhile stage luminary, known to film fans because of "Skyscraper Souls," "Luxury Liner," "Terror Aboard" and "They Just Had to Get Married"; Donald Meek, who created the role of Luther in the stage play; George Barbier, Purnell Pratt and Adrienne Dore

A burlesque and almost slapstick atmosphere prevailing, the story centering in a small New England town has Slim as an unfortunate lawyer from his clients' point of view, in love with Miss Pitts. Turning siren in character, she takes a job with the philandering playboy banker Barbier, which permits the development of a breach of promise suit.

The big feature is a court trial, staged like a championship prize fight; radio broadcast, newsreeled, etc., until it has millions awaiting its outcome. Slim, her lawyer, adopts many ruses to force a decision for Zasu, but when she wins the verdict, she refuses the $100,000 award, maintaining that her only purpose was to prove Slim a good lawyer and make the home town safe for working girls.

CHARLIE CHAN'S GREATEST CHANCE

Fox

This new link in the familiar Chinese detective series, based on a story by Earl Derr Biggers, who created the character in Saturday Evening Post stories, is being directed by Hamilton MacFadden, who handled two of the earlier episodes, "Black Camel" and "Charlie Chan Carries On." Warner Oland again assumes the screen role of Chan. The leading feminine player is Heather Angel, currently in "Pilgrimage" and "Berkeley Square." The cast is extensive, numbering more than 20, including, principally, John Warburton, who with Heather Angel presents the love interest angle, Frank McGlynn, Claude King, Gloria Ray, William Stack, Roger Imhoff, Clara Blandwick and Walter Byron.

Similarly premised as its predecessors, a crime solution plot motivating the yarn steers clear of any gruesome atmosphere, yet maintains the atmosphere of drama, mystery, suspense and thrill, which provokes its own comedy as Oland effects the solution. The locales are old Boston and San Francisco, with most of the action happening on shipboard and in Hawaii. Chan has a new line of philosophic quotations, topical of impending events.

The story, first kindling romance between Warburton and Miss Angel, turns into a mystery as Warburton's uncle is murdered and a box containing valuable papers which the boy is carrying is spirited away. Suspicion is attached to almost every one in the picture. Warburton and Heather Angel, as conflicting situations develop, are brought into association with Oland to carry the story to its climax, which Oland solves in his inimitable way.

THE BOWERY

U.A.-Twentieth Century

For its initial effort, Twentieth Century has selected a topical story of New York's colorful old Bowery of the gay nineties. The picture is based on a yet unpublished novel, "Chuck Connors," by M. L. Simmons and B. R. Solomonn, which already has had quite a bit of publicity. The screen play is by Howard Estabrook, whose recent works from "Cimarron" to "Bill of Divorcement" need no mention, and James Gleason, who mixes his screen writing with screen acting. Raoul Walsh, himself a product of the Bowery, is directing, a fact that should make for authenticity in production values.

Wallace Beery as Chuck Conners, George Raft as Steve Brodie, Fay Wray and Jackie Cooper are the leading players. The relation between Beery and Cooper is similar to "The Champ" setup in the early stages of the picture, only to have the kid go over to Brodie in the end. Other players are Pert Kelton, ex-musical comedy star, currently appearing in "Bed of Roses," George Walsh, who plays the part of John L. Sullivan, and Lillian Harmer.

The story is timed to that period of American life when the Bowery was most colorful; when the rival Connors and Brodie gangs settled their disputes with brass knuckles and paving blocks rather than machine guns. Developing its story, it brings in such historical events as the Spanish-American war after the destruction of the "Maine," the birth of the prohibition movement and Brodie's famous leap off the Brooklyn Bridge. Brought in also are colorful characters like John L., the hatchet-crusading Carrie Nation (Miss Harmer), politicians and men-about-town of the era and others of note.

Heightening the interesting glamor, the old-time "pugs," Frank Moran, of "Mary Ann" fame, Fireman Jim Flynn, who kayoed Jack Dempsey, Al McCoy, Kid Broad, Spike Robinson and a host of lesser lights are numbered among the supporting cast.

STAGE MOTHER

MGM

Here's a dramatic story of a mother's ambition for her child to become a stage actress. Written by Bradford Ropes, author of "42nd Street," and directed by Charles Brabin, who turned out "Washington Masquerade" and "The Bridge of San Luis Rey," this yarn is rich in back stage atmosphere. While several musical numbers, both song and dance, are included, the production is not a musical.

Realism is the motivating force, yet the mother's drama is contrasted by a catchy romance and there is plenty of comedy in both action and dialogue to provide and insure continual interest.

Plenty of picture names are spotted in the cast, including Alice Brady, Maureen O'Sullivan, Franchot Tone, Frank Morgan and T. Roy Barnes. One newcomer to the screen is featured, Russell Harvey, a well-known stage actor, who also will be seen currently in "Show World."

"Stage Mother" differs radically from the current theatrical cycle in that the story concerns itself mainly with Alice Brady's almost fanatical belief in her daughter's ability to make the grade. Nothing, no matter how tragically discouraging, can alter that conviction. And in great scenes she eventually imbues Maureen O'Sullivan with the same spirit that enables her to reach the heights.

DOCTOR BULL

Fox

Adapted from the James Gould Couzzens best seller novel, "The Last Adam," "Doctor Bull," which has been prepared for the screen by Paul Green, author of the "State Fair" screen play, is at once a character study and a cross section portrayal of the comedy, drama, romance, intrigue, jealousy and local color of rural New England small town life.

Will Rogers is starred in a role which should be right down his alley as an odd, old-fashioned country doctor and town health-officer; friend, counsellor and all-around good fellow to many; but not so popular with the ultra progressives because of his reluctance to accept every new fangled theory. Supporting are Louise Dresser, who was teamed with Rogers in "State Fair," Vera Allen, Marian Nixon, Berton Churchill, Ralph Morgan and Andy Devine.

The picture is being directed by John Ford, who recently completed "Pilgrimage." As the story develops, he has made effective use of suspense which is climaxed by Doctor Bull's handling of an epidemic which baffled the skill of the modern doctor, Ralph Morgan, and discovery of a paralysis cure which brings him international renown.

OUR CODE IS A LAUGH!

Yes, Mr. President and showmen, we have a code of our own . . . and it's a laugh . . . in fact, lots of laughs . . . bigger and better laughs . . . giggles and titters . . . hee-hees and haw-haws . . . miles and miles of smiles . . . rows and rows of beaming faces, in every theatre in the land. There's nothing better for the old zip and morale. And there's nothing better for box-office rejuvenation.

We're doing our part against the forces of gloom. We're doing our part to keep the laughter roaring and the box-offices humming.

Rafter Romance

(RKO Radio)

Comedy

There's a lot of entertainment in this show and there's a lot of showmanship material with which to sell it. As it unwound upon the screen the preview audience, apathetic at first, caught the spirit of the thing and responded enthusiastically. Essentially a comedy, it is light and pleasant all the way through. A well developed love interest angle is worked in. Good old-fashioned hokum is effectively used. There is just a trace of contrasting drama that concentrates audience sympathy on the central characters.

Situations being evenly balanced, the main theme is continually predominant. The cast's best names are Ginger Rogers and Laura Hope Crews. The show itself rather than names probably will be the most effective selling material. Yet if "Professional Sweetheart," which also teamed Rogers and Foster, made any impression upon your patrons, it might be well to remind them that the pair is teamed again. While the show is of the type that probably will appeal more to country, small town and neighborhood audiences than to the patrons of bigger houses, alert managers should find enough showmanship material.

The show is novel. It has an odd premise. Eckbaum, owner of "Eckbaum Arms," a sixth rate walk-up apartment house, compels Jack and Mary to share the attic room, one by day, the other by night. They don't meet, but develop a livid dislike for each other. Their animosity impels them to play all sorts of tricks on each other. Jack fixes the improvised shower so that it tumbles down on Mary's head. She souses his best suit. He saws her bed in two.

Eventually the co-tenants, still unknown to each other, Mary a telephone operator for "Icy Air" refrigerators, and Jack, a night watchman, accidentally meet on a street corner. Jack goes big shot and talks about buying refrigerators in carload lots to impress the girl with whom he would like to fall in love. While all this is going on, Eckbaum, the tipsy would-be patron of Jack's, Elise, and sales-manager Hubbell inject plenty of comedy.

Icy-Air stages a picnic for its employees. Mary invites Jack and real love is born. While they hide away, Hubbell stages the outing—fat men's, three-legged, sack, obstacle races and pie eating contests. Swell ideas for small town ballyhoo. Missing the bus home, Jack hurts his leg and Mary has to accompany him to his domicile. You can imagine her embarrassment as he leads her to the attic room. Then the showdown.

Sell fun and laughs in this one. Use the names for what they're worth. But major in ballyhoo. Tie up with merchants and newspapers, so that your pocketbook won't be strained too much for a goodwill stunt. You perhaps may duplicate the stunts suggested in the picture. You can make use of your civic contacts to get cooperation from the park and recreation departments.

The picture is a natural for tieups with distributors of electric refrigerators, as well as cooperative newspaper advertising. Likewise, adapt the telephone soliciting gag, which provides so much fun in the picture. Even though the title doesn't lend itself readily to the atmosphere of the show, the more the story is circused the better the chances for boosting the box office above average program figures.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Whirlwind

(Columbia)

Western

While to the patron of westerns all that is necessary is to mention the name of Tim McCoy, who adds a tough wrestling match with Matthew Betz to the regular action of the outdoor picture, the exhibitor might do well to give some attention, in campaign terms, to the work of Pat O'Malley and J. Carroll Naish, who, as Pat and "Injun," do some fancy broncriding and steer-bulldogging, in "The Whirlwind."

As a title, "The Whirlwind" may or may not do something extra for the theatre man. It's descriptive, whether or not it indicates the type of production, and this is defined anyway when McCoy is headlined.

Tim and his two pals come back to town to find that Betz as sheriff has embittered the town against him, except, of course, Alice Dahl, and his mother, Stella Adams. The trio take all the prizes at the rodeo, which doesn't make Betz feel any better, and Betz tries in vain all the dirty tactics he can devise in the wrestling bout against Tim. Going to collect the money that he has won, in order to pay the note held by Betz against Alice Dahl's father, Joe Girard, Tim surprises a getaway plot of Betz and the bank cashier, Lloyd Whitlock. The trio ride away when Sheriff Betz and his henchmen start out for them on a trumped-up charge that Tim has robbed the bank. But they let Betz overhear that a money cargo is coming through the pass. When Betz comes out to hold up the driver, there's Tim in the seat. Before Betz can shoot, O'Malley and Naish come from behind and disarm him, as Girard arrives with the men Tim has arranged for, to expose Betz's plottings.—Rovelstad, New York.

Comedy-Drama

In this family drama, the contrasting situations permit an unusual comedy atmosphere and develop several emotional twists. The entire Hallam family concerned, the essence of the story is concentrated in four characters—Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery, (the late) Louise Closser Hale and John Beal. Dialogue carrying the complete interpretative thread, action being held to a minimum, the show is primarily adult entertainment, yet because of the almost universal familiarity of its theme, it is more popular than class entertainment would indicate.

The story is simple, one that almost every family has experienced, merely picturing the motherly instinct to keep her sons closer to her than they are to their own wives. It develops drama that precipitates its own comedy reactions and situations that should stir the emotions, concentrating audience sympathy on Mom, Stella, Victor and Jerry in turn.

After establishing that Stella and Victor are very much in love as wife and husband, the show confines itself to two major sets, Mom Hallam's home and Victor's apartment. Stella, taking up sculpturing, misses many of the weekly family gatherings so dear to Mom's heart. Her actions cause her in-laws to think she is high-hatting them, convince Mom that she is unworthy of her favorite son and because of Victor's unwillingness to understand why she doesn't care to get too mixed up in the Hallam family affairs, threatens to wreck their romance.

In the throes of puppy love for his aunt, Jerry, her high minded nephew-in-law, is the only one who has any understanding of or sympathy for Stella. Approaching its climax, the family is gathered in Victor's apartment, the anticipated squabble develops, Mom feigns sickness, and the gang, Victor included, marches out in a grand huff. A dramatic scene between Stella and Jerry ensuing, the story returns to the Hallam manse, where Stella comes to make her apologies to Mom. Jerry, not having come home during the night, his father and mother are there, frantically fearing what has happened to their boy, when he enters to bring about the emotionally dramatic climax wherein Stella lays bare the Hallam folly and walks out, only to have her husband follow her.

The show being both entertaining and inspiring, it has the elements that, properly publicized, will please almost any kind of an adult audience. The names of Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery and the late Louise Closser Hale are sufficiently strong for personality purposes. But by bringing out the fact that the story is near to almost everybody, that it is an entertaining picturization of their own trials and tribulations in dealing with their in-laws, an interest can be created in it that the odd-sounding title might fail to stimulate.

Ad copy written with a humorous twist that does not ignore the dramatic and emotion stirring elements of the picture, these being given a direct personal significance, should be the means of interesting adult curiosity in a show which, if it enjoys a good opening day, should find business building as word-of-mouth advertising gets in its work.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Son of the Border

Western

(RKO Radio)

A well told story of Arizona stage coach days. Holdups, gunfights, hand-to-hand encounters and fast riding are palatably mixed for the appetites of all ages of western fans. with a nice performance by young David Durand to attract the youngsters in addition to Tom Keene's draw. The romance is not emphasized, though Julie Haydon, as the girl, does more than a bit.

Keene heads the law enforcement group banded to clear the valley of a bandit mob preying on gold carrying stage coaches. His friend, Creighton Chaney, Haydon's sweetheart, is mixed up with the bad men and is unknowingly killed by Keene at an attempted bank robbery.

Chaney's kid brother comes to town, and having no one to turn to, is taken in by the remorseful Keene. Tom sends him away to school and the coach bearing the boy is attacked by the bad men. Julie appears on the scene, and, endeavoring to protect the boy, is herself hurt. She is saved by Tom, the bandits are wiped out, and the girl forgives Keene.

Focus your selling around Keene, and promise something more than the ordinary from young Durand. He delivers well playing straight, and also gets a few wisecracking laughs in scenes with Edgar Kennedy, who plays the stooge. Where Lon Chaney is still remembered, you may be able to get something out of the fact that Creighton Chaney is his son.—VOGEL, New York.

The Devil's in Love

(Fox)

Drama

A story set in or about the Riff country of northern Africa might indicate a man's picture, but that is not the case with "The Devil's in Love," though the action necessarily mainly concerns Victor Jory. An interesting variation of development is the delayed introduction of Loretta Young and it's an effective device.

Jory, surgeon at Fort Rondet, the French colonial post, carries an independent air about him that rasps the browbeating commandant, C. Henry Gordon, just as the captain's bullying overtaxes the endurance of his flunky, J. Carrol Naish. Gordon has to wait for medical attention while Jory attends to the wounds of the men after an engagement. Gordon tells Jory he's transferring him to the disease hellhole of the Territory, takes the medicine, and dies. Jory is sentenced to death, but David Manners, lieutenant, helps him to escape. Jory hides out in the native quarter of the other town, where he ministers to the poor.

Loretta Young arrives at the Mission of the town, to be with her uncle, Emile Chautard, Mission father, and they meet when Jory makes Herbert Mundin return her purse, which he had stolen. The hunt for the fugitive draws close, but Vivienne Osborne, operating a drinking dive, protects him. Miss Young reveals her love for Jory, but says she is engaged to another, and when she informs him that disease has struck down upon Fort Rondet the picture in her room tells Jory that her fiance is Manners. He goes with her to the Fort to save the command, despite the fact it will mean capture and death for him. He treats the men and forces Naish to confess that he killed the captain. In a heavy battle with the desert enemy, Manners is killed.

To this story of action the exhibitor has several well known names to tie his showmanship —Jory, Misses Young and Osborne, and Manners. Then, too, the comedy vein of Mundin appears to be drawing an increasing interest among audiences, and it would be well to point him toward build-up as a character player of following.

The title may have a sounding appeal, but its application to the picture is at best only dim. Better to play up the names and describe the story with catchlines referring to the courage of a doctor of the Foreign Legion who braved certain death to save his fellow soldiers, of a girl who remained true to the man she had chosen, though she had learned to love another.

It's a picture for any day of the week, with exciting sequences for the younger element.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

"I WAS A SPY" CALLED BEST BRITISH FILM

The new Gaumont British picture, "I Was A Spy," starring Madeleine Carroll with Conrad Veidt and Herbert Marshall, was accorded a tumultuous reception at the London preview. It was conceded to be the greatest dramatic motion picture ever made in Britain and worthy of rank among the outstanding classics of the screen.

The story, photographed with staggering realism, deals with an unexploited aspect of the World War, revealing in sweeping strokes of terrifying adventure how the Belgian peasantry passed intelligence from German occupied territories to the Allies. Stirring love interest involves Marthat Cnockhaert, Belgian girl who nursed German wounded and spied for her country, raising the status of espionage to dignity and honor.

This is not just a war picture, but a vital, exciting, blood-painted canvas expressing neither bitterness nor racial hatred but showing Europe in the grip of a military Frankenstein. It may start a new cycle of war films having a strong urge to world peace.

Nothing to equal this in technical polish or spectacular force has emerged from a British studio. Acting throughout is inspired. There's fervent direction by Victor Saville. The picture is a great personal triumph for C. M. Woolf and Michael Balcon, Gaumont production executive.—W. H. MOORING, London.

Night of Terror

(Columbia)

Mystery Melodrama

A throwback to the shocker type of production, "Night of Terror," presents a showmanship problem to the exhibitor, in the wholesale murderings by the maniac. What would seem the most practicable solution is a twofold direction of interest toward the previous successes of Bela Lugosi and toward emphasis upon the novel climax. Running parallel to the wholesale slayings is the plot of George Meeker, who, faking a suspended animation discovery, has dug a grave in which he is to be buried for eight hours. It is revealed at the close—and Lugosi, as the East Indian servant, tracks down the criminal—that Meeker's grave is conveniently near an exit into the basement of the mansion.

The succession of murders, calling for a like succession of shrieks from Sally Blane, finally drew mirth from the action-loving audience of the small theatre where it was seen, but the novelty of the climax and denouement was a compensation. This was broken again by the reappearance of the madman, with all his terrifying makeup, to threaten dire happenings to any one of the customers who might dare to bare the mystery.

Names to be played up are Bela Lugosi and Sally Blane. Others familiar in the cast are Wallace Ford, as the carefree newspaper reporter suitor, Tully Marshall and Bryant Washburn.

The youngest children would not be likely to have a good night's rest after seeing the picture. Best spotted early in the week.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

The Diamond Trail

(Monogram)

Western

A western that starts in a newspaper office with Rex Bell as a reporter, takes him and a gang west to hunt up a deserting go-between diamond smuggler, and winds up with an attempted "ride," that's what the exhibitor has for sale in this production. And there are the whoop-'er-up turns to the action that provide such activities as leaping from the roof of a store into an auto and from the auto to the saddle. Never mind whether the story plays a bit fast and loose with consistency—it's action that counts in a western, and that the theatreman may promise his patrons he has for them in rather copious quantity.

Bell has the fortune to do a good turn for Lloyd Whitlock head of a diamond smuggling gang and by calling himself Frisco Ed he gets himself a job with the gang, which should be good for a real yarn for the newspaper. Whitlock takes the gang to a western town to put on the spot Bud Osborne, who has failed to pass on the latest package of diamonds. Bell warns Frances Rich, the sister, and also convinces Osborne to come clean with the gang. Whitlock meantime has intercepted a telegram to Bell and the gang start out with him as their prisoner. The idea is to run over him with their car. Bell rolls clear, and down the mountainside, as the posse arrives.

Rex Bell is the name to sell, as well as the wide range of story and action. No particular attempt at comedy has been made, so the surrounding program should be fashioned to accomplish that. There's plenty of excitement for the youngsters.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Big Executive

(Paramount)

Drama

Pointing out the moral behind the story that riches and power do not bring happiness, seems to be the most effective showmanship value in this picture. The plot being conventional, and the same true of dialogue, action and situations, selling it calls for taking full advantage of what patron interesting elements it contains.

The story establishes Conway as a modern financial wizard who throws down the gauge of battle to the Commodore, a relic of an older era of big business men. Conway, objective of the affections of the Commodore's granddaughter, Helena, kills his wife accidentally, but under circumstances that have a tinge of premeditation, while on a hunting trip. The romance between the pair growing, the Commodore sets out to wreck the upstart financially, and the 1929 stock market crash is repeated, which leaves Conway with only a good luck ring which he pawns for $1,000 to find Helena awaiting him as he leaves the broker's shop, apparently deserting her grandfather to stand side by side with Conway as he starts his battle all over again.

With a strong supporting program necessary, special nights, publicity should utilize to the utmost the interest stimulated by the writing credits and the Ricardo Cortez-Richard Bennett name power, supplementing the moral of the story. If, during the time you are playing the show, the stock market should happen to zoom or sag noticeably, you probably can hitch a topical angle on to the show in exploitation that will add color to the title. Otherwise billing it as the story of a life-death struggle between a modern financial giant and the erratic scion of the glamorous group of a couple of generations ago, looks to be the best way of creating audience interest.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Riot Squad

(Mayfair)

Comedy-Drama

A title that says much, "Riot Squad" presents several forms of tieup possibilities, official as well as otherwise. While in the smaller town the police organization may not call for such a unit as a riot squad, the term is universally known and there's a certain glamour attached that makes for good copy.

For names there are Madge Bellamy, Pat O'Malley and James Flavin, Miss Bellamy, of course, known to all, and O'Malley and Flavin popularly associated with actionful productions, though Flavin is comparatively new to pictures.

It's largely a story of the beautiful girl come-on for the crook gang, and as Lil Daley, Miss Bellamy does the large-eyed baby-face as the story would have her do.

O'Malley and Flavin, detectives, are great buddies, but they're always fighting each other, and it becomes quite important when they fall in love with the same girl, Madge Bellamy. The girl encourages the both of them, because she's under orders to Addison Richards, gang hot shot, who wants to capture them as hostages for Harrison Greene, his chief lieutenant, convicted of murder. In their terrorism campaign the gang kidnap Bee Eddels, daughter of the judge, Ralph Lewis, but the jurist sentences Greene, regardless. The boys meantime have escaped the crooks through bull luck, chiefly because of the pranks they've played on each other in order to be first choice of Miss Bellamy. When they black each other's eyes they're assigned to the riot squad, as cops.

But after sentence has been passed, Flavin is caught, and is brought to a house for the last ride. He outwits Richards, backs out of the room, and from the roof spots the judge's daughter, drawing her up through the skylight while O'Malley brings the squad for the rescue and the cleanup.

The melodramatic story is eased generously with the good-natured but rather violent banterings of O'Malley and Flavin.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Forgotten

(Chesterfield)

Drama

Most readily adaptable, by reason of performance, story and execution, to exhibition in the smaller theatre in the lesser community, "Forgotten," independent production of George R. Batcheller, moves at a slow pace, though the running time is actually but 65 minutes.

Something in the nature of a domestic drama, the story recounts the manner in which an elderly father, a widower, is pushed out of the way by his two sons, aided and abetted by their respective wives, while one daughter and her young chemist fiance fight to save the old man from the pain of having nothing to do, the torture of retirement. It is, in essence, the age-old theme of ungrateful children, and with no different twist.

Perhaps the most salable performances are those by Lee Kohlmar, as the elderly and liberal minded father; June Clyde as the grateful daughter; William Collier, Jr., as the young chemist. The last two names are at least fair marquee material, and that of Kohlmar may be worth attention, since the entire action is centered about him and his performance is quite capable.

More or less conventional selling lines are indicated in merchandising the picture, with all the emphasis possible brought to bear on the idea of the two sons who virtually took their father's business and ran it into the ground. The story leaps from an opening sequence with the father and three children in a small home, to a period 15 years later, when wealth has come with success and the two sons are running the business with their father. The daughter, Miss Clyde, has the greatest affection for her father, but gives a good portion to Collier, whose discovery of a new dye formula is closely watched by the old man, who sees possibilities in it for his own dye works. During the girl's absence the father is virtually forced to retire and move to an old man's home. When Miss Clyde returns, she, with Collier, takes him to her own apartment and he starts business with Collier's formula, competing with his sons. When they are beaten and forced to merge he reveals his connection with the rival firm and the story concludes on a happy domestic scene.

The lesson is taught in an obvious fashion, and it might be well to avoid any mention of that. The youngsters may see it, of course.—AARONSON, New York.

Fighting With Kit Carson

(Mascot Serial)

Action

Immortalizing that little band of frontier scouts whose daring hands and gallant hearts wrested the country from the Indians, "Fighting with Kit Carson" is a serial which every exhibitor would do well to play up for children's matinees. specially valuable is the Boy Scout angle, for which plenty of exploitation tieups are assured. If the first two chapters of this exciting serial are any criterion, the showman need not hesitate in booking the whole series. Johnny Mack Brown, as Kit Carson, is the chief name for the lights. Action predominates throughout, with plenty of fast riding and gunplay. Two-reel chapters.

Strange As It Seems

(Universal)

Interesting

There is a large amount of general interest in this series of oddities the world over, done by John Hix. This, Number 29, pictures a blind man who is an expert at the jig-saw puzzle, the famed house in Massachusetts built and furnished entirely of newspaper, the man who covers himself with bees, divers bringing up kelp from the bottom of the sea off the coast of Mexico, the 76-year-old stunt flyer, and the Arkansas man who does carpentry, fires a rifle, though minus both arms. The subject loses a bit of interest since it is no longer in color, but the material is still of considerable general interest.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Newsreel-Travelogue

A cross between a newsreel and travelogue, there is definite interest for any audience in this new Soviet-made short feature, which should find a ready market if it is made weekly release matter. The descriptive dialogue background has just sufficient native accent to lend further atmosphere.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 184.—(A) What has been your experience in the matter of sound servicing? Have you found it and the sound service men to be, in the main, satisfactory? [Note: This section of the question will be treated separately and no names published in connection therewith. Please be very careful and don't let any personal feeling enter into your answer. I would like to find out just how satisfactory projectionists have found sound servicing, as now in vogue to be.] (B) Should a fuse blow and the new one installed blow at once, what is indicated? Should the new one blow after a time, say several minutes, what would you look for? If it blew after, say, half an hour or an hour, what would you think the probable trouble? (C) Name one possible cause of sudden overload and visible evidence of same.

Answer to Question No. 177

Question No. 177 was: "(A) What is the composition of a fuse wire? (B) Just in what way do fuses act in protection of electrical apparatus and wires? (C) Why do some cities permit the use of link fuses and in fact insist upon their use in projection rooms? (D) Where link fuses are used in a projection room how should they be installed? What types of fuse is the projectionist likely to be called upon to use in his work?

These made satisfactory answer: G. E. Doe; S. Evans and C. Rau; T. Van Vaulkenburg; D. Danielson; J. Wentworth; H. Edwards; L. Van Buskirk and Mr. Kroll; W. Ostrum; L. F. Evans; B. Doe; P. L. Jensen and A. Ilks; L. Hendershot and R. Rubin; G. Tinlin; H. D. Schofield; L. D. Catlin and F. Buler; A. Breaston and H. Haber; L. M. Oglesby and Son; S. F. and W. Love; D. L. Tapley; F. F. Franks and P. K. Daniels; A. Bailey; M. L. George and R. Singleton; L. L. Jones; C. A. Prince, D. L. Prince and C. F. Kenney; R. D. Konley and S. Baybe; C. Cummings and T. Kelley; H. Rogers; D. Goldberg, L. Hutch; D. Diglah and P. Jackson; E. Rymer and B. L. Tanner; S. L. Hill; H. True; L. G. Lamb and D. R. Lyon; R. Geddings; J. H. Rathburn and D. Little; H. B. and D. C. Coates; P. L. Danby; L. Summers and D. L. Banks; D. V. Peterson and M. G. Greig; M. Spencer and D. T. Arlen; E. W. Warner; D. L. Mason and J. T. Ballinger; T. H. and J. N. Wilson; E. Harlor and G. Harrison; O. Allbright; H. C. Lake; G. Johnson and N. T. Kane; B. L. Blinkensdorfer; G. Farmann; R. Wheeler and R. Suler; H. R. Baldwin and W. T. Soare; O. L. Evans; D. L. Howard and F. F. Franks; D. L. Sinklow; S. T. Hanson, A. M. Ginsburg and J. Clark; T. N. Williams and R. S. Allen; B. L. Banning and L. Jones; T. McGruder; M. Simms and O. L. Daris; D. R. Peters and D. Holler; R. S. Patterson and L. H. Danville; R. Geddings; D. Emmerson; M. R. Davis; D. U. Grainger.

"Metal from which fuses are made is an alloy, usually of lead and tin, which has a high temperature coefficient and low melting point."

(B) G. E. Doe and T. Wentworth both answered as follows, almost word for word:

"Fuses protect apparatus and circuit wires, if they be of the right capacity, for the reason that, having a high temperature coefficient, they heat very rapidly and having a melting point far below that necessary to injure copper, when any condition arises which causes an abnormal rise in current flow, the fuse melts and thus stops all flow before the overload can injure either the wires or apparatus attached thereto."

(C) Messrs. Evans and Rau answer briefly and in full as follows:

"The use of link fuses is permitted in the projection room in some cities because it is difficult to boost a link fuse without the inspector instantly detecting it."

(D) Brother Danielson says:

"When the use of link fuses is either permitted or required, they should be installed in a metal cabinet equipped with a self-closing door. Projectionists may be called upon to use cartridge, plug and link fuses, as well as a variation of the cartridge known as the 'little fuse.'"

TO PROJECTIONISTS AND MANAGERS

Some while since, I published a request for certain information, to wit: (a) Voltage of supply current, (b) Kind of rectifying device used, (c) Number watts used at projector light source, (d) Kind of projectors used, (e) Kind of lamps used, (f) Number hours theatre open per day, (g) Number of days theatre open per week, (h) Cost of current for projector light sources per week.

Response to this request has been wholly unsatisfactory as to number. I want at least one from every state in the union and from every province in the Dominion of Canada, as well as from each state in Mexico. May I again ask that every one who has found value in this department through the years past and gone, get busy and make this report. We want the dope. May we have it?

SMPE Distributes Ballots For Election of New Officers

The New York branch of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers this week sent out its annual ballot for election of new officers. Present officers' terms expire September 30.

P. H. Evans, president of the group, has said he will not run for re-election. The other officers whose terms expire next month are D. E. Hyndman, secretary and treasurer, and M. C. Batsel, manager.

Pennsylvania Union Chartered

The Keystone State Moving Picture Operators Association, with headquarters in Philadelphia, has been granted a charter by the state of Pennsylvania, and has been officially registered following mandamus proceedings. The organization's president, Benjamin Futter, has announced the association has no connection with the International Projectionists and Stage Employees of Pennsylvania.

RKO Subsidiaries Appeal Tax

Thirteen subsidiaries of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation have filed petitions with the board of tax appeals at Washington, jointly with the Irving Trust Company of New York, receiver, asking a review of a government claim of $30,592 in 1929 income taxes.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Neligh, Neb.

Dear Herald:

Every once in a while we get all hot and bothered. We have our sad moments. Take now that story that's been in the papers that in an unguarded moment Al handed Walter a haymaker, to the jaw right in public while some of the upper crust were looking on.

We never believed in a one-sided scrap. Had Walter been raised in Nebraska instead of New York the account of that scrap would have required double the space, and now you can see just how much publicity they missed. Walter must be of a meek and retiring disposition, and we presume he "turned the other cheek" as his Sunday school teacher had long since instructed him to do, and that tallies one for Walter's memory. There's nothing like having a good memory.

It seems that Al was laboring under a delusion. He concluded from a scenario that Walter wrote that he was making a too strenuous effort to "bring the chickens home to roost," which reminds us of that old saying that people who live in glass houses should move into a sod shanty for protection. Well, anyhow, let 'em fight. When the silk-hat boys get to fighting it will be fun for us boys with the corduroy breeches. Carlysle Jones says that what Hollywood needs is fewer happy marriages, fewer babies and more whoopee parties. And then somebody shot out the lights and the fight was on.

And now they are starting an agitation for higher admission prices. They forget that this business was built on 5-10-15 and 20-cent admission prices. If we might be allowed to suggest a remedy it would be to raise the quality of the product and the admission prices will take care of themselves. Soak 'em "for all the traffic will bear" has bankrupted many a business.

In the HERALD of July 22nd is an article by B. P. McCormick of Canyon City, Colo., that is well worth reading several times.

B. P. has been an exhibitor for several years and owns several theatres and he knows whereof he speaks, and his knowledge of present as well as past conditions entitles him to occupy a front seat among those who know. His idea is that the best means for weeding out weak and inferior product is to do away with the block booking system and sell pictures upon their merit the same as any other commercial product is sold.

In closing his article B. P. had this to say: "Offer a prize to some writer or director to coin a sweeter phrase for motherhood in pictures. Let's get above the level of the cow having a calf—and a mother having a baby. Motherhood is worthy of a sweeter expression."

Thanks, Brother McCormick, you expressed it just right, and we'd like to shake hands with you. If other exhibitors would express themselves in like manner this business might be headed for early improvement.

Our old-time friend, John Egli of the Hickory theatre at St. Joseph, Mo., wants a few subtitles in pictures so that those who are deaf or hard of hearing can get a better understanding of what the picture is all about. This doesn't sound like an unreasonable request. We can see how that would help people afflicted in that manner to get more enjoyment out of a picture.

John calls upon the Editor and ourself to assist in the matter. The Editor might do something about it, but good gosh, John, nobody would pay any attention to what we might say. We'll betcha we have offered more than ten million dollars' worth of advice in this colyum and nobody has ever paid a nickel for it yet. But say, old-timer, give our regards to Ma. Egli.

Whenever the three Barrymores appear in a picture you are assured of a most excellent performance. "Rasputin and the Empress" is beyond criticism as to star performance and direction, but it is not a small-town picture—if we can judge as to what the small town wants.

Pictures built upon a Russian background do not have any special appeal to the average theatregoer. Simple, homelike stories with an American setting are the kind of pictures that appeal to the average patron of the theatre. "The Old Nest," "Over the Hill," and "The Rainbow Man" are examples that prove this statement. But above all they want clean entertainment.

The Radio Corporation will not permit any profanity or suggestive remarks over their stations. One prominent entertainer tried it some time ago, but he was cut off; he couldn't get away with it as he does on the screen. Why shouldn't the screen be as clean as the radio? Some day it will be, if not voluntarily, then it will be cleaned by law, and none of us want that extreme measure resorted to.

You ought to see our Legion high school baseball team play ball. Oh, Baby! Two years ago they won the state championship and last year they were runner-up. They are in Omaha now competing again for the state championship.

And then there's another thing, as Andy Gump says. In our travels over the country we have run on to a condition many and many a time that should be remedied. An exchange will sell a picture to a lodge, a women's society, the high school or some other organization to be run in the town in opposition to the local theatre operator who, in many cases, is playing their product, and they will sell the picture at less than half the price they would sell the local theatre.

We have met up with this condition more times than we can remember and there is nothing fair or just about it. This condition we find to be very common in towns of from ten thousand down.

The producers will insist, and often it is embodied in the contract, that the picture will not be played at less than a stated price, but they will sell their product to a non-theatrical organization to be played free in many cases.

Every small town exhibitor has this kind of opposition to contend with. They will sell some of their wornout junk pictures to irresponsibles who will frame up a make-shift show to be presented on the street, and these irresponsibles will get the merchants to contribute a certain amount each week for them to put on a free show. This is done, of course, for the purpose of drawing people to town.

This kind of thing has been going on here in our own town for about 10 weeks each Thursday night of, of course, on those nights the local exhibitor starves to death. In all other lines of business it is the duty of the distributor to protect his customer, but not so in the show business. It seems that the only time the exhibitor counts for anything in this business is when they want his name on a contract. Not all producers are guilty of being a party to this kind of practice, but there are too many who are, and there should be some way to remedy it. Outside of that, and several other things connected with the business with which we are quite familiar, we don't pretend to know very much about it, so let's let it go at that.

1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

AIR HOSTESS: Evalyn Knapp, James Murray, Thelma Todd—A dandy picture that pleased 100%, if such a thing is possible. Good story, swell acting, everything a big picture. Should have drawn more than average business.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

CHILD OF MANHATTAN: Nancy Carroll, John Boles—Pleased O.K. and cannot kick on the drawing power. Columbia is very reliable with their pictures. Running time, 68 minutes. Pleased July 6-7-8.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

CHILD OF MANHATTAN: John Boles, Nancy Carroll—A flop at the box office, this type of picture. Just don't give satisfaction. Nancy Carroll don't mean anything at the box office any more. Running time, 75 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

COCKTAIL HOUR: Bebe Daniels—A clever picture that will please. Running time, 74 minutes. Played July 3-4-5.—Boom and DuRand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D. Small town patronage.

DANGEROUS CROSSROADS: Chic Sale—Good action picture that was well received. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 29-30-July 1.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

HIGH SPEED: Buck Jones—Used this as an added feature on Saturday matinee. Plenty of action if that's what you need. The kids went for it, and that's all we're concerned about on Saturday matinee. Running time, 62 minutes. Played July 22.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

PAROLE GIRL: Ralph Bellamy, Mae Clarke—As delightful and interesting a picture as we have run in months and months. Clean, entertaining story, well acted and produced. Business has been very bad for us all this month so I can't say much for its drawing power, but I can recommend the picture very highly. Thank you, Columbia. Played June 14-15.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SO THIS IS AFRICA: Wheeler and Woolsey—This without a doubt is one of the nuttiest pictures ever made. But don't be afraid to play it. It won't hurt you. I have played lots of specials more suggestive. This is funny. I don't think any other two guys could have put it over and got out alive but these two are in a class by themselves. It made them all laugh and were satisfied when they went out. Played July 18-19.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SO THIS IS AFRICA: Wheeler and Woolsey—Playing a hot picture in a cool theatre did some business. Star & Garter Show in Chicago years ago not as rough as this one. But it seems to be what people want.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

SO THIS IS AFRICA: Wheeler and Woolsey—Fair play with comedy as the main attraction. All the patrons like it very much. Big hit in small town. Wish we had more pictures like this one. Mark one up for Columbia. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 17-18.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

STATE TROOPER: Regis Toomey, Evalyn Knapp—No one here knows Toomey, and Evalyn Knapp has no drawing power, so we tried a 1-cent sale on this and put it over to average business. The picture is a good action melodrama. Played June 22.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WHEN STRANGERS MARRY: Jack Holt, Lillian Bond—Jack Holt starts out spanking Lillian Bond, she marries him to get even and he ends up spanking her. But all in between is a delightful love story with plenty of action, comedy and drama. Drew a good week-end business for us. Played June 16-17.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town and rural patronage.

WHITE EAGLE: Buck Jones—Another very good western picture from Columbia. You just can't beat Columbia when it comes to westerns. They are all good. Buck Jones at his best, with a good story full of thrills and action from beginning to finish. Come on, Columbia, give us more like this one and everybody will be satisfied. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 15.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

WOMAN I STOLE, THE: Jack Holt—Pretty fair. Running time, 66 minutes. Played May 25-27.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

First National

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—Quite a few said they thought this his best picture. It gave universal satisfaction. Last two reels has a ball game that will make 'em sit on the edge of the seat.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

HEROES FOR SALE: Richard Barthelmess, Loretta Young—A modern version of the depression that is so real that it leaves you with a funny feeling inside. Barthelmess does some swell acting as the hard luck veteran who takes it on the chin from the war to present times. A very, very fine show. Played July 23-24.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

LITTLE GIANT, THE: Edward G. Robinson—His best one since "Little Caesar." Will please practically anyone. The big "punch" scene, according to producers, is where he quits the booze racket and pays off his gang and the big scene is where he pays his "woman" $25,000.00 and shows her the door. The next is where he is talking about proposing marriage and he says that he never had to mention marriage before.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

Fox

ADORABLE: Janet Gaynor—A very sweet picture, but did not please as other Gaynors. Only fair drawing. Running time, 87 minutes. Played July 10-12.—Boom and DuRand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D. Small town patronage.

ADORABLE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Garat—Help, I have been Cavalcaded again. This is just another of those mythical kingdom things about the princess and the little boy king and the handsome lover. The new foreigner is just another foreigner who should have been left at home. At least it is clean. It has music but it mostly consists of soldiers standing around clicking their heels together.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. General patronage.

BEST OF ENEMIES: Marian Nixon, Buddy Rogers—Good interesting picture that pleased our patrons. The two elderly men in the cast steal the picture, it's theirs and they put it over in grand shape.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

BEST OF ENEMIES: Buddy Rogers, Marian Nixon—Good comedy from Joe Cawthorn and Frank Morgan. Rogers and Nixon supply the romance. Running time, 73 minutes. Played July 12-13.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

CAVALCADE: Diana Wynyard, Clive Brook—Without question a masterpiece. But show me an "epic" in the last few years that has meant a dime to the small town box office. Business considerably below average. Truly a fine picture, which pleased about half. Story, direction, talent are superb. We may be wrong, but we thought the recording was poor. This type of picture is supposed to give a house prestige but we can't use prestige to pay film rentals and our landlord. Running time, 110 minutes. Played July 16-18.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—Any of you boys who do not believe in the Darwinian theory will have to change your minds after seeing this one. Most of the cast are human beings talking the monkey language. Some (mighty few) of your patrons will say it's the best they ever saw, the remainder will wonder what it was all about. Average business for us.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—A very lovely production of the higher class, but lost plenty of money because there are not enough people who want this type in a small town to make it pay. Running time, 110 minutes. Played June 26-28.—Boom and DuRand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D. Small town patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—This must be a marvelous picture. The critics said it was and they should know. A few of my patrons said it was good, a large number walked out on it and the majority went out and knocked it. My personal opinion is that as box office entertainment it is poor. It is supposed to be English history. All of the folks in it speak English. And the recording is poor. The characters in French stories do not speak French. Just why can't some producer try to be original for once and let the cast speak American in an English story so we could understand it. Business average first day, then off to nothing. Running time, 106 minutes.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. General patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—Boresome and distinteresting because it's hard and sometimes impossible to follow. Cast all British except one man and he is lost in the shuffle half of the time. Some talk tongue-tied, some through their noses, some were never on the stage before and some were picked off the street at random. No laughs, no tears, no thrills, no title, no appeal, no expensive sets, no elaborate clothes, no good-looking men or women. Dangerous for Sunday use unless you are in the New England States or England.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

FACE IN THE SKY: Spencer Tracy, Marian Nixon—This production is one of the best we have had for months. It has everything for a country town, action, comedy, melodrama, and is suitable for any small theatre anywhere. Played June 17.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small country patronage.

FACE IN THE SKY: Spencer Tracy, Marian Nixon—The best Spencer Tracy has made for some time. Everyone liked this picture. Running time, 77 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HANDLE WITH CARE: James Dunn, Boots Mallory—Held the attention of my patrons. Good production for any average theatre. Acting of the children is fine. Good anywhere. Played June 24.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small country patronage.

HANDLE WITH CARE: James Dunn, Boots Mallory, El Brendel—Pleasing programer but failed to draw. Played July 5-6.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

HOLD ME TIGHT: Sally Eilers, James Dunn—Seems almost impossible to run a picture without "I am going to have a baby" as part of the dialogue. We are losing our trade among the young people, as they will not come to be embarrassed by this kind of talk. Just an ordinary Eilers-Dunn picture. Running time, 71 minutes. Played July 17-18.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

HOLD ME TIGHT: Sally Eilers, James Dunn—A right entertaining little picture.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. General patronage.

HUMANITY: Boots Mallory—Good but no draw. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 29-July 1.—Boom and DuRand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D. Small town patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Program picture played on Sunday. Should be used on a Friday-Saturday. Not big enough for best days at advanced admissions. Played July 16-17.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTNING: George O'Brien—Very good Zane Grey western. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TRICK FOR TRICK: Ralph Morgan—Rival magicians battle, with a murder mystery thrown in for good measure. Clean and interesting. Played July 7-8.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

WARRIOR'S HUSBAND, THE: Elissa Landi,

David Manners, Ernest Truex, Marjorie Rambeau—About half of the folks thought it good entertainment. The other half sat through it, so I would say that it is better than average.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. General patronage.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST: Loretta Young, Gene Raymond—Too many animals. Not enough box office entertainment. It is getting to where I can pick a bad picture that will disappoint my patrons and fail to get expenses every time. It is simple. Watch the ones that the critics rave about.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Grahma, Texas. General patronage.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST: Gene Raymond, Loretta Young—One of most satisfactory pictures we ever played. Business fair. Played July 8.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST: Loretta Young, Gene Raymond—A wonderful animal picture. Some very fine pictures of animals. Drew extra good comments. Fair crowd. Running time, 84 minutes. Played July 6-8.—Boom and DuRand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D. Small town patronage.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST: Loretta Young, Gene Raymond—My patrons who came to see this picture expected to see a picture something like "Tarzan," but what a disappointment. Our posters in our lobby showed lots of wild animals and on the strength of this they came the first night, but the second night they stayed. It was luck we played a two-reel comedy from Metro, "Forgotten Babies," that got them all laughing so they left in good humor. Running time, 75 minutes.—Walter Odom Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

Invincible

EXPOSED: William Collier, Jr., Barbara Kent—Stars in this feature were all good and the story entertaining and it saved the show. Our patrons let us live. Played on double bill with "Crashing Broadway."—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

M-G-M

CLEAR ALL WIRES: Lee Tracy—Eight reels of nothing. This has the appearance of a jigsaw puzzle with the principal parts missing. Not one favorable comment. Will the producers ever get wise to the fact that we want American films with good, plain American language? Very few are interested in old Chinese, Russian or any other foreign custom. Better pay for this and not run it. Even Leo looked bored. Running time, too long. Played July 19-20.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S BROTHER, THE: Laurel and Hardy, Dennis King—The best box office from Metro in a long while. Had the audience rocking with laughter during the entire show. Dennis King's singing was splendid and we could have stood lots more of it, but then we wouldn't have had as much of Laurel and Hardy. This is certainly Laurel and Hardy's masterpiece. Much fine comment helped the show every night. Running time, 90 minutes. Played July 9-10-11.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S BROTHER, THE: Laurel and Hardy, Dennis King, Thelma Todd—A new idea opera with a couple of comedians. Whether they will make stars of this pair without adequate support is questionable. The young folks like them and to some of the older they are a pain in the neck. Dennis King with his wonderful voice as the bandit helped a lot to put the picture over and it is my firm opinion that had not his name been on the cast it would not have got to first base. For me I stressed him for his role in the "Vagabond King" and that is what pulled.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines, Cliff Edwards, Madge Evans—The best William Haines has made for a long time. Cliff Edwards just about steals the show. Of course it had to have a few dirty wisecracks. I guess the director must have thought it could not be a good picture without them. Running time, 75 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston—Metro should be congratulated; this is a knockout. Nothing else need be said, book it, play it, you won't be sorry. Running time, 87 minutes. Played July 14-15.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston, Karen Morley—Very good but very poor draw.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

HELL BELOW: Robert Montgomery, Madge Evans—This is a very good show, should click in most any spot. Running time, 105 minutes. Played July 21-22.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

LOOKING FORWARD: Lionel Barrymore—Good picture of its kind, but not for small towns. Running time, 82 minutes. Played June 25-27.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

MADE ON BROADWAY: Robert Montgomery, Sally Eilers—Just about what you would expect to see in the general run of all-talking program pictures. Good picture of its kind. But we have had so many of this kind that it doesn't seem to create much interest, especially for the second night showing. What we want is a picture that will make you feel it in some way, either to laugh or cry out loud for joy. I am telling you. Running time, 70 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

MADE ON BROADWAY: Robert Montgomery, Sally Eilers—Good program picture. Pleased 75 per cent. Average business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 17-18.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

MASK OF FU MANCHU, THE: Boris Karloff—Poor, too gruesome. No business. Played July 9-11. —Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

NUISANCE, THE: Lee Tracy—Another all-talking picture with Lee Tracy at the bat, with his tongue loose at both ends, and boy, how he rolls the dialogue from start to finish. Now, if you are looking for a talking picture, book this one. I want to ask every exhibitor to write me and tell me how much they love an all-talking picture. For me they kill my joy. Running time, 85 minutes.—Walter Odam, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

NUISANCE, THE: Lee Tracy—Too much a one-man show. Whether it was the title that did not mean much, the picture did not do business. There has been too much Tracy since he hogged the whole show in "Private Jones" with Universal. They can get too much of one actor and this one is it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

PEG O' MY HEART: Marion Davies—This picture has lots of good entertainment in it. Some Irish songs and music that moves along smoothly. Good recording. Little Irish brogue but plain. I feel after reading the Herald that the producers are going to make us pictures that will draw second and third nights, not by posters and not by hand bills but by word of mouth advertising, which is the best advertising that possibly can be had when the picture is good. But if the picture is bad, please get them not to talk. Running time, 85 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS: The Barrymores—I booked this with fear and trembling but was agreeably surprised at the favorable comments. It was a total loss with the children and a part of the younger set but went over better than I expected. The Barrymores are superb while John Morgan, Diana Wynyard and Tad Alexander are excellent. The music is wonderful. I would advise small town exhibitors to show this picture for the benefit of the patrons who appreciate the better class productions. While this was not a financial success, I am very glad I exhibited it. Running time, 127 minutes. Played July 22-23.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

STRANGE INTERLUDE: Norma Shearer, Clark Gable—Much too long and drawn out. Fine acting from principals helped the sordid story. Fair business. Running time, 112 minutes. Played July 16-18. —Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

TODAY WE LIVE: Joan Crawford, Gary Cooper—In this picture there are two well known stars and they have always drawn fair crowds for me. But in this one they do not make the grade. In fact, there is nothing much to be seen in this picture except airplanes by the hundreds. Cannot see why it is called "Today We Live." It sure is hard to sit through a picture and wait for something better to come. Running time, 115 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

TODAY WE LIVE: Joan Crawford, Gary Cooper—I just can't understand why the producers don't realize that the day is past for war. I believe that we all want to forget the horrors of war, let alone sit and watch one for nearly two hours. Just one big long flop. Running time, 110 minutes. Played July 10-11.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

WHISTLING IN THE DARK: Ernest Truex, Una Merkel—This is a very good program picture. Gave satisfaction to the people we got in to see it but no drawing power. Played July 13-14.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Clark Gable, Helen Hayes—As usual, Helen Hayes gives a bang-up good performance. The picture was well liked and well produced. A little too much like "A Farewell to Arms" with the exception of the religious angle where she becomes a nun.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Helen Hayes, Clark Gable—The most beautiful love story in years, but this theatre being in a Jewish locality, this didn't click as it should. Running time, 109 minutes. Played July 17-18.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Helen Hayes, Clark Gable—Good picture if you have the class of people who want to see a picture of its kind. I guess those who know the Catholic religion would appreciate it most, and we are not blessed with many of them here. The young set didn't seem to care for it much, so our business was small on this one. It seems to me that producers would know this kind of picture would not suit a small town theatre. Running time, 101 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

Monogram

CRASHING BROADWAY: Rex Bell—A very poor burlesque on the old time show business. Old-timers will admit the old times were a little crude, but not rotten. Played on a double bill with "Exposed."—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Paramount

BEDTIME STORY, A.: Maurice Chevalier, Baby LeRoy—Fair play but drew awful poor business. Maurice Chevalier is not an attraction in our town. Paramount made a fair play but drew the wrong actor. Here's hoping we have better players next time. Running time, 86 minutes. Played June 24-25. —Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

BEDTIME STORY, A: Maurice Chevalier, Baby LeRoy—Baby LeRoy was star of this one and it was really liked. Chevalier is slipping in popularity. No raves from the feminine part of population. Running time, 87 minutes. Played July 14-15.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

EAGLE AND THE HAWK, THE: Fredric March, Cary Grant, Carole Lombard—Very good picture of war days and its air force. Pleased and drew some extra business. Played July 16-17-18.—P. G. Estee, S. [illegible] Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

FROM HELL TO HEAVEN: Carole Lombard, Jack Oakie. KING OF THE JUNGLE: Buster Crabbe, Frances Dee. LUXURY LINER: George Brent, Zita Johann. A LADY'S PROFESSION: Alison Skipworth, Roland Young. STRICTLY PERSONAL: Marjorie Rambeau, Eddie Quillan, Dorothy Jordan. UNDER COVER MAN: George Raft, Nancy Carroll. UNDER THE TONTO RIM: Stuart Erwin—All are good program pictures. The company must have a Gabriel watching over the production unit. If they can keep this up all hell can't stop them from lifting the mortgage.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: Gary Cooper, Wynne Gibson, George Raft, Richard Bennett—Excellent satisfaction to a little larger business than we have been drawing. Played July 12-13.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

I LOVE THAT MAN: Nancy Carroll, Edmund Lowe—Good play. Active throughout the play. Kept the patrons interested. The wrong title was chosen. Many people wouldn't come for fear they wouldn't like it. Running time, 88 minutes. Played July 8-9. —Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: Peggy Hopkins Joyce, Burns and Allen, Rudy Vallee, Stuart Erwin—An unusually good comedy which was enjoyed by those who saw it. With two banks closed, we can do no business on anything. Running time, 60 minutes. Played July 19-20.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

LUXURY LINER: George Brent, Zita Johann, Frank Morgan—Quite a nice little picture that people liked. Alice White stole the picture. Sure a cute little bunch.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

MYSTERIOUS RIDER, THE: Kent Taylor—Fair western that drew the best business we have experienced in several weeks, although that was not up to normal. Our two banks are still closed. Played July 15.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

SIGN OF THE CROSS: Fredric March, Claudette Colbert—I would say this is by far the biggest production, bar none, since talkies. It is a tremendous box office picture. You need not advertise it, they just come. For those who like me are late in playing it they have a great big treat coming.—W.H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

SONG OF THE EAGLE: Charles Bickford, Mary Brian, Richard Arlen—Remarkable play. It fits the occasion. We had a very good patronage. We ran it on our merchants' night. We received much praise. Mark one more up for Paramount. Running time, 74 minutes. Played June 27-28.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

STORY OF TEMPLE DRAKE, THE: Miriam Hopkins, Jack LaRue—Fairly good murder and mystery play but have been having too many of this sort of thing lately. People are getting tired of these. Give us something different, Paramount. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 1-2.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

SUNSET PASS: Randolph Scott, Tom Keene—Good smashing Zane Grey western. It held the attention of our patrons from beginning to the finish. We showed it on our merchants' night. Paramount should have more plays like this one. Running time, 60 minutes. Played June 20-21.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

TERROR ABOARD: Neil Hamilton, Chas. Ruggles Just a very mixed up bunch of nothing, that leaves the people wondering how they were fooled to sit through it. Very poor picture. Terrible job of recording and amateur photography. Lay off of it. No sense in turning out a picture like this.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

RKO

AGE OF CONSENT, THE: Dorothy Wilson, Richard Cromwell, Arline Judge, Eric Linden—Good programer. Not so hopped up over Dorothy Wilson. Arline Judge took the show home with her. Eric Linden and Richard Cromwell play their flaming youth parts well. John Halliday outstanding. Contrary to reports, "Age of Consent" is not particularly sexy, it is just human. Should please. Played July 12-13.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

EMERGENCY CALL: Bill Boyd, Betty Furness—Action and thrills in this tale of the hospital emergency force. Good week-end drama. Played July 14-15.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

GREAT JASPER, THE: Richard Dix—Did not go over well. Dix isn't given the pictures to play in lately. Running time, 85 minutes. Played June 22-24. —Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Robert Armstrong, Bruce Cabot—We exhibitors do love to give a good picture a big boost and now in "King Kong" is our chance. This picture is one of the most thrilling and sensational of fighting monsters ever shown on the screen and all so natural and well done that you cannot help but think you have seen it in reality. Recording plain English and well understood. Running time, 11 reels.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot, Robert Armstrong—This is so different from general run of pictures it will do extra business. Some thrilling fight scenes between the animals. Running time, 100 minutes. Played 2-4.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MELODY CRUISE: Helen Mack, Phil Harris, Charles Ruggles—Pretty good comedy drama with music and some singing. One ice skating ballet especially pleasing. Played July 19.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

OUR BETTERS: Constance Bennett—Constance Bennett used to be one of our biggest drawing cards, but this proves why she has fallen off. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 12-13.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatres, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

OUR BETTERS: Constance Bennett—Terrible. Bennett talks too much. More action and less words please. Constance Bennett means nothing to our class. Too ritzy. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 9-11.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PAST OF MARY HOLMES, THE: Helen MacKellar, Eric Linden—Fair. Hot weather killed business. Played July 19-20- Alyce Cornell, Galewood The. atre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PENGUIN POOL MURDER: Edna May Oliver—I was disappointed in this one. The only redeeming feature was Edna May Oliver, and, outside of her, there was little to attract any favorable comment. Played July 1.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small country patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SWEETHEART: Ginger Rogers, Norman Foster—Clever comedy drama of girl radio star. Clean entertainment. Played July 9-10.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SWEETHEART: Ginger Rogers —Not as much music as I hoped for, but fine little picture. Running time, 76 minutes. Played July 2-3-4. —Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

SAILOR, BE GOOD: Jack Oakie—Fair; our patrons like Oakie. Not up to his standard, but pleased. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 12-14.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SILVER CORD, THE: Irene Dunne, Joel McCrea—The greatest daughter-in-law and mother-in-law racket you ever knew or heard of. You never have seen and you never will see such a picture as this one. All the cast in this picture except the mother who plays mother-in-law are fine, but this woman who plays the mother of her two sons may God see fit to forgive her for hatred for daughters-in-law. Boys, it won't draw second night. Running time, 70 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

TOPAZE: John Barrymore—I like this one myself, but I received a lot of kicks from it. Too many don't see the humor in it. Running time, 78 minutes. Played June 11-13.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

United Artists

KID FROM SPAIN, THE: Eddie Cantor—A fair picture, but nothing to really rave about. Not enough comedy for a comedy picture and not enough music for a musical. Also not enough entertainment and box office for the price they ask. Running time, 97 minutes.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. General patronage.

SEND PROGRAMS TO POTAMKIN

Would appreciate it if other theatre managers would send me their programs."—WALTER H. E. POTAMKIN, Cedar Theatre, 60th and Cedar Avenue (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa.

Surely that's a reasonable request. Contributors to this Department, and other exhibitor readers, are requested to cooperate.

Universal

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart, Ralph Bellamy—A good picture from all angles. Played July 4. —P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

BE MINE TONIGHT and ROME EXPRESS: Foreign Casts—Regardless of what the critics say, these pictures are no good in a small town. The cast means nothing to them and for that reason they stay away. The recording is wrong and I doubt if any outfit can get more than 80 per cent of the talk due to the accent. Certainly there will have to be a big improvement if any foreign-made pictures are used in the small towns. The reaction due to the not understanding what was being said was bad. Neither of them did business and I for one am off them for good; the small town public will not support them, outside of a very few. The Polish tenor in "Be Mine Tonight" has a good voice, but as an actor he is decidedly ham. Both of them I laid to in the advertising, but they were the worst flops at the box office this year.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

BIG CAGE, THE: Clyde Beatty, Anita Page—Best week-end business we've had since the bank holiday. It has enough story to hold suspense and is very thrilling, also.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

DESTINATION UNKNOWN: Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy—I can't call this a good picture. It pleased no one. A lot of good talent wasted trying to make entertainment out of nothing.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

IGLOO and LUCKY DOG: Charles "Chic" Sale—Don't say I did not warn you; these two features are not material for picture show entertainment, and if you like me persist in putting them on, you may wish for the best and expect the worst. I had a thought that "Igloo" being an Iceberg picture it would make pleasing entertainment, but find it is a repetition of this type we have had several times before, "Viking," etc. The "Lucky Dog" is the exhibitor that does not play it.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

KING OF JAZZ: Paul Whiteman—Don't be afraid of this because it's a reissue. It's good enough for anyone's show shop. It grossed more in two days than "Cavalcade" did in three, and I didn't have to mortgage the north eighty to pay for it. Played July 15-16.—F. S. Crane, Plaza Theatre, Clyde, Kan. General patronage.

KING OF JAZZ: Paul Whiteman—We had splendid business the first night, and very poor the second night. Lack of story seemed to kill the picture. But it is truly a magnificent production. Some of our patrons praised it to the skies; others thought it was tiresome. Personally, I think it is well worth playing and unless you know it to be a reissue, you would never know it by looking at it now. Played July 17-18.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LUCKY DOG: Charles "Chic" Sale—See Brenner's report on "Igloo."

MUMMY, THE: Boris Karloff—Not a "horror" picture, but very weird and fantastic. Very interesting to people who like this kind of entertainment, but did not draw at all for us.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—I notice that Universal has announced four Slim Summerville and Zasu Pitts pictures for the coming year. If Universal wants to maintain the popularity of this team, the stories will have to be constructed with better care than "Out All Night." This has its good moments and also others that have been thrown together without rhyme or reason. Drawing power a little above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—Give us more pictures like this; appeals to young and old. Did good business. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 12-14.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy—One of the best that we have played for months. Tracy was the whole show, but he was excellent. Everybody seemed greatly pleased with this picture, and often applauded it. Played July 8.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small country patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy—Right out in the front line of entertaining pictures. Nobody else but Lee Tracy could have taken such a part and put it over so well. Lee doesn't want to go to war; he is not a coward, but he just doesn't see any sense in fighting some one who never did anything to him. So he tries to dodge the draft. Then after he is drafted he does everything he can to create trouble. But you love him, anyhow.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy—A knockout. Very good, indeed. My print was poor, but we got it through and, as usual, had the exchange say it was in first-class shape.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

ROME EXPRESS: Conrad Veidt, Esther Ralston—Awful. Eighty-seven minutes of chatter that you couldn't understand. Running time, 87 minutes. Played July 1920.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

ROME EXPRESS and BE MINE TONIGHT: See Hancock's report on "Be Mine Tonight."

Warner

EX-LADY: Bette Davis—Good, as are most from Warner Bros.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

42ND STREET: Bebe Daniels, Warner Baxter, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—A wonderful draw and pleases. Running time, 89 minutes. Played July 17-19.—Boom and DuRand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D. Small town patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1933: Warren William, Joan Blondell, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell, Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee, Ned Sparks, Ginger Rogers—Warner has done the impossible. One of the biggest pictures of the past five years. Words cannot begin to describe it. Story excellent, acting marvelous, music and dancing wonderful, settings beautiful and perfect direction. We enjoyed the best business in the past five years (since Gold Diggers of Broadway) and second to our house record. We were the first in this territory to play this and we are very proud of the fact. We had people from a radius of 100 miles in our state and that is going some for any picture. If you have not played this one, get it by all means and we guarantee that you will never regret it. We had considerable trouble getting an early date on this, but it was worth all of it and then more. Let us have more like this and the poor exhibitors will be able to get on their feet again. Just let the people know you are playing Gold Diggers and you can rest assured that you will do a capacity business. Step out and advertise this one and you will do the greatest business of any time. We played it three days and could have done a good business for at least two more days. Come on, Warner, let us have more like this. Running time, 90 minutes. Played July 17-18-19.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HARD TO HANDLE: James Cagney, Mary Brian—Another knockout. Believe it or not, Jimmy doesn't sock any females; he talks them out of whatever he may be interested in. Our fans are crazy about Ruth Donnelly. She is a panic. With a picture as satisfactory as this every week we could forget all about the recent depression. Running time, 76 minutes. Played June 14-15.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

KING'S VACATION, THE: George Arliss — A mighty good picture. Story fine, acting great. But it did not draw. Pleased all we got. Played July 16-17.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LADIES THEY TALK ABOUT: Barbara Stanwyck—This will easily pass as above average entertainment. While a prison type picture, it deals with the women angle of prison life and more of its pleasant side than its dark tragic side. While an escape is planned, it is all handled in a very interesting manner. The romance angle is also nicely handled. You are quite safe in stepping on this. Business on this was off on account of a carnival which opened up a couple of blocks from the theatre.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LAWYER MAN: William Powell, Joan Blondell—Good. Nice music and good photography. We always look forward to a First National or Warner picture; they have grand music. Played July 16-18.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MAYOR OF HELL, THE: James Cagney, Madge Evans—Here is a knockout picture and pleased 100 per cent. Ran on a Friday-Saturday and did one of the best Saturdays to date. Here is a picture that every man, woman and child should see. A picture of the reform schools and their workings. Cagney and Evans have little to do, only carry the love interest, as Frankie Darro completely takes the show, and how. This kid will be a great star some day. Boost this one plenty. Played 21-22.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

MYSTERY OF THE WAX MUSEUM: Lionel Atwill, Fay Wray—An unusually good mystery thriller of the scarey type. It is in natural color, the recording is unusually good, photography better, and it has a wisecracking newspaper angle that takes it out of the Frankenstein class. Business above average.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. General patronage.

NARROW CORNER, THE: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—This one is just another picture and not up to Doug, Jr., standard. When the show is out and you leave the theatre you haven't seen a thing. Played July 16-17.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE DETECTIVE 62: William Powell—Here is a swell little picture with Powell once more in the type of role he is made for, this time a divorce detective, and he gets tied up with Margaret Lindsay, a newcomer to the screen and O. K. This will please all Powell fans and all others who see it. Played July 12-13.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

World Wide

CONSTANT WOMAN, THE: Conrad Nagel, Liela Hyams—Good program picture. Will please 100 per cent.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

Bennie F. Zeidman

HELL'S HOUSE: Junior Durkin, Pat O'Brien—Excellent play with a good cast. The acting was superb, but the recording and photographing was terrible. Our patrons were dissatisfied on these two points. Otherwise they enjoyed it very much. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 4-5.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

BEER PARADE, THE: Scrappy Cartoon—Fair.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

DELIVERY BOY: Mickey Mouse—An ideal cartoon for a patriotic day or program. Mickey does his stunts to the tune of "Stars and Stripes Forever." It's fine.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

PROSPERITY BLUES: Krazy Kat Cartoon—Extra good. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SHOWING OFF: Scrappy Cartoon—Good little cartoon. But all of Columbia's cartoons are good. Wish their cartoon producers and their makers of the rest of their shorts would get together. Running time, 7 minutes.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

WINTER: Silly Symphony—If there are any "doubting Thomases" in your town about the ground hog returning to cover when he sees his shadow, just show this cartoon. It's clever and good. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Educational

BURNED AT THE STEAK: Great Hokum Mystery—This comedy is just awful.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

COLLEGE SPIRIT: Terry-Toon—A football game between the cats and the mice furnishes the clever idea for the fun in this cartoon. We thought it was good. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TORCHY ROLLS HIS OWN: Ray Cooke—Not even the kids got many laughs out of this. It's decidedly poor. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TWO BLACK CROWS IN AFRICA: Moran and Mack—Makes a splendid Saturday night comedy. Don't miss using it.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

M-G-M

FORGOTTEN BABIES: Our Gang—A wonderful kid comedy. The best I ever seen.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

GIRL GRIEF: Charley Chase—A Charley Chase comedy that is really funny. Anything that will make the exhibitor laugh these days must be good. The best Chase comedy for a long time.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

KICK OFF, THE: Boy Friend Comedy—This one is quite old, but it is certainly good. Not a dull moment. Running time, 21 minutes.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

MR. BRIDE: Charley Chase—The first good Charley Chase since I forget when. Silly in parts, but it's the old Charlie back again. Running time, 19 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

ONE-TRACK MINDS: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—Fair. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Pa. Small town patronage.

POOCH: Our Gang—Fine. Pleased adults as well as children.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SNEAK EASILY: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—The girls again in more trouble and mixups. Personally I don't care for them; too silly; but what's my judgment to hundreds of others. Running time, 18 minutes.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

SNOW BIRDS: Sport Champions—This single reel was well received by all. An ideal reel for hot weather, showing the thrills, spills, chills, of winter. Excellent narrative by Pete Smith helped a lot. Running time, 9 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

SOILERS, THE: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—Personally I thought this terrible; old-time stuff. But continual laughs from the audience proved that it was O. K. Running time, 18 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

THEIR FIRST MISTAKE: Laurel and Hardy—Excellent. The best in a long time. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

THUNDERING TAXIS: Taxi Boys—Fair. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

YOUNG IRONSIDES: Charley Chase—Good. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP FOR PRESIDENT: Talkartoon—good short. Betty Boop cartoon is a big hit here. Running time, 10 minutes.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

BLUE OF THE NIGHT: Bing Crosby—Very good comedy. Paramount sure did the public a favor when they made this short. Our patrons enjoyed it very much. Running time, 20 minutes.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

DENTIST, THE: Mack Sennett Star—Poor comedy. Few laughs. No attainment to speak of. Paramount ought to be ashamed to call this a comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

DINAH: Mills Bros.—Screen Song—Very good. Mills Bros. well liked here. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

FIGHTING FINS: Sports Eye View—Irvin Cobb bringing in some big fish. Very interesting. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HUMAN FISH: Helene Madison—What the famous Olympic swimming champ lacks as an actress she makes up as a swimmer. Not a sport reel but a Sennett comedy with a plot and everything. Good clean fun—Ouch! Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

IS MY PALM READ?: Talkartoon—A very good cartoon comedy featuring Betty Boop and Bimbo. These talkartoons are pleasing and as a rule very good. Music and stories clever. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PHARMACIST, THE: W. C. Fields—A corking good comedy with a bushel of laughs.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

ROOKIE, THE: Tom Howard—Good one-reeler. Tom Howard is a great comedian. His silly actions and talking keep the crowd amused. Running time, 10 minutes.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

RUMBA RHYTHM: Cuban Band—Here is a fair short (and what I mean, short) on the Cuban band and the well known rumba with scenes of Cuba, its home, and a final rumba dance that makes all previous dances take a back seat. Running time, 7 minutes.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

SONG SHOPPING: Screen Song—The cartoon part is very good, but who ever told Ethel Merman she could sing? Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TOO MANY HIGHBALLS: Lloyd Hamilton—Quite a favorite here, but recording on the bum. Noisy and cheap.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

RKO

BRIDE'S BEREAVEMENT, THE: Masquer Comedy—Good; a barrell of laughs. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HOCUS FOCUS: Clark and McCullough—Another Clark and McCullough that is OK. These boys are about as good as any in the two-reel class. Running time, 18 minutes.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S BIG BROADCAST: Mickey McGuire and Gang—One of the best McGuire comedies I ever ran and in fact one of the best comedies to date. This one has any MGM Our Gang comedies beat a mile. Don't fail to let the kids know about this one. Running time, 18 minutes.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S CHARITY: Mickey McGuire—It's good if you haven't run a lot of them, but my audience is getting tired of seeing this same bunch. Running time, 18 minutes.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S GOLDEN RULE: Mickey McGuire—Good Mickey comedy. Kids loved it and adults seemed to get plenty of chuckles as well. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

PROMOTER, THE: Benny Rubin—If this is a comedy I am a monkey's uncle. Just two reels of wasted film. Not a laugh in it. In fact, it is disgusting. Who wants to see a Jew boy pestering around in a ring opposite a wrestler. They did occasionally change to a dummy so the wrestler could throw him out while the crowd booed. But there was nothing funny or entertaining to that, either, for each time he came back and the thing went on as before. Running time, two reels.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. General patronage.

SO THIS IS HARRIS: Phil Harris—Quite a few favorable comments on this one which is remarkable as usually patrons never mention the short subjects.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

THROUGH THIN AND THICKET: Masquer Comedy—A different kind of comedy that will cause favorable comment.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

United Artists

KLONDIKE KID, THE: Mickey Mouse—Mickey and Minnie up in the snow country. Pleases the children. Good music.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

ALIAS THE PROFESSOR: James Gleason—Didn't have a laugh in it. We term it a pathetic comedy.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

QUIET NIGHT: Bert Roach—Provided some good laughs for Saturday audience. Of course, the night was anything but quiet. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

ROOM MATES: Frank Albertson—Two newly married couples who try to keep other people from guessing they have just been married. Fairly good. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

AUDITION, THE: Melody Master Series—A very good band number with some good singing by the Three X Sisters and some good dancing by a couple of boys. Running time, 8 minutes.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

BEAUTY SPOTS OF THE WORLD: E. M. New-Man World Adventure Series—Very good. Running time, 9 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BOBBY JONES: No. 2—OK for golf bugs. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

LOONEY TUNE: Bosko—Good. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MEAL TICKET, THE: Jack Pearl—How they call this a comedy is beyond me. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

MODERN CINDERELLA, A: Ruth Etting—Nothing to this. Ruth Etting is slipping. If her famous short songs she sings in the two reels were put in one reel it might go over better, but the way it is it gets too tiresome and draggy. No more of her shorts for me. Runnning time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

NOTHING EVER HAPPENS: Musical—A great two-reeler. Wonderful burlesque on "Grand Hotel." Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ONE STEP AHEAD OF MY SHADOW: Merry Melody—Very good cartoon. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PIE A LA MODE: Broadway Brevity—Not much to this one.—H. G. Stettmand, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

SPORT THRILL: No. 6, with Ted Husing—Good. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Serials

Mascot

HURRICANE EXPRESS: John Wayne, Shirley Grey—Going over big. A good serial.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

YOUR FUTURE

Every now and then we receive the good news that another manager has managed to work himself into the exhibitor class by taking over a theatre on his own and to the list we now add that of William Kastar, who for seven years was with the Manhattan Playhouses in New York, and reports he is about to take the big plunge.

Now, it is perfectly fine and proper for every manager to hope that some day he will be able to rise above the salaried class as a theatre operator, but at the same time it is not a matter of such tremendous import to cause any manager to lose sleep right now, or to make him feel unhappy.

It does not necessarily mean that a good manager for some one else can click as his own boss. Financing, buying, and the thousand and one money details that should concern only the exhibitor are depths that many managers have no means of charting and would be quite at sea if cast upon these unfamiliar waters.

And if every manager were capable of succeeding on his own, still the economic situation is a worrisome obstacle to overcome. Falling receipts, poor pictures, lack of payrolls are matters that of course concern the manager as well as his boss, but there is still a sizable gap between putting "over" the theatre and putting "up" for the theatre.

So to those who are chafing at the bit, we say—don't "cook" yourself. Managers have become exhibitors, and managers will continue to blossom out. If it is in you, your turn may come.

"THIS IS NO BULL"

Gosh, how the world do move! General Balbo and a hundred Italian aviators fly casually from Rome to Chicago in a few leisurely days, Wiley Post scampers around the world in less than eight days, science and invention make giant daily strides, prohibition is on its way out, the new deal is going places fast and furiously—but the old time exploitation gags still sock like the proverbial load of bricks.

What brings this thought into print is the number of campaigns received recently that stress the good old "this is no bull" street cow gag. Managers who have used this one for the first time, or are reviving it, report grand returns and have received "much favorable comment" reflecting favorably at the box office.

And from time to time, other of the venerable gags appear, attired in new costumes or with their "old clothes" brushed up and dry cleaned. But effectively put over, withal, as they should be. For although show business changes, the new generation of live wires arises to do battle in defense of the sorely pressed box office, using as ammunition many of the old tried and true stunts around which motion picture theatre advertising revolves, and upon which to an extent, exploitation depends.

MANAGERS' BUSINESS

During a recent "rag chewing" party, the subject of assistant managers came into the conversation. One of the managers present resented that he had little to do with the selection of his assistant, as the filling of this important post was arranged by his home office. Others in the party also indicated that this situation called for a new deal, so in that direction, therefore, we throw the "spot."

Although we find that the trend of decentralization is giving managers more latitude in the operation of their theatres, including the selection of all personnel, nevertheless there are still too many spots where capable managers have little voice.

Whether or not he is on hand when something "breaks" the manager is as responsible at all times for the welfare of his theatre. To help in carrying this load as lightly and securely as possible, the second-in-command should enjoy every confidence and trust. And while his choice by some one else in authority does not necessarily disqualify him in the opinion of his direct superior, the manager's preferences should not be discounted in the best interests of theatre harmony and operation.

FOR WOMEN ONLY

The charming spouse of a hard working manager friend erupts with the complaint, only too familiar, that hubby spends most of his waking time and some of his sleeping hours at the theatre; that this situation is unfair to the wife and children; that something should be done in the interests of family harmony.

Yes, maam, we agree that many otherwise admirable husbands and fathers stand charged with being guilty of occupying themselves with the welfare of their theatres seemingly to the exclusion of all else. At the same time they may be so motivated by the brutal necessity of making a living for their loved ones.

On the other hand, there are managers who emphasize their family devotion to the neglect of the theatre. And of the two, conditions being what they are, we string along with the bird who indicates his regard and affection by working his ears off to provide for the rent and the hot meat.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Boys, we'll let you write your own caption for this one!

H. H. HEDSTROM HAS AN ATTRACTIVE FRONT FOR "GOLD DIGGERS"

For a good-looking home-made electric sign H. H. Hedstrom, manager of the Orpheum Theatre in Twin Falls, Idaho, takes the cake.

"H. H." had his sign running clear across the marquee front, using cutout letters studded with fifty-watt lamps and using twelve of the exchange mat girl figure cutouts as atmosphere. As we show in this night-time exposure of the Orpheum front, it turned out very well, and he tells us it blazed the story for blocks around.

He also used two pretty girls, dressed a la "Gold Diggers" fashion, posed on the side of his car as he traveled slowly up and down the streets. Personal appearances at two leading dances in connection with announcement to the dancing crowds and also the air from one dance hall and local radio station helped sell the picture.

O. K. there, Hedstrom, thanks for your contribution, and don't make yourself scarce on these pages now that you've taken the start you have.

BILL BOSTON. GIVES WORLD'S FAIR TRIPS AS SUMMER PRIZES

Bill Boston, skipper of the Egyptian Theatre, Scottsbluff, Neb., writes that he is ashamed of himself for sitting back and absorbing the ideas of other Round Tablers, without doing anything in return.

So Bill tells us of his World's Fair stunt. a ticket sale voting contest, which has been running since early in April and has closed late in June, the winners to receive a week's all expense trip to Chicago, plus $50 in cash.

Boston states that the U. P. is donating the train rides. The idea sound "aces" as we cannot imagine any prize more tempting at this time. It's quite a trick to persuade the railroads to give away transportation these days, and if any members are interested in how Boston put it over, you might drop him a line and ask.

Economy Plus

Boys, here's a great one for you! Bob Soffer, manager of the New Delancey Street Theatre in New York City, saves his old stills until he gets about a thousand of them and then has his programs printed on them. If it weren't that we know it to be otherwise, we'd think Bob had a little Scotch in him! This is sure a great gag and we know some of you other boys might want to take advantage of it.

PRESS BOOK COVERS MAKE CLEVER JIGS FOR LOBBY STOPPER

John W. Creamer, manager Fox Waldo Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., uses the press books, by cutting up the covers of the better books and making jigs out of them.

He reports that he did this on "Sign of the Cross," by mounting it on beaver board and cutting it up in straight pieces with a mat knife. The pieces were then placed on a table in the foyer with a card reading: "Put the puzzle together and see what big picture is coming."

The puzzle was made easy to assemble so that a large number of patrons could work on it in a short time, and Creamer reports that as many as fifty people worked the jig in one evening. A variation of the idea is to mount a one sheet on an easel. marking it in with lines similar to an assembled jig and running copy alongside to the effect that there is no puzzle to the coming attraction.

SHAFFER SELLS HIS HOUSE WITH A COOL FOYER OF FLOWERS

Gerald Shaffer, manager of the Luna Theatre in Lafayette, Ind., knows what it means to try to get his customers into the house, and after he gets them there he wants to be sure they come again.

The photo below shows an attractive display, Jerry rigged up. His has a trellis in back of his fountain on which flowers are draped. The water is falling over the fountain all the time and behind it are eleven small light bulbs. He tells us it was made at very small cost, the flowers he obtained from a local florist in return for a place card. He keeps a soft green flood light on the display.

Outside the house Jerry has large panels painted blue and white with the slogan "Conditioned Air. Come and Cool Off Healthfully Cool." He tells us he watches this to be sure the place is just right all the time and he's smart to do that, judging from some of the houses we've been in near here.

O. K., Jerry, let's hear some more from you and remember us to Ewing.

DON'T NEGLECT FARMERS!

Missouri Exhibitor Stresses Importance of Keeping After Surrounding Rural Patronage

by TOM EDWARDS
Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo.

Today as always, the rural business is what keeps the small town theatre going. Have been in my present location, Eldon, Missouri, for three years, and have worked all that time to build up the rural trade. I take tickets myself and will venture to say that nine out of ten people from the surrounding territory who come to the show call me "Tom," even if I don't know their names in a great many cases.

This is a very good idea, as I know that the boys who live out in the country and bring their girls in to see the show get a big kick out of calling me by my first name, and I treat them like we were old buddies, which makes them feel that they are big shots. Some of you boys may think I am kidding, but if you took a friend into the city to the largest theatre there and called the manager by his first name when you were making the introductions, your friend would think you were somebody, and so might you.

Eldon is 3,200 population with several good towns within a radius of thirty miles that do not have theatres. I have a red panel body Ford truck with two one sheet boards on each side which we use in covering the rural district. I get out 4,000 monthly calendars that go to every home in this thirty mile radius. I also have boards in several of the smaller towns and also use midget window cards to announce my week's program.

Mailing List

In some of the towns where the roads have been improved to my town I have distributed special passes with copy to the effect that the improved roads now make it possible to get to Eldon easily, and in order for them to see my theatre and the type of show I am running, to use the pass on a certain night. This brings new patronage, gets additional names for the mailing list and creates good will.

In this district all the schools hold a big picnic or Hobo Day just before closing, so I wrote the presidents of the various school student bodies suggesting that they end the day at my theatre, giving them special rates. As a result, I have had a number of groups from the country schools, each running from 20 to 60 admissions. I also run a double feature on Saturday nights showing a western in addition to my regular feature, and though I figured that the farmers might not stay up that late, they do, and like it.

I select one boy in each of the smaller towns to distribute any extra advertising, for which he receives an annual pass, and as he always brings someone with him, a paid admission, he more than pays for his pass, even if he did not put out any advertising. On Saturdays I always try to have some kind of a bally on the streets when the farmers are in, and even if they don't come, at least it keeps them thinking of my show, and if they think about it long enough, they will finally start coming.

What type of pictures my Saturday crowd likes is very important, and I am very careful in booking, as to star and character of show, and I never sluff off a picture on this night. In fact, I play some of my best pictures on Friday and Saturday, because those days draw better than during the week, and by playing big features on these two days, plus Sunday and Monday, my week's gross is larger than it would be if I played the big ones in the middle of the week.

In Conclusion!

Summing it all up, I would say—don't let the people in the rural communities forget for a minute that you have a picture show, and the best show that they can get to see. Watch your Saturday and Sunday bookings, go out in the country and mix with the farmers, and when they come to your theatre, treat them the way they like to be treated, tickle the baby under the chin, and it doesn't hurt to give the little boy or girl a sack of popcorn once in a while, as they remember it for a long time. When I read that someone in the country has been married, I write them a letter of congratulations and invite them to the theatre as my guest.

In closing, I wish that other exhibitors would write an article on how they handle their rural business, as I know that there is still business to be had and would appreciate some angle that others are using.

MOVIE STARS HELP DICK MOSS PROMOTE "KING KONG" IN L. A.

A "King Kong" Ball with Arline Judge, film star, as featured guest, and a radio interview with Fay Wray on her experiences in making the picture were some of the "next to closing" stunts put on by Dick Moss and Ken McGaffey in their promotion at the Los Angeles RKO Hillstreet.

The ball was put on at one of L. A.'s leading dance spots, announced eight days in advance to an attendance of over forty thousand. Radio and special heralds were also used, and a huge "King Kong" was on display in the ballroom for over a week.

Fay Wray's radio talk landed a story and a two-column cut, another station put on a slogan contest, and restaurants featured "Kong" dishes in their menus.

O. K., boys, let's hear some more about your interesting campaigns that you're putting on.

NO STUTTER IN JOE HEWITT'S CAMPAIGN TO PUT OVER ATES

When Roscoe Ates, the stuttering comic made a personal appearance at the Lincoln Theatre, Robinson (Ill.), Joe Hewitt put over a barrage of sock exploitation that did not stutter once in packing them in to see the popular funnny man.

Every store window in the business section carried a three-color welcome sign, and Joe says that by actual count 147 merchants participated in the big hello. Roscoe himself was evidently very pleased with his reception, judging from the photo below posed with Joe in front of the theatre. Incidently, that's the brother Round Tabler to the left. Handsome guy, ain't he?

Hewitt also put on a smart teaser campaign on "Gabriel Over the White House." One week in advance, he ran one inch ads, each addressing some civic official as follows: "Mayor Heath Will Know It," also using his congressman, district attorney, representatives in the same manner. Then the day before the opening he broke his big ad across the top of which was a head—"everybody will know it is the sensation of a Nation." In addition, Joe used names of eighty other well known locals in one line personals with the same copy.

Swell stuff, old timer, and your box office certainly must have reflected the "shot in the arm" you gave these two campaigns. We'll be waiting to hear more from you soon.

FLASH—

BILL BROWN, popular manager of the Marboro Theatre, Brooklyn, who was hurt in an auto accident last week during a theatre inspection tour, is at the Kings County Hospital, where happily he is reported out of danger. His friends will be glad to hear the news, and those of you who want to say hello can write or 'phone him at the hospital. Although Bill is expected to be on his back for a while, we hope he fools us and comes prancing out in a few weeks. Good luck, kid.

ROUND TABLE REGIONAL PARTY PLANS BRING HEARTY RESPONSE

Air Cooled Grill Set Aside for Local Managers' Get-together Turnout Indicated as Members Make Many Early Reservations

Well, say friends, are we going to have a shindig—are we all set for one of those old fashioned "bee-yer und bretzel" conventions?

The answer is "YES"—in caps, and in double spades. For some weeks it seems that the boys were looking around for an occasion to properly salute the return of the golden brew, and your Round Table was nominated to get things in order.

And as you have read the announcement in last week's issue, you know what it's all about; so if you are in reaching distance of Broadway and 49th Street, and if you haven't as yet done so, fill in the blank at the bottom of this page, pin a dollar to it, slip it into an envelope and mail—right now.

For if you don't, you're going to miss a mighty swell time. It isn't going to be one of those stiff, formal parties where everyone sits around waiting for something to happen. Not by a long shot! This is to be a managers' get-together where you can take off your coat, let down your hair and unlax in an atmosphere of good fellowship, with sandwiches, beer and pretzels to make you feel happy and comfortable.

Air-Cooled Grill

And you will be comfortable, for the party is to be held in the air-cooled grill of the Brass Rail, which has been set aside for our private use. The entire room will be ours from midnight on. And that hour gives you plenty of time to get in, if you happen to be located out of town. You can come from nearby points on Long Island, in Westchester County, or from nearby New Jersey and Connecticut and know that the party will still be going strong.

We are working on plans by some entertainment just to help the party get along. And to make sure of that, we are glad to announce that the nationally known Hal Horne, United Artists ad chief, past-president of the AMPA, wit and raconteur, has consented to grace the dais and to do the toastmastering. If you have heard Hal, you know what to expect, and, if you haven't, there's a flock of laughs coming to you.

Celebrities Invited

Picture stars and other interesting celebrities who will be in town on that night are being invited to come over and say hello, and all in all it should be a large evening. So be sure to be there. Make up a party, bring a friend, or come alone. You'll have a good time either way.

Remember, the date has been changed to Thursday, Aug. 17. This has been done for the benefit of the many managers now on vacation who will be back by then and who do not want to miss the gathering.—A-MIKE VOGEL.

NOT TOO LOCAL

We have two purposes in mind in stressing the managers regional midnite get-together. The first, of course, is to encourage the socializing of members who have little opportunity in the course of their duties to get acquainted with their brother managers.

The second purpose is to try and put this over so that members in other sections of the country will also be encouraged to do likewise, and thus develop strong bonds of friendship that will make our lives a bit brighter and our jobs more significant.

We ask that interested members throughout the country give some thought to this so that similar regional gatherings can be arranged, and we hope that whenever time allows, we shall be among those present.

LEO ROSEN STAGED KEEP COOL EXHIBIT IN LOBBY OF HOUSE

In cooperative tie-up with twelve business organizations, Leo Rosen, manager of the Troy, in Troy, N. Y., staged a keep cool exhibit which ran a week in the lobby of his theatre. Virtually every known method of the art of keeping cool was demonstrated at this interesting merchandising event, which was displayed on the mezzanine floor.

The highlights of the exhibit included a coca cola display with free distribution of soft drinks, refrigerator, camping outfits, summer furniture, the vogue in ladies' summer wear, automobile service, etc., etc. The unique thing of the week was a tie-up with a local ice-dealer who banked the street in front of the theatre with 200-pound cakes.

"New Sound" Campaign

Smart managers are realizing the benefits of a publicity that exploits new theatre installation. W. R. Catlow, of the Catlow, Barrington (Ill.), went for a newspaper broadside and lobby flash when he redecorated and installed "high fidelity" sound. This was included in all ads, and a permanent board attached to his sign upright carried the same copy.

STORES CONTRIBUTE MONEY PRIZES FOR CAMEO ADVERTISING

E. J. Harvey, who manages the Warner Cameo, Bristol, Conn., successfully put over a cash prize campaign, the costs of which were contributed by cooperating local merchants. It seems that the Chamber of Commerce was sponsoring a two-day sales event and the members wanted something snappy to give it life.

"E. J." was called in for advice and suggested a new car giveaway, but the costs were prohibitive, so the cash idea was adopted. Every participating merchant gave a numbered coupon with each 50-cent sale and the cash prizes were awarded from the stage of the theatre by the lucky number system. The five-and-ten stores distributed cards with punch marks up to 50 cents, and each purchase was punched until the half dollar total was reached entitling the holder to a coupon.

The only cost to the theatre was an announcement trailer, and the 50 merchants cooperating gave $200 in prize money as well as paying other costs and advertising the idea in their ads and windows. It was a sound good-will builder and brought the theatre a lot of extra business.

INEXPENSIVE!

G. A. Shaffer, manager Luna Theatre, Lafayette, Ind., turns out inexpensive effective fronts. The above on "Elmer the Great" was done by Robert Ewing, house artist, at a cost of less than $2.00.

Here's My Buck!

Please mail me my ticket for the Round Table Midnite Lunch to be held on Thursday, August 17th, at the Brass Rail, Seventh Avenue and 49th Street.

JERSEY GO-GETTERS

by AL ZIMBALIST

It's not how big are you . . . it's how good are you!

You must sell everything big—you must concentrate, personally, on your own advertising, programs, exploitation, publicity, lobbies, etc. Don't let the vendor make up your material for you without explaining exactly what you want sold . . . and how you want it sold. That's going to be an important factor in this heat wave!

When you have decided on your angle, use it throughout every bit of copy and every form of advertising.

The marquee is a theatre property which few of you value aright. It is virtually an illuminated 24-sheet (or bigger) in the heart of the territory, close to competitors, and seen by thousands daily. Make your marquee messages pithy, striking and unconventional, with plenty of changes of style and content.

A good lobby won't sell tickets of itself; but it will certainly act as a clincher, if your ads, exploitation and word-of-mouth have paved the way. Use plenty of originality and make that lobby conform to the centralized idea of your newspaper advertising campaign. That's very important!

Your window displays. Try to get the windows where crowds are sure to pass or gather. As your advertising is so important, give it a real chance. Don't put off until 30 minutes before press time and then grab any old mat and story and shoot it in. As soon as you've decided on your central exploitation idea and how you're going to sell this particular picture, differentiated from all others, go into a huddle with your associates and try to lay out your exact campaign for the whole run of the picture.

A Reporter Continues

A talk with Charlie (vas you dere, too, Sharlie?) Bechtoldt of the beautiful Sanford Theatre in Irvington revealed that in most cases, give-aways like turkeys, geese and foodstuffs prove more of an incentive than jewelry and such tie-ups. As an example, Charlie claims, and we believe he's right, that his business jumped way up when he had the turkey give-away—and fell way down and created ill feeling when the jewelry was given away . . . this is being put on record so that you can guide yourselves accordingly. . . .

George Behr had a unique display in the window of a store adjoining his theatre . . . on the toy give-away. . . . Nat Mutnik is another who exercised effort in selling give-aways . . . and Sam Mutterpearl, of the checkered (he'll tell you its class—who knows these days) took a lot of time and effort . . . not forgetting the Weshner Brothers . . . and this time we believe that Ben cops the honors for his displays . . . everything neatly arranged on a specially erected platform . . . surrounded by beautiful spotlights . . . neat trimmings and an attractive lobby card. . . .

Here's a hand for Jack Stein who really sold Jimmy Shearer's show. . . . and a fistful to Tony Williams for grabbing all the newspaper space on the show. . . . Joe Lefkowitz of the Regent-Paterson is selling his show via a de luxe manner. . . . He's another of those "Gimme newspaper space—" fellows . . . but Joe does more than ask for it—he receives!!!!!. In other words, he can take it!!!! How many of you other fellows can give it—and get it????

Bobby Clark, of the Montclair Clark's, is a very fast little worker . . . nothing secretive about his shows. . . . Everybody knows where his theatre is at, what's playing . . . and . . . buy tickets. . . . Al Barber raided the meadows recently to give more of a sad effect to his theatre front!!!! Hail Milt Brenner for his speedy activities . . . just got to the Hawthorne-Newark and do the people up there know about his theatre, now!!!

AVOIDING SOUND BREAK-DOWNS!

"As we live we learn," is an expression older than ourselves, yet, it is the truest statement ever uttered. In connection with the talkies it is of major importance that we be guided by the troubles that occur from time to time and to profit by what such trouble has taught us in avoiding repetition. By which we do not mean to imply that you should sit back and wait for breakdowns. You must always be after your operators to see that they and the service men (if you use them), do everything humanly possible to avoid sound trouble.

But, getting back to that system of sidetracking trouble by avoiding the same mistake twice: A theatre out on Long Island, New York, was running up against failure of sound time and again. Appeals to the service men did not seem to overcome the difficulty until a complaint was registered with the sound equipment company who sent two engineers out to the theatre and while checking through the apparatus from start to finish found that the operator was shooting oil into the fader every few days and this oil had corroded all the rubber insulation on the wires in that fader.

They found the same trouble in other portions of the equipment and it was necessary to replace wiring almost entirely throughout before that equipment was again in good condition. Although the sound company was not entirely at fault they did more than their share in standing the cost of the repairing and reconditioning, but on the other hand the projectionist of the theatre was obviously all wet when he undertook to inaugurate an oiling system without talking it over with the service man on his weekly rounds.

These items can become troublesome and costly since the patrons of a theatre are not concerned with the mechanics of your house. They pay their admission to see a show and are entitled to that show without breakdowns or excuses. Even the refund of their admission will hardly placate them if they must go home without seeing the show they came to see.

Those houses using sound equipment serviced by the company which installed it should hold that service man accountable for the equipment, but you cannot ask him to take the blame for thoughtlessness or ignorance of your projectionists. Do not tolerate any monkeying with sound apparatus. There are certain things your own operators can watch and look after, everything else should be left to the service men.

HARRY SHAW WAGED DUAL CAMPAIGN ON FILM AND THEATRE

When planning his campaign on "Hallelujah I'm a Bum," Harry Shaw, manager of Loew's State Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., was reminded that Al Jolson, star of the picture, was the man who was mainly responsible for creating the talking picture furore five years ago and forthwith tied-up Jolson's current vehicle with the Fifth Anniversary of Talking Pictures. Incidentally, the same time also happened to be the Fifth Anniversary of Loew's Syracuse, so it was a perfect scheme all around.

The photo shows the big parade arranged by Shaw as the result of a tie-up made with a local dealer in "Chevvies." You will not be able to see the long line of new cars that followed the fife and drum corps but they were there nevertheless. The first car in line had a fellow dressed up as Jolson standing on the bumper, accompanied by another chap with an accordion who sang the title song all the way down the main stem. Shaw also put over a full page co-op with a leading newspaper on the strength of the Anniversary.

Shaw is another of the live managers on the Loew Circuit, as we've had occasion to relate before. The Club is indebted to the U. A. home office for the above information. We'd like to hear from Harry himself if he can find time to drop headquarters a line now and then.

NILES LAUNCHED BIG ADVERTISING EFFORT; RE-OPENING SUCCESS

Part of the campaign launched by Ray Niles of the Chateau Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn., when the theatre reopened recently was a powerful full page newspaper spread in which the theatre's ad completely dominated the other houses.

A local dramatic society impersonated many of the Hollywood stars for the West Coast premiere that was staged. He planted stories in all the newspapers in his town.

That wasn't all, though. The local Time Signal Company gave a talk on the film for three days; cabs carried tire covers; girls called up persons on the rural lines; and after a big snow storm 150 cards were stuck on top of the drifts; also, every hotel and cafe had some sort of copy on "The White Sister" and the re-opening. A special preview was given for press and clergy.

The splendid campaign more than repaid the work put into it, when the theatre jammed opening night and continued for the run of the picture. And we hope it keeps up, Ray. Minneapolis is full of live-wire showmen and we know it keeps you hopping to meet competition, but you seem to be doing a good job.

"GOLD DIGGERS" ACE CAMPAIGN GETTING HANDSOME RETURNS

SAM MILLER, Mgr.
Lyric, Asbury Park, N. J.

Peep show, illustrated in this column, was six feet long, with five partitions, each section having shots of chlorines outside for the "come on." Peep portion, lighted, contained production and star stills. Line across display said "see more of these girls, etc." Thousands of heralds, tabloids, door knob hangers and chocolate coins were put out, music stores gave big windows and played special records, and radio stations announced picture and plugged song numbers.

Beauty parlor tieup on Joan Blondell wave with windows and newspaper ads. Bannered truck paraded, and gold balloons were released, special inflating machine used, this display running parallel to boardwalk, where no advertising is permitted. Smash newspaper campaign and extra billing aided in bringing results that filled house to capacity, including standing room, twenty-five minutes after opening.

CHARLES TAYLOR, Adv. Mgr.
LEE BLUMBERG, Publicity
Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y.

Promoted parade of ladies' auxiliary and fife and drum corps of American Legion through the main streets with banners and smash float with girls and balloons, to theatre, which was illuminated with giant arcs.

Up They Go!

Roller skating sequence got tieup with local rink, having girls skating in business section handing out coins and heralds. Did likewise with girls on bicycles.

Girls in costume released imprinted balloons in front of theatre. Newspaper classified tieup got theatre daily free 25-inch ad plugging picture, all other papers going for art layouts and publicity, starting three weeks in advance. Music stores ran displays and plugged the songs, and marquee featured title of picture, the letters made up of girls' figures.

PHIL SMITH, Mgr.
TOM SPRY, Warner Branch Mgr.
Majestic, Boston, Mass.

Opened with reserved seat premiere, with front and lobby decorated with cutouts, blowups, banners and flags. Animated figure of girl playing violin spotted under marquee. Thousands of posters sniped within 20-mile radius. Mayor of Boston released balloons, many of which contained passes. Powerful arc lights played on lobby and balcony across street where girls threw down chocolate coins.

Usherettes in pirate costumes distributed coins, as did skating girls in velvet scanties carrying gilded baskets. Tom Spry put on an impromptu stunt by leading a parade of complete nearby hotel floor show of chorus girls and 24-piece band. Planted a stooge who kept calling for the "Gold Diggers" song when specially engaged musician playing in lobby, asked for requests.

F. P. HARPSTER, Mgr.
Ohio, Mansfield, Ohio

Underlined all ads four weeks in advance; two-week advance marquee flash; six-week advance 58-foot valance in foyer; stills and cutouts, enlargements of newspaper reviews in advance lobby showings; heralds and special tabloids distributed in laundry and bread packages, cards on all newsstands; on street cars and in surrounding towns.

Name band in town played hit tunes at Coliseum; sound truck covered city and nearby territory; newspaper ran silhouette contest; entire county heavily billed, window displays, auto stickers were some of the important features of this campaign.

Nose Dive!

Myers' Monoplane!

Manager George B. Myers, Capitol Theatre, Frankfort (Ky.), promoted an old monoplane from his local airport for "Eagle and the Hawk." Theatre credits were painted on the wings and the whole planted on a prominent Main Street corner.

Flash—

The Managers' Round Table-Producers July Exploitation Contest is over. Over so far as the time limit is concerned and distinctly "over" in regard to the number of entries received. The last is obviously discernible as we view the stacks of entries that mutely but forcefully cry for examination and judging. We do not envy the judges the job of selecting the winners, and included though we may be among the "pickers," we nevertheless shall endeavor to retire to the background and hide out while the boys are cogitating over the respective merits of the various campaigns.

We shall endeavor to select the fortunate winners in time for announcement in the issue of August 12. As soon as the judges reach their decisions, these managers will be so informed and asked to set a date for their trips so that the necessary arrangements in Chicago can be made. The key to the city is ready and the town band set for the welcome, but reservations and sichlike will have to wait until we hear from the winners. Then for the big time. So here's plenty of luck, and we're sorry you all can't win!

NEW BILLING ANGLE SIMPLIFIES POSTING PROBLEMS FOR LEE

An excellent idea that makes it necessary to post the surrounding country only once in three weeks is offered by M. E. Lee, general manager, Lee Amusement Co., for his three Lee theatres in Cuthbert (Ga.), Walter W. Harrison, manager; Eufaula (Ala.), J. R. McCarthy, manager, and Dawson (Ga.), D. S. Mayo, manager.

Lee has one hundred and fifty boards up, 16 inches by 36, in four sections. He prints up 8x14 cards with his bookings for three weeks in advance, dates on top and art below, and places these in the first three sections, leaving the last for general circuit advertising. Each of the first three sections contain a pile of cards, one for each picture, with the current attraction up. These are connected to a metal sign reading, "Lee Theatres."

The boards are placed in filling stations within a radius of 20 miles, which stands Lee gets in exchange for passes. For this privilege the owner of the location is asked to keep the board alive by removing the current card as soon as the picture has played. The cards are assorted before being placed to make these changes simple.

Similar single boards are planted in prominent spots in drug stores, the changes being handled the same way, and to keep the cards clean, glass panels are provided.

Lee states that the boards cost 50 cents each, the glass panel five cents, enameled theatre sign 70 cents. Poster deliveries made only once in three weeks, and it is found that the pass holders usually bring some paid admissions with them. Members who wish to know more about this idea can write direct to Lee, at Cuthbert, as it sounds good enough to bear repeating. Come again "M. E."

JOHN TREWHELA DID SPLENDID WORK ON "STATE FAIR" STUNT

You can't keep a good man down—and who wants to? John Trewhela, manager of the Judith Theatre, Lewistown, Mont., and Oscar Wilson, Lobby Displayist put out a great front when they played "State Fair." He dressed his usherettes and cashier up as farmerettes (smoking cigarettes?) and carried out the "Fair" effect to perfection. The handsome guy at the end of the photo shown here is John himself.

"State Fair" Front

Incidentally, Trewhela informs us that his theatre was awarded first prize in the Intermountain District for the best exploitation of "State Fair." Congrats, John and keep 'em coming.

THE HARRY MOORE "FAIR" CAMPAIGN SURE WINS DELTA

When Harry R. Moore, manager of the Fox Egyptian Theatre out in Delta, Colo., put on his campaign for "State Fair," there's no doubt that the whole town knew what was playing his house.

He secured the endorsement of the Chamber of Commerce and got every cooperation from the newspapers. For his street bally he hired a professional clown who led the parade of kiddie clowns which followed the band. Prizes were furnished and the band was promoted gratis through the Delta High School.

Merchants tied in by giving candy and the newspapers got together and gave a prize to the merchant having the most unusual Side Show or window display for the occasion. Each merchant that was a member of the Chamber of Commerce put up a banner and paid for it, reading Side Show "State Fair" exhibit.

Judging by the letter of congratulations Harry received from the Chamber of Commerce all the stores in town profited, to say nothing of the theatre itself.

HOWARD MAYLOR IN SMALL TOWN HAS TO STEP ON IT AND PLUG

Howard L. Maylor runs the movie at Oak Harbor, Washington, a town of 306, situated on an island, with a further draw from two small places some distance away. He writes enclosing ads which are well done, especially his layout on "Grand Hotel."

Maylor is a hustler and asks for a few inexpensive ideas to plug his attractions. Well, how about appointing a representative in each of your other towns, Howard, to tell the local folks all about your coming attractions.

And you could try placing an advance one sheet poster card in your ferry to the mainland, and one in your post office. If local mail is delivered, you might also arrange with your R. F. D. mail carrier to spread the word.

We certainly appreciate the spirit of this small town exhibitor who sure acts as though he is going places.

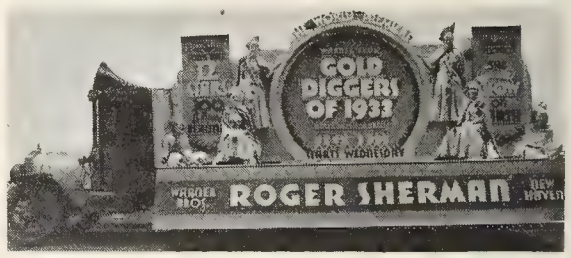
THAT LOTTERY LAW!

The Federal lottery law again recently became a controversial matter as regards the theatre when a Middle West exhibitor was arrested on the charge of conducting a lottery at his theatre. Club members contemplating similar promotional stunts are advised to ascertain from local postal or other authorities the full extent of the law governing such practices.

In the case mentioned above an award of an automobile, handled in the same fashion popular in practically every section of the country these days, brought about the court action. Rival showmen, it is alleged, were instigators of the charges. In defense, the exhibitor claims he did not violate any lottery law, as he merely offered to present the auto to someone attending the theatre within a specified time and, although the award was made through a drawing, the deal was purely for advertising purposes and no extra charge on admission to the theatre was made.

Not long ago a prominent exhibitor in the Southwest found himself in a mint of trouble over lottery laws, and only recently a number of leading fraternal organizations in the East became involved with Federal forces for conducting giveaways at lodge rooms. With so much action in this direction, it is to be hoped that the final airing of all these cases will fix the difference, if any, between so-called out and out gambling and the donation of some article of merchandise for which no charge is made for "chance." The lodge case is being followed up by your daily papers. Watch developments.

GOLD GIRLIES!



One of the standout shots in Jack Sanson's "Gold Diggers" campaign at the Roger Sherman, New Haven, Conn. Jack distributed thousands of heralds house to house via five girls dressed as above in red and gold costumes, and put out sock displays for his lobby, inside and out.

A FEW POINTERS ON HOW TO KEEP ADVERTISING INTERESTING!

SLIGHTLY REVAMPED FROM "FAME" TO SUIT SHOW BUSINESS

It is a comparatively easy matter to win attention—to get one's message before the public's eye. That can be done with large space, color and dramatic treatment. On the other hand, it is not so simple to arouse interest—to capture, and sustain in the reader, that "excitement of feeling accompanying special attention to some object."

In order to arouse interest—and that must be done in order to get the message read—it is necessary that advertising be interesting.

The following are a few methods by which advertising can be kept fresh and vigorous—always attractive and interesting to the public:

1. Change your layout style often. Spar with the reader—surprise him with new effects. Give the impression that you have a different story each time. Remember, very few people sit through the same movie twice.
2. Change your pace, or "copy tone," occasionally. Wrigley, for example, will use humorous copy, then suddenly shift to a more serious vein!
3. Give your text a new typographical dress now and then. Your package and your logotype are all the permanent identification marks you need to worry about repeating.
4. Use a new illustration technique from time to time. Too much of one technique breeds monotony the same as too much of one style of layout. Avoid the crowd; dare to be different!
5. Keep on the lookout for ways to improve your theatre—new ideas in fronts, displays, posters. Often the chief difference between two similar pictures is the method of advertising.
6. Last, but not least, don't be afraid to try out new selling appeals or dominant themes!

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

This poster of Katherine Hepburn was done by Don Andorfer, poster artist at the Strand Theatre in Whitewater, Wis. The head was done in orange and yellow; the name in black; title—red with white highlight line; panel in two-tone tan and the background in black. Sounds mighty attractive to us. How does it strike you, boys? Don promises to keep us supplied with more samples of his art work and here's hoping he does.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Dick Beck at the Castle theatre, who more than once has spotted a picture in his diminutive playhouse and cleaned up after the bigger houses had found some reason for passing it up, seems to have clicked again with "This Nude World." At least the word emanates from F. A. Mindlin that the picture is breaking records at the Castle. And Beck, who controls the picture for Wisconsin, Illinois and Indiana, says he is keeping it running indefinitely. It is now in its fifth week.

Signs that local box offices are getting a break from World Fair visitors are seen in Aaron Jones' move in opening the State-Lake theatre. A week later Balaban & Katz opened the large Granada on the North Side.

Henry Herbel, Universal branch manager, is back from a trip to New York where, with other universalites, he was called to meet Jimmy Grainger, the new U sales manager.

Ludwig Sussman again demonstrated the interest he takes in the folks of his community. Sussman staged a special benefit for the young widow of John Sevick, policeman killed in a courtroom last week.

Among the folk who enjoyed themselves immensely at the United Artists banquet at the Drake were Jack Miller and Aaron Saperstein. Saperstein received two of the Mickey Mouse wrist watches donated by Walt Disney and Aaron says they made a big hit at home.

A. Montague, general salesmanager, and Rube Jackter and Nat Spingold of Columbia stopped in at the local branch to visit Phil Dunas.

Manufacturers and supply dealers from all parts of the country took over the Drake hotel this week for the third convention and exhibit of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers' Association. J. E. Robin is president of the organization and Henry Dusman secretary and treasurer.

Regent Pictures has closed with H. A. Lande of Supreme Screen Classics, Chicago, for the distribution of "Wives Beware" in northern Illinois and Indiana. The company has also closed for release of the film in several southern states.

Wurlitzer Cites Improvement

Rudolph Wurlitzer Company, this week reported a loss of $926,834 for the year ending March 31, as compared with $1,937,006 in the previous fiscal year.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

THE INDUSTRY CODE

by MARTIN QUIGLEY

THE guiding hand of the National Recovery Act descended upon the motion picture industry on Tuesday, August 8. This date marks a memorable occasion for the business of motion pictures—just how memorable and, in fact, just how revolutionary remains to be seen.

The first long step toward conformance with the plans and purposes of the federal government's recovery program on the part of the motion picture business was launched at a meeting held in New York City and presided over by Mr. Sol A. Rosenblatt, Deputy Administrator. In what Mr. Rosenblatt had to say and in how he said it there was created a definite and widespread impression of both approval and acclaim. The principal action taken at the meeting was the appointment by Mr. Rosenblatt of a list of persons of the industry who were instructed immediately to proceed to the difficult task of conciliating and coordinating the various divergent viewpoints on trade practices and policies which obtain in the industry. The appointments were all representative and were received with general satisfaction.

Therefore, there has been definitely launched the work of providing for the business of motion pictures a code of trade practices and policies. That this work must be hastened to a conclusion and that a definite code for the industry must be arrived at was made exceedingly plain by the federal administrator. Added to this there was likewise made plain the fact that once the code has been arrived at arrangements under the Recovery Act will be provided to insure compliance, and this without evasion or compromise.

The fact that there has been internal disorganization in the industry need be neither ignored nor disguised. Further it is virtually a matter of common knowledge that there has been allowed to persist in the trade a conglomeration of unfair, unwise and destructive practices and policies. It is not true that nothing has been done about all of this but unfortunately it is quite true that nothing really effective has been done or at least it has not been done in a way to insure permanent results. There persist in virtually every quarter of the trade abuses which are destructive to the prosperity of the business and in many instances destructive to the public welfare because of the unique impress of the motion picture upon the thought and conduct of the public.

Many of these abuses are rooted in situations of great complexity. Their elimination has never been an easy task and it is not now, even under the all-powerful guiding hand of the federal government. There are many others, however, which have always stood susceptible to quick and easy erasure, but the attitude of rule or ruin, greed, selfishness and deceit have thrown a protecting wall about them and have kept them secure against all previous attacks.

For many years the atmosphere of the trade has been clouded with protests, complaints and recriminations. This has created an unsound and unhealthy condition which has kept the balance on the side of suspicion and distrust rather than on the side of confidence and understanding. The field has been regarded by some as a closed, charmed circle into which no one was expected to attempt to intrude without their approval and consent. The attitude of live and let live was seldom exposed. The industry, weighted down with much internal wrong-doing, was moving hardly at all in the right direction.

We certainly do not hold in any low regard the brain power of the industry, the prevailing sense of righteousness and fair play or its sense of public and private responsibility, but the record reaching back over a period of many years leaves hardly anything at all upon which to hang a confident expectation that with the ways and methods previously employed any real or permanent relief was in sight. Agreements which lack the means of enforcement have been idle gestures and nothing else has been obtainable.

Now, however, comes the New Deal. It has not been asked for and it has not been sent for—but it is here. There will, of course, be selfish and shortsighted efforts to defeat and defer the obvious and tremendous benefits which it is capable of bringing to the motion picture business. It is conceivable, for instance, that some persons will assert that the production code of morals, for some legalistic reason, is something that does not comprise proper subject matter for inclusion in the general industry code. Such a position will, of course, be simply a proclamation to the world that the persons assuming it intend to produce anything that suits their own fancy and to hell with the security of the business and the public welfare.

But assuming as we must assume at this moment that the government's plan for this industry is to carry through to its logical conclusion, that after exhaustive discussion and research a final code is to be drafted and eventually there is to be placed behind it an adequate enforcing agency, then, and at that very moment, this business of motion pictures will step forward in the light of a brilliant new day.

The abuses alone which this business has been able to sustain are in themselves a glowing tribute to its essential profitableness. The progress which has been made has been accomplished in the face of difficulties which have momentarily appeared to be overwhelming. With such abuses curtailed through the maintenance of fair practice throughout the business and with such difficulties lightened through the upbuilding of policies of constructive cooperation the industry will assume a stride that will surprise even its most optimistic sponsors.

To the end of obtaining for the welfare and security of the industry a fair and constructive code, and in order to have this industry in step with the President's program for business recovery, every right-minded person will immediately—and until the goal is reached—lend to the utmost his cooperation.

EMBATTLED SHOWMEN

To battle once more must rush theatre owners of Ohio, this time with the outcome fraught with serious consequence. To the legislative halls at Columbus will storm the embattled showmen, as Governor White sounds the clarion, rallies his legions of legislators on August 14, in special session to invoke new laws, obtain greater revenue for care of the jobless. Currently has Ohio a 10 per cent admission tax, but since it affects above 40-cent admissions, its revenue return is practically a minus sign. Governor White's attack centers about reduction of exemption to zero, with an approximate 12½ per cent tax going out of owners' receipts. To arms has P. J. Wood, MPTO of Ohio business manager, called his cohorts, bidding them come armed with check books and poised pens, that he may wage further the war he commenced last session. . . .

LANDMARK'S PASSING

Past week came news of the passing of another landmark of the screen's early history, as the once famed Essanay studio at Niles, Cal., called the oldest studio built especially for production purposes, was razed to earth. There, in the budding season of the early, perennially popular "Western," one Max Aronson, very much better known as G. M. "Bronco Billy" Anderson, cavorted on horseback, pistol in hand, before a wavering camera. Local collectors flocked to the demise, there to pick up the old saddle, guns and other "props" used by Bronco Billy in a day long ago. . . .

SERVICE CHARGES

No pleasant news to exhibitors over the country is the statement of Electrical Research President John E. Otterson, vacationing in London, that reduction of service charges, not to mention their elimination, is extremely unlikely at this time. Erpi's desire, he indicated, is realization of a 10 per cent profit on service charges; until that margin is gained, passed, adjustments are not to be anticipated. Sharply did President Otterson deny that a recent Wilmington federal court temporary injunction in any way effected maintenance, readjustment of the long contentious service charge. . .

PLAYWRIGHT'S TROUBLE

To court with a deep-dyed grievance last week went John Colton, literarily successful playwright, who numbers among his triumphs a co-authorship of "Rain," authorship of "The Shanghai Gesture," whose Mother Goddam brought shekels innumerable from an excited Broadway in 1926. Not so successful, apparently, has John Colton, also film-writer, been financially, perhaps partly as a result of the plaintiff's "ignorance of the law and business in general." Sued is the Colton agent-attorney, Harry H. Oshin, accused of withholding some $150,000 of the Colton earnings from the stage and screen, whose connection with himself Mr. Colton seeks summarily to terminate legally. Instead of the 90 per cent for Mr. Colton and 10 per cent for Attorney Oshrin, which, says the affidavit, was agreed, the percentage has been virtually reversed. Once before was Mr. Colton's brainchild the subject of trouble, between Mrs. Leslie Carter and Colton, on which occasion Mr. Oshrin acted as mediator, rather than defendant.

DEPRESSION VICTIM

To depression's toll has been added yet another victim, this in the person of Jesse L. Lasky, who in and about a California barn made the film's early "Squaw Man." Seeking shelter beneath the amended bankruptcy act, Mr. Lasky, in a Coast federal court, last week sought relief from an oppressive burden of debt. With assets listed at $134,718, and liabilities at $2,020,024, Mr. Lasky petitioned: "The time has come when I cannot continue to shoulder the burden . . . it has become necessary for me to endeavor to compromise with my creditors." Guarantee of an issue of $750,000 in bonds, pre-depression, on New York property, is blamed for the difficulty. . . .

PAYMENT IN KIND

Slapping back in reciprocation was the unbiblical recommendation of William Gaxton, musical comedy star of note, on his return this week from foreign shores and a vacation, the father of the thought having been the reception he observed accorded Americans of talent in Europe. Curtail recognition here of foreign stage, film players, he suggested, unless the foreign hand is outstretched in welcome, and containing a check. Sufficient unto ourselves are our own performers, said musical comedian Gaxton, holding high aloft the figurative torch of the champion. . . .

CONTRITE PARAMOUNT

More good business sense from the standpoint of employee morale than pure altruism seems indicated as having dictated Paramount's plan to "make up" to employees losses sustained in taking advantage of the company's one-time offer to purchase stock at 52, as forecast recently in General Sales Manager George J. Schaefer's statement. Said he: "Paramount intends to right the wrong. . . ." Though giving no details, he noted a plan in work, expected to prove satisfactory to employees. Contrite Paramount making amends for economic wrongs unintended.

EDITORIAL EFFUSION

From Midwestern Hamilton, Ohio, and its Journal-News, last week came rousing support for the independent, with a definite capital "i," in the motion picture industry. Editorializing on the subject of the Federation of the Motion Picture Industry of America, Inc., newly formed group of independents, and their "battle for the separation of the picture theatres from ownership by the big film companies," the Journal-News said: "The . . . industry is not only bankrupt financially but bankrupt in product. . . Individualism must be restored in the picture theatre business before it can command general public favor."

THALBERG'S STATUS

Irving Thalberg, now in New York from a European vacation, is understood preparing to return to Metro's Culver City studios "in a few days," with a new contract which supposedly settles the reported difficulties between Mr. Thalberg and the studio management. While the agreement was said to be merely awaiting the formality of signatures, Mr. Thalberg on Tuesday refused to discuss his plans or status at Metro, except that he expects to accompany Nicholas M. Schenck, president, Coastward, probably over the week-end. Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production, also is in New York attending the code-formulating conferences. . . .

CODE MAKERS GO TO WORK AS ROSENBLATT WARNS U. S. IS SET TO ACT

by TERRY RAMSAYE

Today, tonight, tomorrow and onward toward an unforecast conclusion, three toiling groups of motion picture leaders, in as many committee rooms of the Bar Association building in midtown New York, will be found engaged in the industry's final effort at a self-made code under which it will operate through the Two-Year Plan of the National Recovery Administration.

The forty-and-seven factions, of the forty-and-seven special interest codes of the bickering weeks gone by, through their vicars, have been set down by the federal authority under instruction to agree. Should this fail the Government will write the code.

Superimposed upon these three committees, coatless and sweating at their debates like so many jurors, are Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film Corporation, coordinator, and Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York, coordinator, and superimposed upon them is Sol A. Rosenblatt, until the other day a Broadway lawyer and now the personification of the firm hand of the United States, officially deputy administrator of the National Recovery Administration, reporting to General Hugh Johnson, administrator, who, booted and spurred, stepped from the World War into industry and politics a few years ago.

Back of all that is Franklin Delano Roosevelt, president, and an administration voted and avalanched into power by a depression-weary people in quest of a new deal.

This impingement of the United States, as an institution, upon our industry of the motion picture, arrived in dramatic physical actuality at ten o'clock Tuesday morning in the great courtlike assembly room of the Bar Association, all bedecked with paintings of notables of the courts and the law, ghostly in their summer wrappings of gauze.

This Mr. Rosenblatt, young, tall, dark, with a certain vigor under his office pallor, arose at the judicial seat on the dais and for something like an hour poured plain talk into a gathering of two hundred and odd men, the most completely representative assemblage of branches, groups, and factions in the history of the industry.

With a curiously adept avoidance of emphasis or accent on the faults of the industry, he asked, demanded—and in substance served notice that the government would get—increased employment, fair hours, fair wages, reputable merchandise and sound business practice.

Softly, but well defined in the background, in this striking picture of the motion picture industry being-talked-to, by inference most delicate, Mr. Rosenblatt brought a realization here was contact with something officially actual. He spoke of code enforcement and mentioned "teeth in the law." The words "revocation of license to do business," and "imprisonment" for code violations, almost casually spoken as they were, snapped like the sparks of a short circuit.

Thereupon, with a deftness that knows its way about in the intricate tangle of motion picture politics, he gave the industry's spokesmen, man by man, selected in careful sequence, the floor each for his moment to have his say. It was done in a manner that placed an all but unconscious restraint upon the special pleaders, the men whose varying contentions in the endless code conferences of the past month have made necessary this current phase of governmental supervision. The attitudes which have made coordination impossible for weeks did not venture to assert themselves upon the floor.

And having given the spokesmen their say, Mr. Rosenblatt announced his coordinators and committees and bade them get to work.

LEADERS' BUSINESS TO MAKE INDUSTRY HEALTHY, CONFERENCE TOLD

Some two hundred representative leaders and workers of virtually every important branch of the motion picture business gathered at 10 a. m. Tuesday in the large, red-carpeted assembly room of the Association of the Bar Building, at 42 West 44th street in New York, in answer to an "invitation" of Sol A. Rosenblatt, deputy administrator of the NRA in charge of amusement codes, to organize a compact, representative, authorized group for the formulation of a single code of trade practices.

The net result expected by Mr. Rosenblatt in setting up code machinery, in the nature of two coordinators, Sidney R. Kent and Charles L. O'Reilly, and three committees, is the completion of a draft by the early part of next week. In the event that the industry fails in this, Mr. Rosenblatt made quite clear that the Government will step in and write the code.

Mr. O'Reilly, commenting Wednesday night on the progress of his exhibition committee, said the numerous problems had been classified in three divisions, the first of which included about 12 proposals to which everyone agreed in principle; the second division, approximately six proposals, to which all agreed in principle but not in draft, and the third, containing six proposals on which there is distinct disagreement. The third division was discussed Wednesday. Mr. O'Reilly would not divulge the proposals except that unrestricted buying heads the third division.

It was learned that distributors Wednesday had not settled the differences over block booking, double bills, interchangeability of playing time, theatre pools and an open film market.

Mr. Kent declined Wednesday to make a statement on developments in his committees.

Forty-seven code-making groups in the film industry were discovered by Mr. Rosenblatt when he took over his NRA post. "But in the end," he remarked with dry emphasis, "there will be only one code."

The administrator gave his audience of imposing motion picture personages a twinge when he said that when he went to Washington he has found the industry there classified down somewhere in the vicinity of the chain stores—"but that has been corrected." He commented upon how widely the motion picture industry differs in pattern from typical businesses and remarked on the fact that 276 classes of labor and crafts are involved in the making of a motion picture.

"It has been suggested," said Mr. Rosenblatt, "that we have three codes, one for each of the three branches, production, distribution and exhibition. I do not think it advisable to write separate codes."

The film leaders were told that the principal code points in which the Administration at Washington is interested, are the establishment of:

1. Maximum hours of employment.
2. Minimum wages.
3. Trade practices in their relation to employment, and as they affect the healthy development of industry.

Highlighting some of the problems of labor which the motion picture code is expected to correct, he related one case where a Hollywood studio regularly paid workers $2.25 for a 16-hour day, and then touched on the system which allows theatre employees, of large de luxe houses principally, to labor from 72 to 86 hours weekly, seven days a week—"with no sunshine, no opportunities." A telegram from Mary Pickford, in Hollywood, was read. She said she was acting for extra players in asking for sympathetic consideration for all destitute players. Mr. Rosenblatt promised proper consideration will be given all classes.

"Statistics show that there are 13,247 theatres in the picture industry, and, in addition, some 6,064 which are closed," said Mr. Rosenblatt. "Whether these closed theatres are dark because they cannot purchase films, or because of economic conditions," is one of the important problems which the industry itself will have to solve. "But it is our business to make the industry a healthy one, and not one in which all theatres are operating 'in the red.'"

Reiterating the basic policy of the National Recovery Act, as passed by Congress last June, Mr. Rosenblatt said the program is intended to "promote the organization of industry for the purpose of cooperative action among trade groups, to induce and maintain united action of labor and management under adequate governmental sanctions and supervision, to eliminate unfair trade practices, to reduce and relieve unemployment, to improve standards of labor, and otherwise to rehabilitate industry."

He explained to the industry, publicly and officially, that penalties provided in the bill give it sufficient "teeth" with which the Government can effect enforcement—whether ndustry wants to or not.

In addition to these enforcement provisions, Mr. Rosenblatt warned that reactions from unfavorable public opinion against those who disobey the provisions of the act will be a more severe penalty. Boycott even was intimated.

To any who might doubt the possibilities of public reaction against violators, or against those who refuse to cooperate with the Administration's program, Mr. Rosenblatt suggested that they "ask E. A. Schiller, Loew circuit executive, what happened at Houston when the Loew theatre could not display the NRA badge, to which it was rightfully entitled, but had not been able to receive promptly." He would not discuss the incident, but intimated that local agitation appeared threatening.

Typical of similar reaction as reported by theatre owners everywhere were incidents discussed privately following Tuesday's meeting by Edward Ansin, an exhibitor who operates some 15 theatres in New England, all in small communities. Mr. Ansin said the public has begun asking at his theatres why the NRA blue eagle insigna is not displayed. This holds true more in small towns than in cities, Mr. Ansin believed.

In this connection, Mr. Rosenblatt said that "we must think nationally" and not only of New York. "The small houses of the country are entitled to as much consideration as the large theatres," he declared.

Some Industry Problems

"I have received at my office in Washington some 2,200 letters from exhibitors about the problems of block booking, blind booking, 'filthy' pictures and the like," he pointed out. "Each and every one of these will be dealt with in the film code."

Among other topics under consideration by the drafting committees are besides wages and employment, hours and the like; admissions, local arbitration, standard exhibition contract, price discrimination, discrimination of runs, zoning, protection, overbuying, selective contracts, double featuring, bicycling, percentage playing, non-theatrical competition, exclusive runs, ethical and clean advertising.

However, according to Mr. Rosenblatt, "a great many problems of this industry are not problems at all." Typical, in his belief, is the national agitation which occasionally arises against improper pictures. Indicating he is opposed to federal censorshp, the deputy administrator declared that "the Hays code of production" for clean pictures, if enforced, "would eliminate the necessity for any organization, association, newspaper or reformer to urge control of the business from the outside" (through censorship). "I recommend that attention be given to the thought of making this impossible," he said. "It can be regulated from the inside and I hope it will be done. Federal censorship is not needed, and you producers should make it impossible through your own code."

"The Administration expects the industry to take quick action in formulating its code," reiterated Mr. Rosenblatt. "Because we are at the beginning of the new picture season, it is of the utmost necessity that the code be expedited. I expect a tentative code to be ready for consideration by the first of next week."

Several times during the meeting, and in private conversations following its adjournment, the administrator made quite clear that unless the tentative draft is completed by the specified date, he will step in "and tell them what to do." In other words, the Government, through the NRA, is prepared to write a code for the industry, if the industry fails to write one itself. "However, I favor the industry writing its own code."

"The Administration takes the position that it should advise and cooperate, not coerce, compel, impair or impede; it holds that it should exercise constructive effort, build up," he added.

One of the more interesting revelations was the announcement by Mr. Rosenblatt of the coming of a "super motion picture trade organization," as provided for all industries under the NRA, to administrate and supervise enforcement of the code during the two years of its authorized existence. The tribunal will be appointed following completion of the code. It will equal in importance the code itself, he said.

"The motion picture industry is in partnership with the United States Government," he said, and, accordingly, a Government representative will sit with film representatives on the tribunal. "Like the code, if the industry does not establish its own tribunal, the Government will set up one for it." This tribunal will be "truly representative" of the entire industry, as specified in the Act, the administrator declared.

Before making known his selection of Mr. Kent and Mr. O'Reilly as official representatives of the NRA, to coordinate all efforts of film interests in formulating a code, Mr. Rosenblatt invited spokesmen for all principal film groups to explain the progress made by their individual associations in writing a code. "The new machnery," he pointed out, "will utilize the past efforts of the many interests which have expended serious and sincere efforts in formulating various codes."

Will H. Hays, president of the MPPDA, first was called upon to outline the code activities of his association of producers and distributors. He reported progress by the separate distribution and production committees of his group, and sounded the keynote of addresses by other leaders who followed him, when he said that all branches possess the desire to adopt a code, to abide by its dictates and to cooperate with the Administration under the code and otherwise.

"When we have finished our efforts," said Mr. Hays, "there will be that proper cooperation between ourselves and the objectives. I am sure that, regardless of divergencies of the past, all will get together."

"The emergencies of the moment are so great, and the emergencies of the industry are of such magnitude, that it is most essential to attack the problems," Mr. Hays continued. His pledge of complete cooperation, which he said he would recommend to his membership, materialized later in the meeting when he read a resolution placing the entire attendance on record as promising the cooperation of the entire industry. Mr. Rosenblatt said "I didn't know we were going to have resolutions." However, he put the question to a vote. There could be heard many scattered "yeahs," no "nays."

In the course of his address Mr. Hays said: "It is a notable fact that producers representing more than 80 per cent of the output of the industry already have placed in force the terms of the President's blanket agreements as to wages, and that nearly all of the leading companies serving in the distribution and exhibition fields, as well as in production, have individually signed the agreement with the President."

Myers Pledges for Allied

Next to be called to the platform by Mr. Rosenblatt was Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States Association, who said that his organization, composed of some several hundred independent theatre owners, was anxious to cooperate on any plan to further the interests of the industry. Its willingness to cooperate, he said, is attested by the fact that, as early as 1929, Allied submitted to the industry a detailed plan with which to work out the various distribution-exhibition problems.

Mr. Myers said his organization now welcomed the opportunity to confer and work out these problems under Governmental supervision, "in the knowledge that the Government is fair and thorough" in the handling of such matters. "There's not one association in the motion picture industry which is truly representative of it; Allied, therefore, welcomes the Government's participation," Mr. Myers said.

However, on the eve of the Rosenblatt conference with all industry factions, Mr. Myers reiterated his stand that "the independent motion picture theatres are subject to the provisions of the National Recovery Act only in so far as their acts or policies may affect the flow of motion pictures in interstate commerce." He said again that wages and hours in independent theatres do not come under the terms of codes.

"In behalf of its members, however, Allied pledges its best efforts to obtain voluntary compliance by the theatres with the wishes of the President in these particulars," said Mr. Myers.

In reply to Mr. Rosenblatt's invitation to at-

PUBLIC BOYCOTT THREATENED

The nationwide drive in behalf of the President's re-employment campaign moved swiftly this week on a number of fronts.

General Hugh S. Johnson, NRA administrator, declared a two-week armistice, beginning last Monday, before the boycotting pressure of public opinion is brought against employers who fail to sign a code. The Government started the distribution of 50,000,000 "sympathy" cards to consumers.

At the same time, General Johnson struck a blow at "rackets" which he said had sprung up in connection with the NRA campaign. He cited efforts to bootleg the blue eagle and attempts to charge merchants, manufacturers and others for listing them on a supposed "honor roll" of the NRA.

DEMANDS DRAFT EARLY NEXT WEEK

tend the meeting, Mr. Myers sent him a rather lengthy communication setting forth the position of Allied in reference to a code. This memorandum, which Mr. Myers simultaneously released to the press, said, "It is unthinkable that the Administration should approve a code for the motion picture industry which does not include provisions condemning as unfair methods of competition all practices which impair the ability of the theatre owner to afford employment at decent wages." The "unfair methods of competition" outlined to Mr. Rosenblatt by Mr. Myers involved:

1. Right to buy.
2. Block booking.
3. Forcing shorts with features.
4. Arbitration.
5. Protection.
6. Overbuying.
7. Score charges.
8. Exclusive runs.
9. Dictation of playing dates.
10. Standard contract.
11. Regulation of theatre construction.

Allied's stand in relation to each of the foregoing was made known long ago. And it since has gone on record as declaring that the MPTOA draft of a code is unsatisfactory.

Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA; Louis B. Mayer, vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and attending as president of the Motion Picture Producers Association, Hollywood; J. Theodore Reed, president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts; Jacob Schechter, counsel for the Federation of the Motion Picture Industry; Sam Wolf, of the Independent Motion Picture Producers, Hollywood, and heads of various state and local exhibitor groups, and of other organizations, all promised Mr. Rosenblatt that they would cooperate with the Government in formulating a code.

"What's In It?": Kuykendall

"We know that the code must be fair and representative," said Mr. Kuykendall. "We are not concerned who writes it, but what's in it."

Mr. Mayer said, "The industry certainly needs a spring cleaning. It took a depression to show the business that it must get its house in order."

Mr. Reed, speaking in behalf of the "creative workers" in Hollywood who are members of the Academy, sought to inject his association into the writing of the code. Later Mr. Rosenblatt did appoint him to the production committee, but he informed Mr. Reed that the writing of a code must be accomplished by employer groups, not by employees. However, as in other industries, the coordinators—Mr. Kent and Mr. O'Reilly—are instructed to confer with authorized representatives of the trade labor groups in order to learn what would constitute fair and proper labor specifications, especially as regards hours, wages and conditions.

Mr. Rosenblatt told the gathering that he already had had preliminary conferences with labor executives in the film business and found them "ready and willing to cooperate and at all times friendly. This is in spite of whatever experience with labor you gentlemen may have had."

The administrator publicly instructed Mr. Kent and Mr. O'Reilly to confer with labor interests in production, distribution and exhibition, particularly with William C. Elliott, president of the IATSE; Joseph Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians; Luise Sillcox, of the Screen Writers Guild; Frank Gillmore, of Actors' Equity.

NRA administrator, was quoted as saying that changes can be made only when labor contracts expire, or when mutually abrogated, and cannot be altered by employer groups where they are "not subject to change at the discretion of the employer." Workers outside the contract groups, whose working time is reduced by code adoption, and who are paid more than the minimum wages prescribed in the blanket code, should receive "substantially the same" pay as before reduction of working time, another Washington ruling said.

Industry Answers "Hurry Call"

Mr. Rosenblatt's invitation to the industry to meet Tuesday in New York to establish code machinery, was telegraphed from his headquarters in the Commerce Building at Washington, on August 2, to producer, distributor and exhibitor organizations. The net result in attendance was the largest and most representative of any executive group ever assembled for a joint motion picture conference. One hundred and twenty-eight accredited representatives were registered, but another fifty, or more, stormed the assembly chambers. (List of registered delegates appears on page 26.)

The administrator told each association to send no more than three delegates. He did not invite representatives of state or city exhibitor groups, except those not affiliated either with MPTOA or Allied, because each of these two national associations would have sufficient representation through the respective leadership of Mr. Myers and Mr. Kuykendall, and their "cabinets."

Speaking for the individual, unaffiliated owners were Messrs. Fishman, Connecticut; Murray, New York; Metzger, Los Angeles; Schuman, Connecticut, among others.

Replying to specific questions from independent owners about trade practices in exhibition, Mr. Rosenblatt emphatically and publicly assured them that each and every element in the industry will get a "square deal, and no other," regardless of size of theatre or company which it operates.

"Go to the exhibitors' code committee headed by Mr. O'Reilly with your problems," said Mr. Rosenblatt in answer to Mr. Schuman's query about the competitive price problems of small exhibitors. "If you don't get the proper attention from this committee, let me hear from you. There is no problem too small and none too large to get attention."

The dramatic moment of Mr. Rosenblatt's sudden and decisive intervention on behalf of a code came about midway in the Tuesday session, when, following the delivery of a preamble to the actual significance of code machinery, he announced that, "because of the complete disorganization" of the industry factions in harmoniously effecting a code for all, Mr. Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film, and Mr. Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York, had been appointed to coordinate all efforts, and that Mr. Kent would head committees of producers and distributors, and Mr. O'Reilly would be in charge of an exhibitor committee to complete the code within the allotted time.

"Therefore, the work of the coordinators starts immediately after lunch today." (Tuesday.) Both Mr. Kent and Mr. O'Reilly promised to abandon their regular motion picture duties during the code conferences, "working 24 hours a day, every day, if necessary, until the agreement is universally ratified."

Mr. Rosenblatt's appointment of Mr. Kent and Mr. O'Reilly as coordinators was made, he said, because they both "have reputations for honesty and fair dealings among all groups."

"This is not an official NRA hearing on the motion picture code," explained Mr. Rosenblatt, "but is intended to formulate a representative and tentative code for presentation through the regular channels at Washington. Any individual clauses over which some factions might disagree will be taken up after submission to me of the tentative draft, or at the official hearing, which I expect will be held before the end of the month."

Committees Start Code Work

Opinion of leaders Tuesday indicated that exhibitor and distributor differences over code provisions might be settled without bringing the problems before the NRA at the public hearings at Washington.

The three committees appointed by Mr. Rosenblatt on Tuesday went into session immediately after lunch and were reporting progress in hurdling the first obstacles of the conference chambers. Producer and distributor committees met at the Bar Association and, under the guidance of Mr. Kent, devoted their first hours to organization. Mr. O'Reilly also selected the Bar headquarters for meetings of his exhibitor committee.

Obviously Mr. Rosenblatt succeeded in evenly dividing representation on the three committees between the independent interests and the large companies. On the production committee are five members of major organizations, five representing independent production and Mr. Reed, Academy executive.

Six independents and six major company officials constitute the distribution board, while the exhibitors' group consists of four MPTOA members, a similar number of Allied executives, five affiliated circuit votes and an equal number of independent, unaffiliated owners. The personnel of Mr. Kent's two committees follows:

For production: George Batcheller, Chesterfield; Phil Goldstone, Majestic; M. H. Hoffman, Allied Pictures; W. Ray Johnston, president, Monogram; Benjamin B. Kahane, president, Radio Pictures; Louis B. Mayer, vice-president, MGM; J. T. Reed, president, Academy; William Saal, president, Admiral Pictures; Joseph M. Schenck, president, United Artists; Harry M. Warner, president, Warner-First National; Adolph Zukor, president, Paramount Publix.

Later Eddie Golden of Monogram was transferred to the production committee temporarily,

DISTRIBUTORS LOOK FOR EASING OF FRENCH IMPORT LIMITATIONS

Believe Reduction to 140 Dubbed Versions, Made in France, and Showing of Foreign Originals in 15 Theatres Cannot Be Kept

French branches of American distributors are beginning to feel apprehensive because of the limitations in France's new quota on foreign motion pictures. Never before has there been so rigorous an order to curtail importations, directed not only at those countries which carry quota restrictions, but at the United States as well. One hundred and forty dubbed versions of foreign-made pictures are to be admitted to France in the forthcoming year. Original foreign language versions may be shown in only five Paris theatres and ten provincial theatres, and while the market for exhibition in France is 500 pictures, the most optimistic estimate for French production next season is but little over 100.

The provision calling for the showing of original films on the screens of only 15 French theatres virtually bars Hollywood product from the country and constitutes the most severe setback for American motion pictures in any non-English speaking country.

80 Dubbed U. S. Versions Last Year

In the past year the process of dubbing has improved to a point where, but for the quota, it would be possible for American companies to engage on a large scale in dubbing talkers in France. Last year only 80 of this type were supplied by American interests; this next year, the number is expected to be considerably less.

What effect this will have on the French exhibitor is as yet difficult to ascertain, but Pierre Autre, Motion Picture Herald correspondent in Paris, says advices there are that it is entirely possible that several hundred theatres would be forced to shut down for lack of product if the French government insists upon carrying out the letter of its new provisos.

Last week while an interministerial commission was drafting a new decree for film imports, made necessary by the mass protests some weeks ago of approximately 4,000 French exhibitors against these restrictions, a group of 3,900 of the 4,054 exhibitors in France were insisting further upon the lowering of barriers against the importation of American films in particular.

The government commission will have to sit many more days before the decree finally is drafted, for there is evident a wide difference of opinion between French producers and exhibitors. The producers, led by M. Natan, head of the Pathe-Natan group, want all foreign films barred; the exhibitors insist such an action would kill the theatre.

Harold L. Smith, representative in France of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, looks for a fair solution of the problem.

In 1924, French theatres had 936 films for their screens; in 1932 they had only 496, and many houses equipped for sound had to resort to showing silent pictures. In the same year 208 American films were allowed in France; of this number 127 were shown in but ten theatres under the restriction law, which then prohibited the presentation of foreign language films in more than five Paris and five provincial theatres. Although the limit on provincial showings has been increased by five under the new quota, little material benefit will result, foreign distribution executives in this country believe.

French exhibitors are said to be urging prolongation for one year of the 1932-33 decree, preferring it to the Natan plan, which would eliminate all but a very few foreign films.

The restrictive law immediately makes importation of foreign pictures unprofitable for all parties concerned. French exhibitors repeatedly during the past few weeks have charged that producers are trying to get eventual government subsidies for their industry and seek meanwhile to have importation limited to the number needed over and above their own product to fill out the programs in their own theatres. French patrons long have shown a positive preference for the dubbed Hollywood films.

70 for Each Six Months

Under the new quota, distribution of dubbed pictures more than three reels in length is permitted at the rate of 70 for each six months. No dubbed pictures will be admitted unless the work is done in French studios and within four months of paying the censorship tax on the picture. These productions will be presented to the public as dubbed film, at the same time mentioning the country of origin and indicating the names of all persons connected with the dubbing, including the names of artists whose voices are substituted for the original. The ministries of the interior and commerce and industry will have charge of the quota's enforcement.

Distribution executives and representatives of the MPPDA in New York say that, unless the quota is modified, there will be found a way of making up for the shortage of product.

"Neither the French exhibitor nor, I believe, the French public will stand for such drastic measures as those now in force," an MPPDA official said Monday. "American pictures have become so firmly entrenched in France that to carry out these quota provisions will be suicidal to the French producer as well as the exhibitor. It is clearly a case of a few men, eager to advance their own production possibilities at the expense of hundreds of exhibitors, who have instigated the new law. It cannot succeed, but it may be attempted for the next year. If it is, a considerable loss will result to the American distributor."

The new French quota came into existence after the annual conference between government representatives and producers. Headed by Messieurs Delac and Natan, who declared that the French industry, still too weak, needed protection, the other producers got behind them. The exhibitors, however, asked for an entirely free market in order to benefit from a wide selection and to pay less for their programs, also pointing out that all the quotas established in France since 1928 had never stopped a foreign picture from being introduced into the country.

Last spring M. Delac was in this country and declared the French quota was a thing of the past, that it was a "finished affair" and that American pictures soon would be freely introduced into France.

M. Natan still holds a contract for distribution of RKO Radio pictures abroad. As for the potential output of the Pathe-Natan plant, producer and distributor executives in New York said they doubted that it could turn out many more pictures than it did last year or the year before.

Americans' Branches in France Fear Results of New Quota; 500 Films Needed, and French Product Maximum Held at 100

Philley Dead In St. Joseph

Col. Clarence U. Philley, 67, widely known in theatrical and advertising circles, died last week at his home in St. Joseph, Mo. He formerly was president of the National Outdoor Advertising Association.

Col. Philley was associated with the theatrical business for 30 years. At the time of his death he was affiliated with Gubel Bros. as secretary and treasurer of Electric Theatre Corp., St. Joseph, formerly operated by Publix and now by Dubinsky. Col. Philley was born at McDonough, N. Y., and moved to St. Joseph in 1886.

Kansas Owners Slip on Law

Exhibitors of Kansas, slow to comply with the state censorship law, which became effective July 1, requiring that they display a certificate of approval on the screen, have been cautioned by A. F. Baer, president of the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Association, to adhere to the ruling.

Clark Resigns from Paramount

James A. Clark resigned last week as ad sales manager for Paramount. His resignation becomes effective September 1. Mr. Clark has been in charge of the advertising accessories department for the past six years. No successor has been named to date.

Old Fox Stock Replaced

Old Class A Fox stock has been dropped from the list of the New York Stock Exchange and is replaced by the new issue agreed upon at the recent stockholders' meeting.

MGM Pays Regular Dividend

Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has declared the regular quarterly dividend of 47½ cents on the preferred stock, payable September 15 to stock of record August 31.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

TRADE SHOW THEATRE. View of the 30-seat auditorium which Fox has built into its London headquarters. Instead of renting a dark theatre, this little hall will henceforth be used for exhibitor previews. It is done in a modern design, with a general color scheme of green and gold.

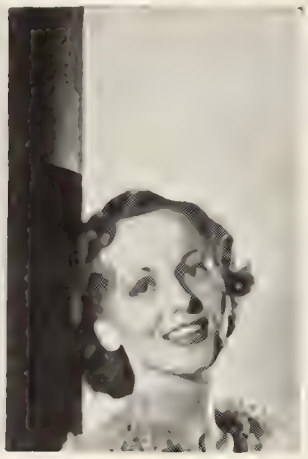
ACQUIRE FAR EAST RIGHTS. P. Padmanabhan of Oriental Film Service, and B. C. Halder, A. K. Halder and P. D. Mukherjee, directors of Halmmook Film Corporation, signing agency contract for Monogram and World Wide product. These companies control this American product in India, Burma and Ceylon.

IN TYROLES! A bit of a pun justified, perhaps, by the fact that they appear thus in Tyrolean sequences of Universal's "Ladies Must Love." They are, in all traditions of the Alps, Mary Carlisle, Dorothy Burgess and Sall O'Neill. The production features June Knight and Neil Hamilton.

ROMANCING TOGETHER AGAIN. A promise of further flights into the more stratospheric reaches of love by this pair, Joel McCrea and Dolores Del Rio, who achieved as much in "The Bird of Paradise." Their new vehicle will be another RKO Radio production, provocatively called "Dance of Desire."

CONGRATULATIONS. Being extended with great sincerity by Mervyn LeRoy to Hannah Williams, former Broadway blues singer, upon her marriage to Jack Dempsey, on the First National lot where LeRoy was directing "The World Changes."

NEWCOMER. (Below) Introducing Mimi Lawlor, who is one of the most recent acquisitions of Educational, for comedies.



SIGNED. (Below) Laurence Olivier, English player, whom MGM has signed to support Greta Garbo in her next production.

ON TO HOLLYWOOD. Gloria Swanson as she arrived in New York on the Olympic with her husband, Michael Farmer, only to leave immediately for Hollywood for a picture to be produced by J. I. Schnitzer, possibly for United Artists release.

CELEBRATING THEIR SUCCESS IN CONTEST. Managers and other executives of Warner Theatres in the Washington zone at an outing arranged by John J. Payette, zone manager, at the close of the Warner circuit's Better Business Drive. Washington won many of the individual prizes. The zone winner was Chicago.

NO RELIEF FOR BRITISH EXHIBITORS DESPITE FIGHT FOR LOWER TAXES

Proposal for Reduced Assessment, Particularly for Smaller Houses, Loses Through Maneuvering of Chamberlain

by BERNARD CHARMAN of London Correspondent Staff

The British exhibitor now knows beyond doubt that he gets just nothing in the way of entertainment tax remission this year. The annual budget statement had made no provision for any relief, although the trade had brought all its guns to bear on the chancellor of the exchequer. It still was hoped that, by resolute picketing of members of Parliament and by presentation of figures proving the hardship of the tax, some remission might still be obtained.

But no! The question came up for discussion in the House recently when at least half a dozen amendments ranging in purport from complete remission of the tax to alleviation for cheaper admission, were tabled. By a subtle maneuvre, Neville Chamberlain insured that the question should not be left to a "free" vote, but should remain a party measure. This made the result a foregone conclusion, and when the showdown came the proposal for a reduction of the tax was defeated by 192 votes to 57.

Many in Sympathy

Among those who voted against relief were many members who had avowed sympathy with the trade. Others, to their credit, rather than break pledges made to exhibitors, refrained from voting.

Mr. Chamberlain admitted that if he were inclined to do anything at all it would be something "more drastic than this particular amendment." The main force of his argument was that the loss of revenue which such a step would involve was too great to be practicable. He would not accept the argument that if he reduced the tax the turnover in the theatres would become greater and he would ultimately receive a bigger return in the way of tax than at present.

One member argued that a more profitable source of revenue would be the imposition of an ad valorem duty on American films imported into this country. This proposal was introduced again during an unrelated part of the House's business, when a member suggested that, as the American firms were allowed in many instances to make income tax returns on estimated takings, a large amount of their income often escaped taxation. The Chancellor's reply to this suggestion was that he could not conceive of any method of improvement on the present system.

The views of Thomas Ormiston, who, in addition to being a Member of Parliament, is also treasurer of the Kinematograph Exhibitors Association naturally were among those which impressed the House most. Mr. Ormiston pointed out that when the tax on sixpenny admissions was removed in 1924 it gave a tremendous impetus to attendances at motion picture theatres, while since it had been re-imposed a large decrease in attendances had been noticed. "Members must not think," he said, "that the cinema is the entertainment that they see in the West End of London. In many of the smaller towns and villages of this country the cinema is the only entertainment that the people have. It is the cheapest entertainment that has ever come before the public, and the least harmful; in fact, in many ways it is the most beneficial form of entertainment the people have ever had."

Calls Arguments Inconsistent

One further point propounded by Mr. Chamberlain before the matter was put to the vote was that the arguments used by supporters of the amendment were not consistent. Some said the exhibitors could not pay the tax, while others said it bore most hardly on the poorer patrons. If exhibitors were passing on the tax it could not be a burden to them, while if the theatres were paying it the public could not complain.

That, of course, is an absolute quibble. Whichever party to the arrangement bears the actual burden, both feel hardship. If the exhibitor puts up the price he gets a decreased patronage; if he bears the tax himself he can only give the public a cheaper service (poorer films or restricted amenities). It cuts both ways.

In spite of this decisive reverse, the trade refuses to be discouraged by the obduracy of the Chancellor. The attitude of the CEA, expressed by W. R. Fuller, general secretary, is: "We have gained considerable ground. For the first time, the tax has demanded a considerable amount of discussion in the House, and there is clear evidence of a growing and increasing sympathy with the industry's claims."

Immediate plans are to be considered for an intensive campaign to back up the drive launched before the current budget. CEA branches have been advised to keep the matter alive among their members, so that the campaign shall have 100 per cent backing.

Tribute to the Screen

A tribute to the trade was paid by Edward Shortt, president of the British Board of Film Censors, when he spoke at a meeting of women's organizations convened in support of new governmental conditions for theatre licenses. The trade, he said, had proved itself loyal in support of the aims of the Board of Censors over 21 years, in making the cinema one of the most potent influences for good in the life of the nation.

Sir Cecil Levita, public personality and former chairman of the London County Council, described motion pictures as "the most popular form of entertainment the world has ever seen." He suggested that people should go to the motion picture theatre, not so much to be "uplifted" as to be amused, and that their entertainment should not be tempered by the prevailing motive of the "highbrow," which was criticism.

The women of England, he declared, by proper supervision of their children, and by their attendance or non-attendance at picture theatres, could accomplish far more than any legislation in obtaining clean and wholesome films.

An Exhibitor's View

The exhibitor's view of the governmental conditions mentioned was, incidentally, succinctly expressed by a Lancashire showman. Criticizing a clause referring to "films likely to incite to crime or immorality," he said:

"For years I thought I was in the entertainment business, but recently I have begun to fancy I am running a 'red lamp' or something very near to one!"

Franklin Resigns RKO Canadian Post

Joseph M. Franklin resigned as Canadian general manager for RKO last week, and his Toronto office will be closed August 14, with the resignation effective the end of the month.

Mr. Franklin is going to Montreal to become an executive of a new circuit. He will continue to own and operate a group of theatres at St. John, Halifax and other centers. He had held the general managership of RKO for the past 18 months.

Admission Up One Cent To Meet Oklahoma Levy

Oklahoma theatres have increased admissions by one cent in every case where the existing figure was over 25 cents, in order to conform to a sales tax adjustment passed by the Legislature in a special session which has just adjourned. The law specifically states the tax of one per cent is to be borne by the consumer, and effects all merchandise and amusements.

MAJORS HOLD BACK ON 1933-34 SELLING

Warners Decides to Use Only Percentage Basis for New Product; Companies Wait on Talk of Higher Prices

Apparent decision of the larger companies to hold back on new season sales, and announcement last week by Warner Bros. at the final session of its 1933-34 sales convention—which officially closed the convention season—that it will sell its new season product on a percentage basis only, were principal developments of the week in distribution.

It is generally understood that the selling of new season pictures by large distributors is now virtually at a standstill. With the exception of a few of the large circuits, exchange managers and salesmen are not approaching independents on new deals until major circuit situations have been settled.

The chief reason cited for the delayed selling is the talk of higher prices generally, including admissions. Salesmen believe that if deals are closed now they may regret the terms when prices in general are increased. If there is to be an inflation market, distributors want to benefit by it, they say.

A Few Deals Closed

Fox has closed deals with RKO and Skouras; MGM with Prudential Playhouses for 38 theatres, and Paramount has contracted a few local situations. United Artists has sold several spots and is determined to sell away from the larger circuits unless its terms are met. The company has a franchise with Loew and also with RKO in several situations. Warners has a new deal with David Loew for Loew's Metropolitan circuit, involving about $1,800,000. Warner theatres in New Jersey are working on new buying propositions. The circuit expected to get 30 days clearance in most instances, but exchanges are not giving more than 14 days. In several situations Warners was denied exclusive showings.

Thirty-two cities already have been set for the get-together luncheons and showings which Columbia will sponsor this summer for exhibitors playing its product. The cities are: Albany; Boston; Buffalo; Charlotte; Chicago; Cincinnati; Cleveland; Dallas; Denver; Des Moines; Detroit; Indianapolis; Kansas City; Los Angeles; Memphis; Milwaukee; Minneapolis; New Haven; New Orleans; Oklahoma City; Omaha; Philadelphia; Pittsburgh; Portland, Ore.; Portland, Me.; Salt Lake City; San Francisco; Seattle; St. Louis, and Washington, D. C.

United Artists will have a sales trailer of its own to familiarize exhibitors with new producers and personalities in the organization. About 75 trailers are being sent out to the sales force giving details on Twentieth Century Productions, Reliance Pictures and Anna Sten. A Mickey Mouse clip also is incorporated.

"The Masquerader," with Ronald Colman, first United Artists release on the new schedule, is now in its second tryout week in Atlantic City.

U. A. Completes Sales Alignment

With appointment of Carroll Trowbridge, Ben Fish and E. J. Smith as district managers last week, United Artists completed its sales alignment. Mr. Trowbridge, formerly eastern representative for Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, will be in charge of Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Buffalo and Washington exchanges; Fish will supervise Chicago, Milwaukee and Minneapolis, while Smith has been placed in charge of Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and Salt Lake. Other district leaders and their territories are: Charles M. Stern, Boston and New Haven; Jack Goldhar, Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Indianapolis; Sam Horowitz, Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha and Denver; Jack Von Tilzer, Atlanta, Charlotte, New Orleans and Dallas; Haskel Masters, Canada, and Moe Streimer, New York State.

New branch managers are: Jack Dervin, Boston; George Jacobs, Charlotte; G. R. Frank, New Orleans; Irving Schlank, Salt Lake City; Guy Navarre, Seattle; Morris Dudelson, Detroit; Russell Egner, Milwaukee, with Frank Young as assistant.

New United Artists' salesmen are George Hager and Lou Wechsler, Boston; Jack Dacey, Charlotte; Abe Tolkins, Atlanta; Milton Hill, Washington; F. Murphy and Ted Malone, New Orleans; C. J. Cammer, Dallas; A. C. Buchanan, Kansas City; Ed Kennedy, Salt Lake City; Carl Goe and Gaylord Black, Indianapolis; George Porter and Abe Eskin, Cincinnati; Charles Dietz and A. C. Weinberger, St. Louis; Leo Cantor, promoted from booker to the sales force at Pittsburgh with Hiram Wilson as new booker; Clark Davis, new booker in Washington; Frank Decker, Cleveland, and Tom Eckhart, Omaha.

Shorts Budget Increased

Twenty Warner district and branch managers, in addition to home office officials, met in Chicago last week for the second two-day regional meeting. Gradwell Sears, Warner distribution executive, announced that the managers had brought 2,723 exhibitor contracts for 1933-34, signed sight unseen.

Sam Sax, production head of the Vitaphone studios in Brooklyn, said the short subject budget had been increased 30 per cent. S. Charles Einfeld announced a 45 per cent increase in the Warner advertising budget.

At the meeting, in addition to Messrs. Sears, Sax and Einfeld, were Major Albert Warner, Andy Smith, Norman Moray, Al Schwalberg and Arthur Sachson. The following district and branch managers attended: Fred M. Jack, Dallas; C. E. Peppiatt, Atlanta; F. P. Bryan, Charlotte; Don Douglas, Dallas; W. B. Fulton, Memphis; L. Conner, New Orleans; J. O. Rhode, Oklahoma City; Carl Lesserman, Chicago; E. J. Tilton, Des Moines; W. Warner, Kansas City; R. T. Smith, Milwaukee; Leo Blank, Minneapolis; C. K. Olson, Omaha; Ben Cammack, St. Louis; N. H. Brewer, Los Angeles; Earl Bell, Denver; Harry Lustig, Los Angeles; Vete Stewart, Portland; W. F. Gordon, Salt Lake City; Charles Muehlman, San Francisco, and Al Oxtoby, Seattle.

On August 10, Warners inaugurated a music campaign for "The Footlight Parade," with Al Jolson singing selections from the film over a coast-to-coast network.

Two for Marion Davies

Canadian business on Warner pictures has been the largest in company history, Andy Smith, in charge of Eastern and Canadian distribution, said in his opening address at the third and last sales meeting in Toronto this week. Pictures received fully 60 per cent more playing time in Canadian theatres than ever before, he said. At the Toronto meeting were Mr. Smith, Norman Moray, H. O. Paynter, Warner Canadian district manager at Toronto, and the following Canadian branch managers: Lou Geiler, Calgary; C. R. Osborn, Montreal; J. E. Butler, St. John; J. Plottel, Vancouver, and W. Cohen, Winnipeg.

Other developments in the week included the announcement by MGM of two new starring vehicles for Marion Davies. One of these will be "Going Hollywood," a story with a musical background by Donald Ogden Stewart. The other is "Operator Thirteen," a Robert W. Chambers novel of Civil War days. now running in Cosmopolitan.

Several promotions and switches in the booking, sales and advertising staffs at Paramount exchanges were made last week. Clyde Goodson, head booker at Atlanta, has been promoted to salesman at New Orleans; Scott Lett, theatre booker and auditor at the home office, is now chief booker in Atlanta; Harold Wirthwein, advertising sales manager of the Chicago branch, has been made a salesman there; Paul Allison, advertising sales manager at Cincinnati, succeeds Mr. Wirthwein, and Eugene Fogarty has been transferred from Indianapolis to Cincinnati.

With the decision not to hold a regional meeting in Toronto, W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram, is staying over in Hollywood for another two weeks to confer with Trem Carr. Two of next season's product have been completed and two are in work. Finished are "The Avenger" and "Sensation Hunters." In production are "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi" and "Manhattan Love Song."

Miller Named to Labor Committee

Jack Miller, head of the Exhibitors' Association of Chicago, was appointed permanent chairman of the labor relations committee of the MPTOA this week by Ed Kuykendall, national president. Miller will name the remainder of the committee later.

Mr. Kuykendall said the appointment did not presage a "contest" between labor and the MPTOA, but that it was made in order to facilitate contacts between the two organizations.

SMPE Fall Convention In Chicago, October 9-11

New officers of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers will be inaugurated at the Fall Meeting in Chicago October 9, 10 and 11, at the Edgewater Beach hotel.

This is the third meeting held in Chicago, the others there having been in 1917 and nine years ago.

Foreclose Three Theatres

The State, Stratton and Show Shop theatres, Middletown, N. Y., will be sold at a foreclosure sale on July 13. The theatres have been operated for the past two years by O. S. Hathaway, receiver for the first mortgage bondholders' protective committee.

Theatre Reverts to Owner

The Strand theatre, Modesto, Cal., has reverted to P. H. and M. L. Markowitz, builders of the theatre in 1920 and original managers until 1923, when the house was leased to the National Theatre Syndicate. W. O. Edmunds will manage the house for the Markowitz interests.

Hollywood Exchange in Deal

Hollywood Film Exchange, Inc., New York independent distributor, will handle the product of Goldsmith Productions for the 1933-34 season in New York, Philadelphia, Buffalo and Washington, it has been announced by Jack Bellman, president of Hollywood. Six pictures are scheduled.

Carleton, Pioneer Director, Is Dead

Lloyd B. Carleton, actor and motion picture director, died Tuesday at his home in New York. He was 61 years old.

Mr. Carleton began his theatrical career as an actor with the late Henry Miller. He then obtained an engagement with the original Charles Frohman company for Sir James Barrie's "Little Minister," with Maude Adams. Mr. Carleton also appeared with her in "Peter Pan," and in Rostand's "L'Aiglon," becoming her stage manager and director.

In 1908 he went to Australia to produce "Peter Pan" for Mr. Frohman and J. C. Williamson and when he returned to this country motion pictures attracted his attention. He studied films at the old Biograph studio in Fourteenth street, where he became acquainted with D. W. Griffith. He was then a producer for the Lubin Company of Philadelphia from which he went to the Coast to work for Selig and Universal. His own company, which produced many films for the independent market, was called Lloyd Carleton Productions, Inc.

A few years ago, Mr. Carleton retired from active participation in motion pictures and returned to New York where he appeared on the stage with Bert Lytell in "Brothers" for two seasons.

Funeral services were held Wednesday in New York at the Funeral Church, under the auspices of the Actors Fund of America.

Mr. Carleton is survived by two brothers, John T. Little and Dr. Arthur R. Little. His family name was Carleton B. Little, but he changed it to the name by which he was known to the theatre world at the suggestion of Charles Frohman.

Balaban Makes New Bid For Detroit Theatres

John Balaban this week submitted a new bid for the Paramount-Publix Detroit theatres to S. A. Lynch, chairman of the company's reorganization committee. This was Mr. Balaban's second offer, the first having been rejected in favor of George W. Trendle, who submitted a higher bid.

Disposal of the properties has not yet been completed, the matter going to Henry K. Davis, federal referee in bankruptcy for Publix Enterprises, for final decision.

Independent Exhibitors' Hudson Outing August 23

The first annual outing of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, Inc., a trip up the Hudson from New York, shore dinners, athletic events, dancing, bridge and beer, will take place on Wednesday, August 23. Tickets are $5 a person and applications are being handled by Joseph R. Fliesler at the ITOA headquarters, 341 W. 44th Street, New York.

Sheehan Bound for Europe

Winfield Sheehan, vice president in charge of production for Fox, is in New York from the Coast for conferences with Fox executives. He was accompanied by Edwin Burke, author. Mr. Sheehan sails for Europe August 11.

J. R. McDONOUGH, REALIST

General Manager of RKO at 39 Brings a Flair for Financial Figures and Organization to Post

From his office in the board of directors' room on the sixteenth floor of the RKO Building in Radio City, the young Mr. J. R. McDonough, on leave of absence from his duties as executive vice-president of Radio Corporation of America, is going about the business of his added responsibilities as general manager of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and all its subsidiary corporations and intertwining structures.

When Merlin Hall Aylesworth, president of RKO and National Broadcasting Company, made the bare announcement of the appointment three weeks ago, much was left to the imagination of public and trade alike as to what the functions of the new general manager precisely might be. It is understood, however, that he is to figure largely in the ultimate reorganization of RKO.

This is rendered the more interesting in view of the fact that some years ago when the Radio Corporation was taking its first dip into the motion picture by acquisition of stock in F.B.O., Mr. McDonough was credited with holding a most conservative attitude toward the undertaking and departures indicated.

Entered RCA in 1924

Mr. McDonough entered the service of RCA in 1924, previous to which he had been engaged in various capacities in the country's large metal industries. During the World War he served with the American Expeditionary Forces. He is 38 years old and married.

Nine years or so ago, when David Sarnoff and the RCA were struggling for a foothold in the broadening field of broadcasting and radio engineering, J. R. McDonough was engaged in the accounting department of that new corporation. At 30 years he already had crowded into his experience a wide range of business knowledge, with a trend for financial matters predominant, so he was assigned to handle practically all of the company's accounts.

His flair for the science of business attracted Mr. Sarnoff's attention, and as assistant to the president he was placed in constant contact with situations involving the disposition of large sums of money, where organization and precision in anticipating future developments keynoted his work.

Made RCA Victor President

Mr. McDonough's repute for assembling facts, figures and men, next carried him to the presidency of RCA Victor company, with headquarters in Camden, New Jersey, succeeding Harry Shumaker.

Mr. McDonough entered the service of RCA Victor at a time of intense competition and a depressed market in the radio and talking machine field. His big job was to acquire exact knowledge of costs and general conditions, and to prevent leakage.

From RCA Victor, Mr. McDonough was made executive vice-president of Radio Corporation of America—highest post in the company second to that of Mr. Sarnoff. Five months later came the Sarnoff decision making him general manager of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, a new field for Mr. McDonough's inherent ability to organize facts and situations, without letting those facts become routine.

He has set up his headquarters in the board room in the RKO Building in midtown New York's new Radio City. There the first draft of RKO realignment is being written.

Photoplay Honors "Smilin' Through"

The Photoplay Medal for 1933 has been awarded to "Smilin' Through," the Metro-Goldyn-Mayer picture in which Norma Shearer, Fredric March and Leslie Howard were starred. According to the editorial announcement which appears in the September issue of Photoplay, the vote which placed "Smilin' Through" ahead of all other pictures of the past season was one of the most decisive in the history of the poll.

Thirteen gold medals have been awarded by Photoplay since 1920 for the pictures voted by readers to be the best of each season.

"Plain Talk" to Discuss Films

"Plain Talk Magazine," publication of which was discontinued in New York some time ago, appears to have come to life again, with the announcement this week that a series of articles about censorship and the motion picture business will be featured, starting in September.

Katz Interests Lease Two

Indianapolis Theatre Management Associates, Inc., has leased the Circle and Indiana theatres in Indianapolis. Sam Katz, Milton Feld and David Chatkin are in control of the company. Ace Beery, present manager, is expected to continue.

Joseph R. Adams Dead

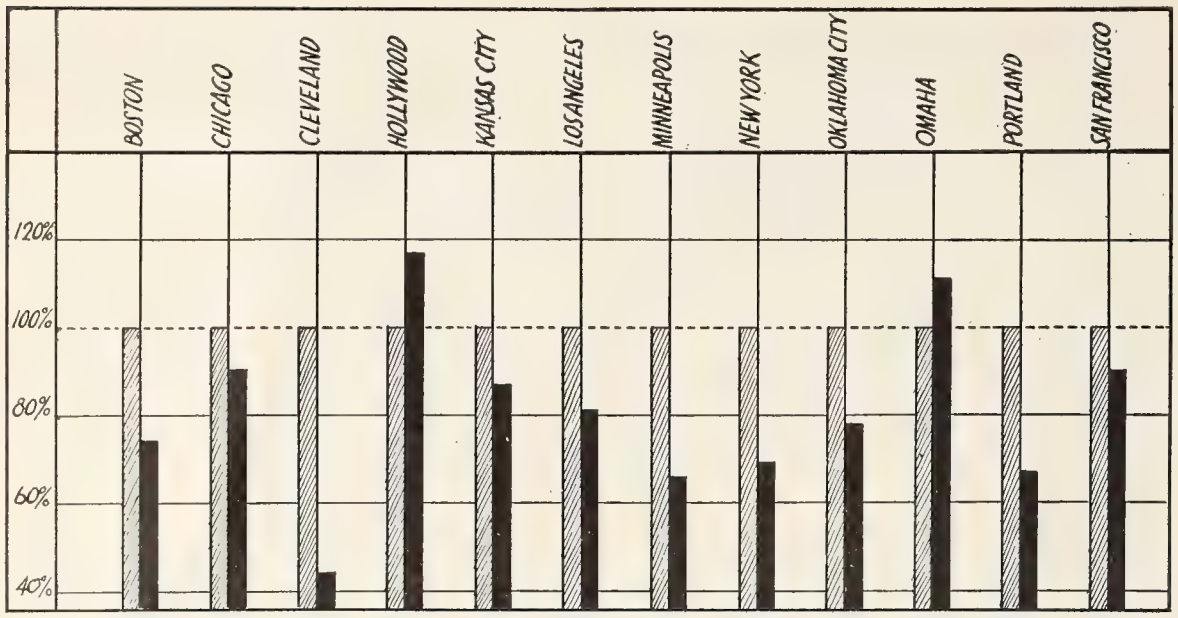
Joseph R. Adams, native of Richmond, Va., and widely known in theatrical circles, died last week at his home at Hilton Village, Va.

Grainger Universal Director

James R. Grainger, Universal general sales manager, has been elected a director of Universal Pictures Corporation and also of Universal Pictures Company, Inc.

Mark Levy Dead

Mark Levy, 64, veteran exhibitor at Freeport, Long Island, died suddenly last week. A son, Abner, survives. Mrs. Levy died six months ago.



The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's listings of box office grosses, compares the business done in twelve key cities during the three week period from July 8 to July 22 of 1933 with the receipts from the same cities for the same period of 1932. The black bar represents the 1933 gross; the white bar indicates the 1932 figure.

GERMAN FILM CREDIT BANK OFFICERS NAMED

Dr. Reicherts Made Manager of Production Financing Enterprise; Producer To Pay 30 Per Cent of Cost of Picture

by J. K. Rutenberg
Berlin Correspondent

The board of directors of the new German Film Credit Bank has appointed Dr. Reicherts as manager of the enterprise and has named Dr. Paetel legal adviser and counsellor.

The offices of the bank are in the rooms of the head organization of the German Film Industry, Inc., Bendler street 33, Berlin W 35.

The bank will finance new German film production and split the expenses of producing. It is expected that 75 to 100 feature films can be financed in this way. The board has appointed a special committee to promulgate the policy of the new office. The following members will belong to this committee:

Dr. Scheuermann, solicitor, as president;

Dr. Bockies, member of the Association of German Film Distributors;

Adolf Engl, president of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association of Germany;

Dr. Henkel, general manager of the Tobis sound film syndicate;

L. Klitzsch, general manager of the Ufa and member of the head organization of the German film industry;

Dr. Pilder, director of the Dresdner Bank;

Arnold Raether, member of the national ministry for public enlightenment and propaganda;

Herr Strehle, director of the Agfa works of I. G. Farben A. G.;

Herr Wehner, member of the studio association.

The financing of new German film product will be subject to a series of conditions which have been adopted by the board. These conditions are:

The scenario must be ready.

Stars and actors must have been engaged.

All rights for production of a film must have been acquired by the producer.

These rights then are transferred to the Film Bank, which will come to an agreement with an existing film distributing company for the marketing of the film. The contractors must belong to an association connected with the head organization of the German film industry. The money necessary for production of a picture will be provided by means of a contract between the raw film manufacturers, the patent owners, the studio proprietors and the editors, which will act as guarantees. The producer gets 70 per cent of the production costs in the form of credit; remainder must be paid by himself.

The guarantors present drafts which will be cashed by the Film Bank. This bank itself gets the money from the four leading German banking enterprises which are behind the Film Credit Bank; Dresdner Bank, Deutsche Bank und Diskonto Gesellschaft, Reichs-Kreditgesellschaft, A. G., and Commerz & Privatbank A. G. These already have placed ten million reichsmarks at the disposal of the Film Credit Bank.

Ohio Censor Definitely Bans Warner's "Baby Face"

Warner's "Baby Face," which the Ohio censor held up for two weeks, was finally barred from showing in the state. Several cuts were made. Dr. Beverly O. Skinner, chief of the censor board, said that even though the picture were completely revised, the story was such that Ohio showings would not be permitted. The picture had been set for showing at several Ohio first run situations when the board acted.

German Organizing Committee Formed

Important new resolutions in connection with reorganization of the German film industry were adopted by the Spitzenorganisation at a recent meeting of its board in Berlin. A permanent committee under the name of Spio-Commission was formed and granted special power to carry out the following points of the reorganization program:

Regulation of admission prices.

Regulation of cinema seating capacity.

Elimination of unfair competition in the film trade.

Control of financial relations between production, exhibition and distribution.

Final settlement of outstanding questions on sound apparatus licenses.

Music royalties.

Elimination of high production costs.

Reorganization methods along these lines will be studied by a special committee comprising representatives of employers and employees, as well as technicians and artists.

The Spio board further decided to institute an advisory censorship committee whose task will be to help producers avoid censorship difficulties. The creation of this committee, which is to work in close contact with the Ministry of Propaganda, is due to the initiative of Minister Goebbels, whose intention, it is said, is to grant all possible support to the industry.

Publicists Ask Academy Branch

The board of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences this week was asked by members of the producers' branch who are executives in studio publicity departments, for authorization to form a Publicity and Advertising Representatives Section. The members of this proposed section would be active, rather than associate, members of the Academy.

Barrett Keisling was appointed temporary chairman of the group with William Pine as secretary, and Eddie Eckles, Tom Bailey and Hubert Voight appointed to form membership qualifications for the section.

Jensen-VonHerberg Buy Seattle Mascot Exchange

Jensen-VonHerberg, important exhibitors of the Pacific Northwest, have purchased the Mascot Film Exchange in Seattle, and will distribute independent product to theatres in Washington, Oregon and Idaho. Their own circuit of twenty houses will form the nucleus of their distribution outlet.

The entire output of Majestic Productions, Nat Levine features and Levine serials will be handled through the local exchange. The office will be headed by Arthur Huot, former Warner branch manager in Seattle.

Monogram Pictures Moves

Monogram Pictures moved this week to the RKO Building, at Radio City. Their offices have been enlarged, which was necessitated due to enlarged business and to take care of the increased number of employees in every department.

ANNOUNCING THE NATIONAL RECOVERY ACT CODE FOR THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY.

(As suggested by Warner Bros.)

that in 1933-'34 I will serve the best interests of my family, my theatre, and my patrons by doing business first with the company that brought me my most consistent business in the past year.

No seductive statements shall lure me from the course which stern experience indicates.

I will Play Safe with the company that has Played Ball with me!

I will trust only those promises that are printed on celluloid—the kind of promise that faithful past performance implies.

I will remember that ONE COMPANY has led me and my industry OUT OF THE SHADOW . . . One company has stood stanch and solid through chaotic days . . . And I will rely on that company to keep ME strong and secure in the days to come . . . . . .

I will not be panicked by persuasive printers' ink.

I will not let frantic fanfare deafen me to sturdy facts.

I know that at the end of the rainbow of resplendent raves from other outfits I will find a simple, sincere product statement from Warner Bros . . . and believe me, brothers, that's MY POT OF GOLD!

And so I now wholeheartedly resolve to subscribe to every one of

THE 60 POINTS OF WARNER BROS.' RECOVERY PROGRAM FOR 1933-'34

"Footlight Parade"

will be the next big Warner musical, continuing the tradition of "42nd Street" and "Gold Diggers." In it JIMMY CAGNEY will sing and dance for the first time on the screen, and there will be 10 other important stars, including RUBY KEELER, DICK POWELL, JOAN BLONDELL. It will have the same directors as "42nd Street"—Lloyd Bacon and Busby Berkeley.*

"Wonder Bar"

will be probably the most imposing all-star production of the year. Practically all of Warner Bros.' stars will appear in it, and the actual cast will consist of AL JOLSON, KAY FRANCIS, JOAN BLONDELL, ADOLPHE MENJOU, ALINE MacMAHON, DICK POWELL, ANN DVORAK, BETTE DAVIS, GLENDA FARREL, PAT O'BRIEN and 7 others. Based on an international stage success, this picture will introduce an entirely novel production idea.°

who appeared last season only in "I Am A Fugitive" will be presented this year in 3 productions beginning with a special, THE WORLD CHANGES,° an important epic of America, with Mary Astor, Aline MacMahon, Jean Muir, Anna Q. Nilsson and others, directed by Mervyn LeRoy. This will be followed by another special, MASSACRE, first screen story of the modern American Indian, from the successful book by Robert Gessner. And one other.*

"Gold Diggers of 1933"

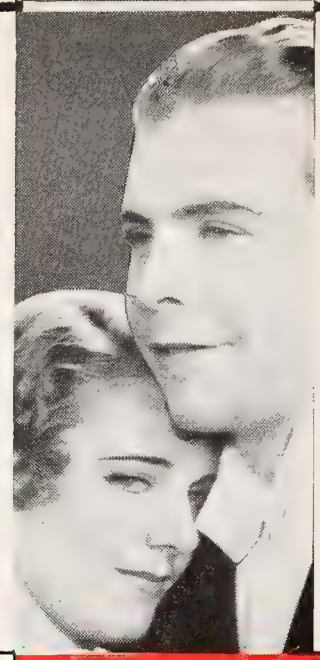
A full description of this 1933-'34 release has already been written in the ledgers of hundreds of leading theatres. It would be useless for us to attempt to add further to the praise that has already been showered on this picture by public, critics, trade press, and exhibitors.*

Leslie Howard

generally considered the screen's outstanding new romantic favorite, will be added to Warner Bros.' star list. He will start his five-year starring contract with 3 1933-'34 productions, including BRITISH AGENT,° a special from the very popular book by Bruce Lockhart, a remarkable fact story of romantic and diplomatic intrigue. And two others.*°



Ruby Keeler & Dick Powell

After their remarkable reception in "42nd Street" it was inevitable that Warner Bros. should star these sensational youngsters, in 3 productions. Two specials, CLASSMATES° and SWEETHEARTS FOREVER,* both based on brilliant stage successes, will unfold their romantic stories in elaborate musical settings. THE FOOTBALL COACH will have Pat O' Brien and Ann Dvorak in the cast.

Ruth Chatterton

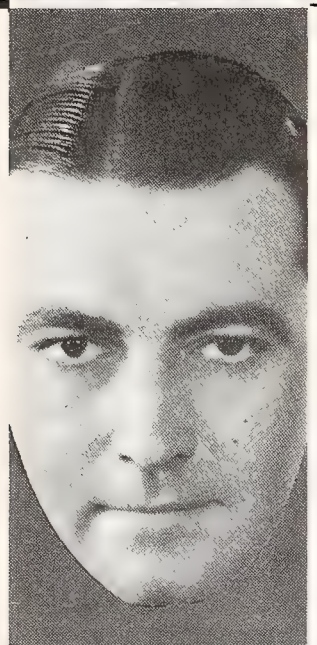
found her most successful type of rôle in "Frisco Jenny." This year MANDALAY will give her an opportunity to do an even more glamorous characterization of the same type of woman, in a fascinating Far East setting. The second of her 2 new-season productions will give her the strong support of Adolphe Menjou and Lyle Talbot.°

We Believe That

THE SMARTEST FILM B

That's why we've set down BLACK AND WHITE all you want

WARNER BROS.' AND FIRST NAT



Richard Barthelmess

will have 3 strongly dramatic vehicles, including SHANGHAI ORCHIDS, with Ann Dvorak, which in rôle and setting will match the best features of "Patent Leather Kid" and "Broken Blossoms". It is a remarkable story of "woman hawking" off the Chinese coast. A second production will include Adolphe Menjou, Joan Blondell, Guy Kibbee and Ruth Donnelly.°

Wm. Powell

will return to his most successful rôle in THE KENNEL MURDER CASE or The Return of Philo Vance, by famous S. S. Van Dine. This story has been read by millions in Cosmopolitan Magazine and in book form. Cast will include Mary Astor, Jack LaRue, Ralph Morgan, Hugh Herbert. THE GENTLEMAN FROM SAN FRANCISCO with Bette Davis is a perfect Powell story of a debonair double-crosser. AND A THIRD PRODUCTION will co-star Kay Francis.*

Adolphe Menjou

will add to Warner Bros.' star line-up the charm of his sophisticated romantic technique. He will be featured in 2 gay romantic comedies. BEDSIDE with Claire Dodd and Frank McHugh is the story of an X-ray photographer with an irresistible bedside manner. CONVENTION CITY with Bette Davis and Guy Kibbee, will concern the after-dark adventures of big business men at a big-business convention.°

3 Timely Productions that will capitalize on news-value themes of current public interest are:—HAVANA WIDOWS featuring Joan Blondell, Allen Jenkins, and Glenda Farrell—WILD BOYS OF THE ROAD, with Frankie Darro of "Mayor of Hell" fame,—and BUREAU OF MISSING PERSONS, containing a timely kidnaping angle and an exceptional cast including Lewis Stone, Bette Davis, Ruth Donnelly, Pat O'Brien.°

As The Earth Turns"

For this special Warner Bros. have acquired what is admittedly the most important and popular fiction property of the year. "As The Earth Turns" has appeared at the very top of all best-seller lists. The story has the breadth and scope and beauty which mark only the greatest of screen vehicles. Even the briefest synopsis imparts an inescapable big-picture "feel."*

E.G.Robinson

will be given 3 vehicles designed to duplicate his versatile successes of the past season. NAPOLEON, HIS LIFE AND LOVES, with Bebe Daniels and Ann Dvorak, will match "Silver Dollar" in story type, but with a far stronger love angle. THE DARK HAZARD, by the author of "Little Caesar", will be done in the "Little Giant" manner. And a 3rd production with 5 feminine stars, including Bette Davis and Joan Blondell, will match the vivid romance of "I Loved A Woman."° in addition to his unique rôle i "Footlight Parade", will have typical Cagney vehicles, in whic the love interest will fully balanc this star's inimitable comedy. On of these will revive the success ful Cagney-Blondell team o "Blonde Crazy" and "Th Crowd Roars," with Alle Jenkins and Glenda Farrell i the cast. In the other he will b supported by both Bette Davi and Ann Dvorak.*

UYERS ARE COLORBLIND

to know about

IONAL'S 60 PICTURES FOR 1933-'34

will deliver 4 pictures including a powerful special, BROADWAY AND BACK,° a story of three generations in the theatre, with Ann Dvorak and Patricia Ellis EVER IN MY HEART will bring to the screen one of Broadway's leading romantic stars, Otto Kruger, with George Brent Ralph Bellamy, Ruth Donnelly Two other productions* will bring to Miss Stanwyck's support such stars as George Brent, Bette Davis, Glenda Farrell.

Joe E. Brown

will have 3 comedies carefully chosen to continue his gratifying record of the past season. In each he will be given stronger feminine support than ever before. The cast of STEAMBOAT SAM will include Claire Dodd, Ruth Donnelly and Jean Muir. This will be followed by THE CROWNED HEAD, and a third production featuring Joan Blondell and Ginger Rogers.°

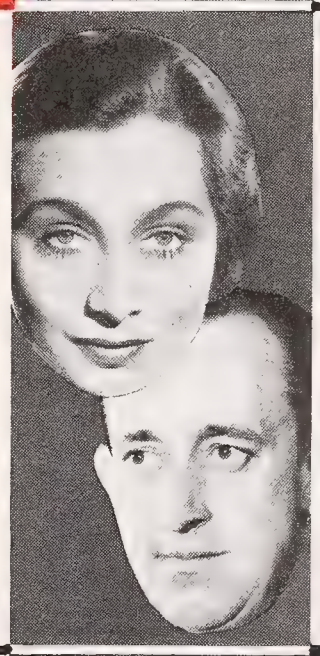
will be co-starred with WARREN WILLIAM in REGISTERED NURSE° with Margaret Lindsay, Glenda Farrell and Lyle Talbot, a story with the same salable qualities as "Night Nurse." In THE HOUSE ON 56th STREET,* the story of an actress suddenly deserted by fame, Miss Francis will be supported by Ann Dvorak, Ricardo Cortez. In SEVEN WIVES Miss Francis and a remarkable line-up of feminine stars, including Bette Davis, Ann Dvorak, Joan Blondell, will play opposite Adolphe Menjou.



Aline MacMahon

and ALLEN JENKINS, who have been singled out by press and public for show-stealing performances in "One Way Passage," "Life Begins," "Blessed Event," "Silver Dollar," "42nd Street," "Gold Diggers" and other successful pictures, will be starred by Warner Bros. in 3 comedies. The large fan followings which these players have built up in picture after picture constitute a ready-made market for these 3 vehicles.°

2 Important Novels

in addition to those listed elsewhere, will be brought to the screen by Warner Bros. Louis Bromfield, considered by many to be America's leading novelist, is the author of A MODERN HERO,* best-selling story of an amazing character who starts life as a bareback rider and ends as a ruthless industrial giant. RETURN OF THE TERROR° is by Edgar Wallace, one of the greatest of all mystery authors.

6 Popular Stories for which casts will be selected later are:—THE LIFE OF ROTHSCHILD by George Westley,* KING OF FASHION by Warren Duff,° FROM HEADQUARTERS by Robert Lee,* COUNTRY CLUB (tentative title) by Robert Lord,* DIAMOND DAN by Arthur Horman,° and EASY TO LOVE.

And 8 Others

plans for which are being purposely held up pending the outcome of current negotiations for certain stars and directors not at present on our list—also to provide for the addition of other timely story themes which may be suggested by outstanding news events of the next 12 months. One of these will be a First National picture. The other seven will be from Warner Bros.

WARNER BROS. for 1933-'34"

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

IN Sudermann's book, "The Song of Songs," is a piece of music written by the girl's mother. In the picture, starring Marlene Dietrich, Paramount changes it to a statue that the young sculptor made for her, as a symbol of her youth and girlish ideas of life and romance. In the end, Miss Dietrich smashes it. And therein lies a story, which comes from director Rouben Mamoulian and is passed on by Eileen Creelman. It seems that the statue—which in trade paper advertisements has become the picture's second star—caused more trouble during production than any temperamental player. It wouldn't break properly, and not until they brought in the sixth statue did Miss Dietrich succeed in smashing it, with a heavy hammer, in a manner which Director Mamoulian thought was proper.

During the Hollywood earthquake, and while the picture was in production, one quick-witted property man ran at once, while others fled, to the slender white figure of plaster paris and lifted it tenderly off the swaying pedestal, safely to the ground. Miss Creelman said he got a raise in salary.

He says that half of the state was, until water was piped down from the faraway mountains, a bare, brown, sun-baked land, where grass refused to grow and cactus flourished.

Paramount says that the studio engaged a professional gambler to tutor Cary Grant, Benita Hume and Jack La Rue in the varied arts and practices of professional gamblers, which knowledge the players used while making "Gambling Ship." They had him listed on the payroll as "Mr. Number 100," and gave him a check "for a very respectable amount" even though "the gentleman" worked for only one week.

"All efforts to extract his real name proved futile," said the company. "However, this much was learned: 'Mr. No. 100' is decidedly proficient in dealing from the bottom and producing 'cold' decks from nowhere." Some of the theatre code drafters would like to learn his tricks.

If Paramount's crooner, Bing Crosby, ever goes broke, he needs only to have a tonsillotomy and, bingo, Bing gets a fortune. The other day Mr. Crosby insured that peculiar huskiness in his voice for $100,000. A growth between his vocal cords affects the tone of his voice. If the growth disappears, or if it ever becomes necessary to have it removed, insurance companies will have to pay.

Big "doin's" in the wheat belt, as reported by the Goodland (Kan.) News-Republican:

"You wouldn't have thunk it, would you? But Colby, Kas., 'home of Marion Talley,' was all agog the other evening because Jean Harlow, movie actress, while driving through, stopped and ate a sandwich. The Free Press devoted half a column to the 'visit.' Of course, had she stayed a moment or two longer, she would have been a resident of Colby, and her stop would have been described as a 'home coming.'"

Which reminds us of the old minstrel man, Al G. Fields, who, after playing one-night stands, stood on the back of the railroad car at every town and told the residents that he was leaving the place with regrets, "'cause this is my own, my native heath." Al promised the folks he would surely return the next season, "if it's the last thing I do; I just couldn't fail the home town folks." The same spiel was voiced at every stop. But then, Mr. Fields was a man of many parts.

Steve Kemp sums up in a nutshell the chances for crashing the large radio chains:

100% if you have what the public wants.
100% if you are a musical genius.
80% if you have lots of air appeal.

1% if you have talent.

After listening to some of the alleged "headliners" on the air, our suspicions are verified by Mr. Kemp's statement about talent.

Mr. Elliott Norton, an aggressive Connecticut reporter, interviewed Conrad Nagel recently at Greenwich, between performances of a play. Norton squinted an eye and asked Mr. Nagel what he thought about "those Hollywood orgies."

"Listen," replied Nagel, "some of the 'best people in Connecticut' staged a drunken orgy last week in a New London hotel, the like of which I've never seen in Hollywood in all of my 14 years." Nagle complained that the actors and actresses of the stock company "had to get out of the hotel and go to private families to get sleep. Drunken men and women staggered through the corridors all night, carrying bottles."

"In desperation," he concluded, "I finally got silence one night by calling the clerk at four a.m. and telling him if something wasn't done I'd positively throw all the furniture out the window."

(P.S.: It was a convention.)

THE Financial World has a merry upturn notion about Columbia Pictures, recorded in a recent issue, with a special article headed "An Overlooked Dividend Prospect." The Financial World remarks: "In reflecting the apathy of investors toward the motion picture industry, Columbia Pictures is one stock which is still available on an undervalued basis, despite the fact that improvement in earnings and financial position has been sufficient to justify dividend resumption. Selling at the equivalent of its net working capital per share, the stock is priced at less than six times earnings for the fiscal year just closed."

The Financial World, if you do not chance to know it, has been coming out down in Park Place for more than thirty years, with an interesting policy of looking around among the lesser securities and attaining no little repute, in a quiet way, for calling the turn.

Once upon a time in the days when the market was really lively, some of the smart boys in Wall Street made it a habit to get first issues off the press and take their expense money out of transactions based on the reaction of the World's reader following.

That "Back to Nature" film which currently is causing quite a stir out in the field, is supposed to be a treatise on physical culture as practiced by nudists in America, France and Germany. The nudists claim that they are not immoral when they go without clothing, but the producers evidently don't agree, inasmuch as the four cameramen took particular pains and exercised much delicacy in taking the pictures of the naked cultists. For the most part all that is seen is perfect picturing of not so perfect backs. Strangely, they all seem to be going in the one direction—away from the camera.

Seattle exhibitors were quite disturbed the other day about the new competition created by a traveling store-show company, which stormed the town with an extensive newspaper campaign, window cards and whatnot, announcing the showing of "Al Capone's Car"—at ten cents per peek. Wilson, Flinn Lead NRA's Film Drive

John C. Flinn, of Paramount, started over the weekend to mobilize the motion picture industry to aid the Government at Washington in its campaign on behalf of the National Recovery Administration.

Frank Wilson, motion picture executive, and now in charge of bringing the NRA program before the public, was invited on Tuesday by Sol A. Rosenblatt, deputy administrator in charge of amusements, to outline to the industry executives assembled at a code conference at the Bar Building in New York, the details of his plans to flood the country with NRA propaganda, using the screens extensively.

Currently, Mr. Wilson is engaged in organizing campaigns, through Chambers of Commerce, in some 6,000 towns and cities throughout the nation. Last week he appointed Mr. Flinn as the liaison between the motion picture industry and the NRA at Washington. Both Mr. Wilson and Mr. Flinn served the government notably during the Liberty Loan campaign.

One of Mr. Flinn's first accomplishments in his new post was the engagement on Monday of some 6,000 theatres to display a special short NRA film, starting the week of August 20.

He announced that National Screen will broadcast the first film trailer, without charge, and that Jules E. Brulatour, distributor of Eastman Kodak stock, had contributed nearly 750,000 feet of positive. De Luxe Laboratories signified its desire to print these trailers without charge.

At a luncheon, attended by Will H. Hays and leading executives of the business, the managements of Fox, MGM, Warner, Paramount, Universal, Columbia, United Artists, RKO and Harold Lloyd Corporation volunteered to produce for the NRA special short reel productions using outstanding stars, much in the same manner as those films which were produced during the War on behalf of the Liberty Loan.

Joseph I. Breen, West Coast representative of Will Hays, will handle the contact for the Federal Government in Hollywood.

The NRA plan to utilize the industry's resources for reaching millions of persons daily in order to publicize the National Recovery Administration's activities and accomplishments was in the nature of mobilization of the industry by means of five committees, headed by Mr. Wilson and Mr. Flinn, and including the following members:

Production: H. M. Warner, chairman; Louis B. Mayer, Adolph Zukor, Carl Laemmle, Harry Cohn, Sidney R. Kent, Joseph M. Schenck, M. H. Aylesworth and E. W. Hammons.

Distribution: George Schaefer, chairman; Al Lichtman, Jack Cohn, John D. Clark, Felix Feist, James R. Grainger, Albert Warner and Ned Depinet.

Exhibition: Nicholas M. Schenck, chairman; Ed Kuykendall and James C. Ritter.

Newsreel: E. B. Hatrick, chairman; Emanuel Cohen, Allyn Butterfield, Jack Connolly and Truman Talley.

General: J. T. Reed (Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences), chairman; Jules E. Brulatour, John E. Otterson, Martin Quigley, John Alicoate, W. R. Wilkerson, David Sarnoff, Arthur James, Terry Ramsaye, Sydney Silverman, Maurice Kann, P. S. Harrison, J. J. McCarthy and Herman Robbins.

Johnson Drafts Kuykendall

Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, and Mississippi exhibitor, has been drafted by General Hugh S. Johnson as one of the state directors of NRA for Mississippi.

SUPER TRADE ORGANIZATION COMING

replacing W. Ray Johnston, Monogram president, who was not able to leave Hollywood.

For distribution: Merlin Hall Aylesworth, president, RKO; J. Berkowitz, Standard Exchange, Buffalo; Arthur C. Bromberg, Bromberg Attractions, Atlanta; R. H. Cochrane, vice-president, Universal; Jack Cohn, vice-president, Columbia; Herman Gluckman, president, Majestic; Ed Golden, general sales manager, Monogram; E. W. Hammons, president, Educational; George Schaefer, general manager, Paramount; Nicholas M. Schenck, president, MGM; Harry Thomas, president, First Division Exchanges; Charles Trampe, Midwest Film, Milwaukee.

Exhibition Committee Has 18 Members

The committee on exhibition which will work under Mr. O'Reilly includes:

MPTOA representatives: Ed Kuykendall, president, Mississippi; M. E. Comerford, Pennsylvania; Jack Miller, Chicago; Fred Wehrenberg, St. Louis.

Allied: James C. Ritter, president, Detroit; Abram F. Myers, Washington; H. M. Richey, Detroit; Sidney Samuelson, New Jersey.

Affiliated circuits: E. A. Schiller, Loew's; George Skouras, Fox-Skouras; Sam Dembow, Publix; Joseph Bernhard, Warners; Harold B. Franklin, RKO.

Unaffiliated circuits: Harry Huffman, Denver; Gus Metzger, Los Angeles; John Hamrick, Seattle; A. H. Schwartz, New York; Harry Arthur, New Haven.

Jack Miller was appointed, following the meeting, to succeed Fred Meyer, of Milwaukee, who was compelled to withdraw because of illness of his daughter.

The Modus Operandi

Each of the three committees will work exclusively on that part of the code which specifically relates to the respective branch. The coordinators will work with the committees and with Mr. Rosenblatt, and Mr. Rosenblatt "will work with everybody."

The coordinators, said Mr. O'Reilly, will not "mix in," but will act principally to prevent or iron out "clashes" which may arise during the drafting, and also guide the work of the committee groups. The three codes are supposed to be correlated for submission to Mr. Rosenblatt probably over the weekend.

Mr. Rosenblatt said later that he will remain at his headquarters at Washington until next week, keeping in touch with the coordinators by telephone.

The reason for not appointing Will H. Hays to any of the committees was because "his association is too big and too valuable to serve any single group in this work," according to Mr. Rosenblatt. "The Hays group should serve all groups, digging out statistical data needed. Mr. Hays, therefore, should be free to be available to all groups."

Following the first distributors' sessions Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Kent said, "I am most optimistic about the outcome of the proceedings. Whatever divergent opinions we are unable to settle among ourselves will go to the Washington hearing, but I sincerely believe there will be few of these, if any. The double bill situation has not yet been approached, but it will be within the next 36 hours.

"I can safely say that independent and major distributors are 99 per cent in agreement—in principle. There is still a wide divergency on the dual bill phase, however. The distribution code is further advanced than any of the others, but, after all, the others have not had as much experience in these matters. The distribution code may be finished this week.

"There is an extremely propelling force behind these meetings, and, after all, when someone tells you that if you are unable to do your work yourself he will do it for you, it makes one sit up and take notice."

Mr. O'Reilly emerged from his first conference with an optimistic air, too. He said that if all parties would get together and work until everything is completely ironed out, the result would be most satisfactory. "It's got to be satisfactory," he said.

During the session Tuesday morning, Mr. Rosenblatt instructed Mr. Kent to take up the Hollywood Academy situation directly with Mr. Reed, who was asked to remain in New York until he had outlined the Academy's program to Mr. Kent.

In officially taking over their posts as coordinators, Mr. Kent and Mr. O'Reilly were both requested by Mr. Rosenblatt to address the gathering with regards their plans.

"Tribunal" Important, Says Kent

"A code will be drawn quickly if everyone will submerge their selfish interests," said Mr. Kent. The most valuable phase of the code workings, he believes, is the proposed tribunal of enforcement, which will follow the code's adoption. "This industry will face its present obligation exactly as it did during the war. We will do everything possible to complete this code in the allotted time," Mr. Kent declared.

Mr. O'Reilly said that he felt the exhibitors' committee will solve its problems, "and, when the week has passed, both the Administration and the public will feel more proud of the motion picture industry."

Mr. Rosenblatt told those assembled that the blanket code for all industry, which many theatres and producers have already signed, will be superseded by the industry's own agreement. He informed the industry leaders that he had launched conferences from which there will materialize "a new and harmonious relation" between radio, the legitimate theatre and motion pictures.

Harry Warner, president of Warner Brothers, was one of the few not directly representing an organized body who took advantage of Mr. Rosenblatt's invitation to comment on the situation. "The principal fault with those codes which I have already read," Mr. Warner said, "is that they appeared to be one-sided; too high on the one side and too low on the other. It seemed that someone was trying to take something from someone else."

Because the code activities have so far reflected "selfish interests," Mr. Warner said that he withdrew his organization from participating in code conferences several weeks ago, "until the proper time, when the call comes from President Roosevelt."

Mr. Warner intimated again that star salaries were out of proportion. He said that their readjustment would increase employment in the industry some 20 to 30 per cent, "without spending any more money than is now being used."

INDUSTRY SIGNING THE BLANKET CODE

Producers and distributors in New York, studios in Hollywood and affiliated and unaffiliated theatre interests throughout the country continued individually during the week to pledge cooperation to President Roosevelt's recovery program. Numerous applications for, and agreements to accept the blanket code, pending the adoption of the industry's own code, were received at Washington from motion picture companies and exhibitors.

Practically every key city listing contained names of large and small exhibitors who agreed to maximum hours and minimum wages.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and RKO enrolled as NRA members, receiving the "blue-eagle" insignia from the Government. Other signatories were Monarch, Freuler, Skouras Circuit, Western Electric, General Electric, Heywood-Wakefield, Hal Roach Studios, Majestic, Eastman Kodak.

Western Electric gave an 11 per cent increase to 15,000 employes. Metro adopted a five-day week. Heywood-Wakefield raised wages five per cent and employed 200 additional workers. Maximum working schedules and minimum wages were adopted by others.

Rosenblatt Approves Code for Laboratories

Sol A. Rosenblatt, deputy administrator of amusement codes, Tuesday placed his informal stamp of approval on the code of fair competition submitted to him by the laboratory branch of the industry. The action virtually assures the laboratory workers a 40-hour maximum week with a minimum wage of 50 cents per hour.

Mr. Rosenblatt suggested a few minor changes in the trade practice provisions of the code and it is understood these will be complied with at a meeting late this week. As soon as the changes have been made the code will be submitted to Washington.

Theatre Admissions Exempt From California Sales Tax

Theatre admissions are specifically exempt from the general 2½ per cent sales tax passed by the California legislature last week in extraordinary session. The tax went into effect August 1. Exhibitors must pay a tax on purchases of theatre supplies, however.

Robert Fairbanks Manager Of United Artists Studio

Robert Fairbanks, president of United Artists Studio Corporation, this week assumed the additional office of general manager of the studio. Mr. Fairbanks promoted James Dent, unit production manager, to assistant general manager of the studio. Mr. Dent has been in service at the studio ten years.

Canadian Unions Threaten Strike

Canadian union operators threatened Wednesday to effect a countrywide strike when they learned of a proposal for a third pay cut within a year. The new scale, which would become effective September 1, would reduce salaries to about $30, or approximately one-half the original contract scale.

U. S. TO ACT IF STUDIO STRIKE SETTLING LAGS

Roosevelt's National Arbitration Board Expected to Name Special Inquiry Committee If Agreement Is Delayed

BULLETIN

The Hollywood studio strike was deadlocked Wednesday night. The IATSE accepted the suggestion of William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, that the matter be referred to President Roosevelt's national labor board.

The IATSE late Wednesday petitioned the Los Angeles courts for an injunction restraining the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, with which the IATSE is at loggerheads, from providing men to Hollywood studios to replace striking IATSE members.

The academy's "fact-finding" committee report was to be issued momentarily. Production appeared normal.

Failure of Hollywood producers and technicians to adjust their differences, which underlie the present strike of the sound men, will eventuate in Government intervention. This was brought out this week as President Roosevelt's National Board of Arbitration met for its preliminary surveys of the causes of a number of labor difficulties now being experienced in various industries. It was further understood that unless the strike is settled within a few days a special subcommittee may be appointed by the Board.

Fight Eastern Processing

Studio technicians launched an attack to prevent processing of West Coast studio film in eastern laboratories. Richard J. Green, IATSE representative in Hollywood, said Tuesday he had received word from William C. Elliott, president, that he would instruct laboratory union workers in the eastern section to refuse to handle films sent from Hollywood for cutting, developing or printing. Herbert J. Yates's Consolidated Film office reported Wednesday in New York that any such proceedings are unknown to them.

Pat Casey, producers' labor representative, on Tuesday denied any film was being sent from Hollywood to the eastern laboratories. He also said there had been no reduction in production activities, declaring that 40 companies are now working and that new pictures are starting on schedule.

While waiting for Washington to set up definite conciliation machinery to end the strike, the IATSE filed papers in superior court Tuesday for an injunction to restrain IBEW (electrical workers' union) from offering the services of its members for certain types of studio work. In the injunction suit it is alleged that in 1926 the IATSE entered into contract with the IBEW local wherein the work of each was specified and divided. During the present strike the IATSE claims that IBEW offered its members for work, which was to be performed by the IATSE. Judge McComb refused the temporary restraining order.

Motion picture leaders in New York this week were interested in the President's action, both as it affects the Hollywood situation and because of its possible relation to the usual labor difficulties which arise around September 1, when wage scale agreements and contracts between exhibitors and projectionists, stagehands and musicians come up for renewal. Since last September, however, receivers for numerous theatres and circuit subsidiaries effected readjustments of contracts and downward revisions in keeping with the economic stringency of last winter and autumn.

Academy Committee Acts

On Monday it was announced that the Academy fact-finding committee had taken the whole strike matter under advisement. This action resulted from the proposal of Harry Brigaerts, of the IBEW, that the studio strike be settled by transferring jurisdiction over the sound men's union to the IBEW. The proposal was turned down by the IATSE.

It was understood that Mr. Brigaerts' appearance before the committee was the result of a telegram from William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor. Previously Mr. Brigaerts had refused to confer with the committee.

The deadlock continues despite general optimism in the film colony that the President's labor truce would end the studio strike.

Mr. Casey said Sunday: "Producers did not call the strike and did not lock out anyone who wanted to return to work. In substance it remains a union jurisdictional fight between unions and will have to be settled by them. The attitude of the producers has not changed and will not in this case, because it complies firmly with the President's desire for maximum employment."

Five officers of the IATSE in Hollywood declared they are prepared to accept any helpful suggestions from Washington.

The union workers walked out July 22, after efforts to persuade studio chiefs to agree to a maximum working day of 12 hours and a six-day week.

Some 3,300 technicians are expected to return to work this week while labor heads and studio executives hasten to reach an accord.

The National Arbitration Board includes Senator Robert F. Wagner, William Green, Dr. Leo Wolman, economist; John. L Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America; Walter C. Teagle, chairman of the board of the Standard Oil Company of New York; Gerard Swope, chairman of the board of General Electric, and Louis E. Kirstein, president of E. A. Filene and Sons, Boston.

MUELLER MONOPOLY VERDICT IS SET ASIDE

U. S. District Judge at Indianapolis Holds Neither Conspiracy Nor Damage Proved in Fight on Arbitration Award

Setting aside a verdict that had been given in favor of Harry Mueller, exhibitor at Anderson, Ind., against Fox Film Corporation, Universal, United Artists, RKO, Pathe, Tiffany, and Electrical Research Products, Inc., Judge Balzell, in U. S. district court at Indianapolis held last week that neither conspiracy nor damage under the Clayton anti-trust act had been proved. In a lower court in January a jury had awarded Mr. Mueller $40,189.50 in his original suit charging conspiracy, restraint of trade, monopoly and damage. The verdict then was appealed.

Harry Mueller was owner of the Crystal theatre in Anderson, a house seating approximately 700. Early in 1929 came a dispute with Fox over his alleged failure to play out his contract with that company. On February 19 of that year Fox filed a claim with the joint board of arbitration at Indianapolis. In May, 1929, the court rendered a decision against Mueller. Later in the same month, United Artists, Universal, RKO, Paramount, Pathe, Tiffany and Erpi demanded of him $500 annual security in accordance with the provisions in their contract.

Forced Out, Mueller Claimed

The $500 was awarded these companies and Mr. Mueller claimed that as a result he was forced to go out of business. He filed suit and the case finally came up for trial in January of this year.

At this trial it developed that Mr. Mueller, on Feb. 2, 1929, had leased his theatre through Publix Fitzpatrick-McElroy, after he had entered into the Fox dispute, and at the same time had made plans for the leasing of a new theatre, then under construction, according to Edward C. Raferty, of O'Brien, Driscoll and Raferty, who, with Frank C. Daily and Solon J. Carl, of Indianapolis, are handling the case for the distributors.

It was further discovered, said Mr. Raferty, that Mueller was a franchise holder of Warner Bros., and that more than 90 per cent of the pictures he had been playing prior to and subsequent to the $500 security decision in May, 1929, were Warner productions. Repeatedly he refused to play the films of the other companies, unless they were specifically all-talking pictures, it was pointed out. As Warner was making practically all of the all-talking pictures at that time, it was practically impossible for the other companies to exhibit their product through Mr. Mueller, as even the synchronized versions were not acceptable to him, according to Mr. Raferty.

At the beginning of 1929 was made the now famous ruling of Judge Thomas D. Thacher, ruling that the arbitration provisions of the uniform contract were illegal. Because of this, Mr. Raferty said, the jury which sat on the trial last January may have been influenced in Mr. Mueller's favor.

In last week's decision, Judge Balzell not only set aside the verdict in its entirety, but in an opinion delivered from the bench declared that since the beginning of the case four years ago neither conspiracy nor damage had been proved. He granted the defendants a new trial, probably to be held during the court's autumn term.

Film executives all over the country have been watching with interest for further developments in this case, not only because of its basic importance as an individual case, but also because it is the first time a verdict has resulted from an attempt to upset an arbitration award on such grounds. Recently two similar cases, one in Hartford, Conn., and the other in Kansas City, were won by the defendant distributors.

Studio Idle Until Fire Hazards End

Until all of 27 alleged fire code violations have been eliminated from the Atlas Sound Recording Studio in Long Island City, daily inspection to prevent operation was ordered last week by Magistrate Dwyer in Long Island city court.

Benjamin Berk, general manager of the studio, who pleaded guilty to a charge of operating without a permit, will face sentence August 15. Mr. Berk was president of the Manhattan Studio, lessee of the Pathe Building when eleven lives were lost in a fire in December, 1929. The bureau of combustion demanded the Atlas studio be closed on the ground that Mr. Berk had failed to remove 17 of 27 violations charged last November.

Playdate Suit Dismissed

Judge Robert R. Nevin, in Cincinnati United States district court, has dismissed the copyright infringement suit of Universal, Paramount, MGM and Educational against Moses Wilchens, Julius Frankel and local exhibitors associated with them. The plaintiffs had charged the defendant had played certain pictures on unauthorized dates.

Record Suit Is Heard

A case is being heard in San Francisco federal court by Judge Harold Lauderback, in which the Oriental Record Company brought suit against the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company, the Brunswick Record Corporation and Warner Brothers for $245,000, alleging that 124,000 records made up to its order were defective and unsalable.

New Equipment Company

Theatre Equipment and Sound Company, to be known as Tesco in the trade, has been formed to manufacture and distribute standard projection and sound equipment, with headquarters at 1658 Broadway, New York. Robert R. French heads the new company.

Wisconsin Houses In Three-Ply Race

Fox's subsidiary, Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises, and Warner Bros. and J. E and Thomas Saxe, Sr., are apparently in a three-cornered race for theatre acquisitions in Wisconsin. Taking over the Orpheum and the Strand in Green Bay gives Wisconsin Amusement 29 houses in the state. If Warner buys the Fox in Green Bay, as is expected, and the Retlaw in Fond du Lac, its holdings in Wisconsin will total 17 theatres.

Wisconsin Amusement has just acquired the Orpheum, Strand and Parkway theatres in Madison, with Asher Levy to remain in charge, also the Fond du Lac in the city of that name. In May the circuit acquired the Shorewood at Shorewood, Downer at Milwaukee, Rex at Oshkosh and Menasha at Menasha.

Warner is leasing the Capitol in Madison, relinquished by Wisconsin Amusement. Warner also has taken over the Strand in Oshkosh.

A further complication lies in the activities of the newly formed Saxe Amusement Management, Inc., taking over houses formerly operated by the bankrupt Statewide Theatres, Inc. Saxe reopened the Oshkosh in Oshkosh Friday, the Princess, Uptown, Tivoli and Garfield in Milwaukee, with the others to reopen soon. Saxe contracted with Statewide for operation of twelve theatres.

Claims of $500,000 Are Involved in Fox Midland

A series of claims totaling $500,000 is involved in the out-of-court settlement being negotiated in Kansas City between M. B. Shanberg, with whom his partner, Herbert M. Woolf, is associated, and Fox West Coast over control of Fox Midland. Differences between the groups were composed at recent New York conferences.

The indication is that litigation initiated by Mr. Shanberg against the Fox Midland receivers will eventually be dismissed. It is probable also that the Fox Midland bankruptcy will remain in effect. Motion in federal court to stay the bankruptcy proceedings and discharge the receivers, returning Fox Midland to Shanberg and Woolf, was scheduled to be heard last week. If the agreement is signed these actions will be dismissed.

BEDEVILING TROUBLES OVERCOME, INDEPENDENT PRODUCERS DECLARE

Former Executives of Large Companies Find Decentralized System Saves Overhead, Better Quality Pictures Obtained

by GUS McCARTHY of MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S
Hollywood Bureau

There are many arguments for and against the motion picture industry's new-style independent production for large company release. Those favoring are enthusiastic in opinions that it is the ideal solution of all production problems, acclaiming it as the method under which all pictures will be made in the future. Its opponents, admitting current success, foresee it running into unsurmountable difficulties. Interviews with several of the independent producers find them unanimous in one belief—independent production as now conceived and as they hope to develop it, is the most satisfactory assurance of better quality screen entertainment.

Messrs. Lasky, Rogers, Schulberg, Zanuck, et al., have ranked high in the large producer field. They are men of experience, surely knowing the strength and weaknesses of the major plan, but now adherents to the independent idea, they are qualified to speak authoritatively and authentically.

In the case of all these producers, providing their own finances, selecting their casts, supervising personally all accompanying details, the productions bearing their own identities, they appreciate that success or failure hinges solely on the quality of pictures they turn out. Better than anyone else, they recognize that their reputations, as well as financial welfare, are directly at stake.

The essence of independent production was aptly stated by Jesse Lasky, who said, "Because of the many changes in the nature of this business, mass production is no longer efficient. The theatre-going public has become keenly discriminatory. Story ideas, which really are the only things with which a producer has to work, are reaching the point of exhaustion. The executive charged with control of a multi-picture program, hampered by the endless procession of studio detail which his post demands, cannot give the necessary attention. Subordinates, lacking the incentive that inspires the executive, must be charged with his responsibilities. The history of the past few years is ample evidence of that system's shortcomings.

Bedeviling Difficulties Ended

"But with the individual producer, the bedeviling difficulties automatically eliminate themselves. In my own case, I can devote proper time and thought to story selection. I can personally confer with the staff. I can take ample time to do this and at the same time be in position to meet release date requirements. I don't have to rush or hastily pass over anything.

"Furthermore, during shooting, I am always on the job with only that particular picture occupying my mind. I can change and alter while the picture is in work. Should any differences of opinion arise, I, the most interested party, am available immediately to adjudicate them. Thus no time is lost. Costs are kept from mounting. Morale is higher. Chances for higher quality product are immeasurably enhanced."

Mr. Lasky thus consolidated the ideas and hopes of all other independents. Yet he has additional plans, possible to him as an independent, to insure his success. In the case of "The Power and the Glory," instead of paying the author an outright sum for his story, Preston Sturgess was contracted on a royalty basis quite similar to the stage play procedure. Mr. Sturgess, given a reasonable advance, will share in the profits of the picture. Both declare the arrangement has proved satisfactory, with Sturgess on the set every day to give the director and players the benefit of his advice. Co-incidentally, Mr. Zanuck has announced that this profit-sharing plan will be adopted as an integral part of Twentieth Century productions procedure, and other studios are experimenting with it.

Emphatic that independent production will prove a boon to the entire industry, B. P. Schulberg insisted that his primary responsibility is to the exhibitor and patron. He said: "There never was enough talent in the industry, executive, creative or artistic, to make the 700 or 800 features necessary. Authority was delegated to inadequate minds and quality sagged. Even so, with 60 pictures programmed, one 'flop' is only one-sixtieth of the total.

"But with only eight pictures scheduled, I can't afford to have a single failure. One is one-eighth of my program. Caution must be exercised in every angle. In short, the indepent producer is a specialist, concentrating on one thing."

Taking a different premise, Charles R. Rogers pointed out that the time element is an important factor in the independent set-up.

Independent production for major distribution is not a new idea.

But about a year ago, the much discussed but never eventuating Milestone-Selznick "unit plan" of production, coming at a time when major studio executive personnel was changing almost daily, concentrated attention on the "independently produced" idea and gave it vigorous impetus that within a comparatively short time rallied many big names to its banner

In view of subsequent developments, with many of the independent-produced-major-released features proving outstanding attractions from both entertainment and box office standpoints, and with such well-known ex-major executives as Charles R. Rogers, B. P. Schulberg, Jesse Lasky, Joseph I. Schnitzer, Darryl Zanuck and Sam Bischoff becoming definitely associated with the idea, it might be well to analyze from the viewpoint of the most interested parties—the exhibitor and patron—what benefits major distributed independently produced pictures hold for them. The new independent idea first took hold this season, but not until the new 1933-34 season will its full effects be felt.

—THE EDITOR

Lasky, Schulberg, Rogers, Zanuck All Cite Advantages of Close Contact with a Few Films in Contrast to Factory Methods

"The idea of specific interest to the exhibitor," he said, "is that you have one thing before you at a time. The story and all its related details, selection of cast, director, production technique, can all be whipped into shape before ever a camera turns. There's a saving of time and money right there.

"But there's another, and I think more important aspect to the time element. The major executive is practically chained to his desk. I've just returned from a trip to New York during which I talked with many exhibitors across the country, and I'm frank to say that I got a more vivid insight into their problems than I ever had before. In the future, properly scheduling my program, I'm going to get around more; to talk with managers and exchangemen; find out what they want. At the same time, I'll be able to mingle directly with patrons and learn from them firsthand what they think and what they want."

Short and terse was the comment of Sam Bischoff, of KBS, releasing through Radio. "Our pictures are made for Grade B houses, good commercial product that enables us, as independents with a major release, to put a full dollar's worth of entertainment value on the screen for every dollar expended. Knowing our actual market, we stay within a budget that will enable us to produce a picture which will satisfy and return a fair profit. Overhead is shaved to the bone. We have neither finances nor time for folderols that sound big but mean little."

Naturally these men look with optimism on independent production, yet they are not unaware that their path is far from rose-strewn. One look at the colossal structure that is and has been motion pictures is all that is necessary to convince an interested observer that the independent producer is marching onto a hectic battle ground. The old guard died but never surrendered.

Economy Strong Claim

Economy of operation is one of the independent's strongest claims. He boasts that he has no great continuing overhead of a gigantic studio and its hordes of employees. Save when producing, his working staff is of skeleton proportions. By borrowing from his big brother, or using non-contract freelancers, he gets stars, casts and other necessary persons. Paid while working, their cost is charged directly to the picture. So far, the major distributor welcomes the independent.

Assuming however, that the independent product reaches a plane of picture quality that tops the competing major studio product in box office results, will the major executive be so enthusiastic in his helpfulness?

The major producer has many ways in which to hamper the independent. It can be made increasingly difficult, almost impossible, to effect star loans. Desired stage space and other studio accommodations may not be available.

In other fields, too, distribution and advertising for example, there are innumerable hidden possibilities of upsetting the independent's applecart, and neither exhibitor nor patron can expect that the new independent idea will bring about the millenium so keenly desired by all without some sharpshooting.

While independent and majors are marshaling their forces for the new program, neither they nor exhibitors can afford to lose sight of the basic principle—good pictures.

Issuance of consolidated financial statements both by Radio Corporation and Orpheum follows the release last week of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum report, which listed losses totaling $10,695,503, and appeared, in detail, in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, Aug. 5, page 32.

Foreclosure action on $11,600,000 of Radio-Keith-Orpheum debentures and $1,463,000 in extended notes was started late last week in federal court, District of New York, by Chemical National Bank and Trust Co. as trustee. Attorneys for the bank are Cotton, Franklin, Wright and Gordon.

M. H. Aylesworth, president of RKO, said on Monday that the foreclosure action would bring the trustee and the interests of the debenture holders under the supervision of the court, but would not affect the reorganization of the company of the continuance of the present management.

Describing the action as a routine legal procedure in default cases of this kind, A. H. McCausland, receivers' representative at RKO, said: "It serves as a matter of record for the Chemical Bank and its effect is to consolidate the bank's suit with the original receivership suit filed by Alfred M. West." The bonds are ten-year 6 per cent gold debentures.

The bank applied for and obtained permission from Federal Judge William Bondy to bring the foreclosure action. Permission was necessary before any action could be taken because of the RKO equity receivership. The bank charges that the defendant corporation violated the terms of the mortgage, dated Dec. 23, 1931, by failing to pay $1,118,500 due on extended notes, which were given during the same year and which had matured.

In addition to the $11,600,000 in bonds the defendant and its subsidiaries have $2,822,000 in other debentures and deferred notes which are payable: $26,438,800 in mortgages and $5,656,726 in notes payable and debentures.

Property items covered by the mortgage include notes amounting to more than $25,000,000 face value, given by RKO Pictures and others to Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation; also stock in 38 subsidiaries, among which are Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, K. A. O. Holding Corporation, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Western Corporation, Radio-Keith-Orpheum, Ltd. (of England), Radio-Keith-Orpheum Mid-West Corporation, Radio-Keith-Orpheum New York Corporation and Radio-Keith-Orpheum Pennsylvania Corporation.

Irving Trust Company, as temporary receiver, received claims aggregating $23,376,018 from creditors between Feb. 6 and July 6 of this year. The claims were:

Leases	$17,395,991
Financial obligations	4,581,715
Breach of contract	811,480
Services	106,102
Current accounts	259,763
Miscellaneous claims	199,567

The list does not include the claim of Rockefeller Center, Inc., covering the leases of the two Radio City theatres and office space. Nor does it include claims which may be made by holders of 6 per cent secured gold notes and 6 per cent gold debentures of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation.

Skouras Receiver Ends in St. Louis

The receivership of Skouras Brothers Enterprises and St. Louis Amusement Company, operators of 16 neighborhood and suburban theatres in St. Louis, was terminated Monday by Circuit Judge Hamilton.

Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., owns 93 per cent of the stock in these two companies and opposed the receivership actions as unwarranted. Harry Koplar, veteran motion picture exhibitor and former business associate of Spyros, George and Charles Skouras, was behind these suits.

Termination of the Skouras corporation receivership also releases its subsidiary, Skouras Super Theatres Corporation, from the receivers. This company, owned equally by Skouras Brothers Enterprises and Paramount Publix, controlled the Ambassador, Grand Central and Missouri theatres in St. Louis. In July those houses were leased by the receivers to Central Theatre Company, in which Skouras' are interested.

Attorney said Monday that the court's decision would not affect the new companies' leases. The companies were thrown into receivership in November, 1931, following a hearing before Circuit Judge Granville Hogan.

Fox Promotes Spillenaar

George Spillenaar of the Fox home office foreign department has been promoted to the post of supervisor of the company's office in Singapore.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Box office receipts from 107 theatres in 19 of the larger cities of the country for the calendar week ended August 5, 1933, were $944,673, representing a decline of $39,420 from the total of the previous calendar week, ended July 29, when the amount was $984,093 for the same number of houses in 19 cities.

It is the privilege of RKO-Radio to present as the first attraction of the new season a production of such superlative merit that it feels impelled to express in print a tribute to all who have contributed toward its greatness . . . its stars, its cast, its director, its producer, Mr. Merian C. Cooper.

Never before has a picture swept to such emotional heights . . . vaulted on wings of the transcendent art of Katharine Hepburn.

Three-Cornered Moon

(Paramount-Schulberg)

Near-Drama

It is a lightsome thing, done, one might fancy, under the influence of dandelion wine of a June evening for which there was to be no tomorrow whatsoever, ever.

"Three-Cornered Moon" has a charming cast of capable persons, mostly rather pleasant to regard and, in the lines of this picture, certainly nothing to worry about.

The story, from a play by Miss Gertrude Tonkonogy, is what she seems to presume might have happened if a dumb mamma in Brooklyn has been left with a slight fortune and some four harebrained grown-up children. Doubtless some mammas are that dumb, and doubtless some children are that harebrained, but there are large areas in the United States where the audiences will not believe it, to the detriment of the picture, which is a little short of burlesque and a bit short of drama. That may be written off, to be sure, as a personal opinion.

If I were the exhibitor I'd sell the names, all of which are excellent.

It is worthy of note that the picture, despite alarming opportunities for a divergence from the decencies, is amazingly free of the innuendo and erroticism with which so many of its same casual character have been pervaded. There is only one sex implication in it, and that is so bald and commonplace that it is negligible.

"Three-Cornered Moon" might well be termed the picture without a headache. It is a story of those who do not think, made for the same kind. It may easily be a hit.—TERRY RAMSAYE.

Tugboat Annie

(MGM)

Comedy Drama

This show should be a box office natural. Marie Dressler and Wallace Berry, sweethearts of "Min and Bill," are teamed again. The picture is based on the Norman Raine Saturday Evening Post short stories. And that's a combination.

"Tugboat Annie" is comedy drama with humanness that stirs heart interest and audience sympathy as its predominant characteristics. There's mother love, dreaming grand ambitions for her little boy; wifely love enduring all the heartbreak engendered by the antics of her innocently irresponsible drunken hulk of a no-good husband.

Handicapped by a slow start, much dialogue accompanying the action and atmosphere that establish the Annie-Terry characters and the waterfront color, the story plunges into its true tone when the couple's young son, Alec, comes home as skipper of the palatial Glacier Queen. Mother and father gloriously proud in their own way as Seneca acclaims its scion, drama develops as Alec offers to give his mother an easier life than skippering the Narcissus. A family brawl ensuing as the boy berates his father, Annie elects to remain with her mate and endure the hazards of towboat operation.

The Narcissus wearing out, Annie borrows money to fix it up, only to have Terry wreck it in a harum scarum attempt to salvage a floating case of booze. The tug is sold, the pair reduced to destitution. In service again, towing garbage scows, the same crew manning, the little craft, momentarily in danger of falling apart, is bucking a storm when Annie sees distress signals. Recognizing the disabled Glacier Queen, Annie starts to the rescue over the bitter protestations of Terry and the crew that there isn't a chance. The worthless Terry crawls through the flaming fire box to repair the boilers. This bit of realism had the preview audience sitting on chair edges. Of course the liner is saved. Terry is a medaled hero, the family is reunited, the liner's owners rebuild the Narcissus and give it to Annie.

Obviously good showmanship dictates that the box office power of Dressler and Beery be capitalized to the limit. Not that there are no others in the cast. No one can overlook such names as Maureen O'Sullivan, Robert Young, Frankie Darrow and even Tammany Young. For advertising and publicity purposes that should be plenty.

All kinds of colorful exploitation is possible —the Narcissus—Secoma atmosphere; waterfront lobbies, sea scenes; shipping gear, hawsers, capstans, life-preservers; exhibits of model ships, sail and steam; contests for adults and youngsters to build 'em; tieups with magazine stands and Satevepost distributors, particularly if a "Tugboat Annie" story appears near or at the time of your play dates. Sell the show to every possible patron, man, woman or child.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Associate producer, Harry Rapf. From the Saturday Evening Post Stories by Norman Reilly Raine. Adapted by Zelda Sears and Eve Greene. Additional Dialogue by Norman Reilly Raine. Recording director, Douglas Shearer. Art director, Merrill Pye. Interior decoration by Edwin B. Willis. Photographed by Gregg Toland. Film editor, Blanche Sewell. Running time, 88 minutes. Release date, Aug. 4, 1933.

Drama

The generally glamorous Kay Francis becomes here a definite selling factor in marketing this picture to the patronage, as she appears in the role of a feminine doctor of medicine. She loses nothing of beauty and attractiveness by her different role, different costume, but rather gains in her handling of the part, and the unusual type of performance she is called upon to give.

The picture should be essentially one of great woman appeal, and in that direction should the exhibitor direct his most strenuous selling effort. It is probably out of the question to attempt to make selling contact with any medical groups since such action might antagonize, professional ethics being what they are. However, it would not be amiss in the smaller community to engage the interest of the local physicians in the showing of the picture.

The plot structure is strong, the suspense often good, and the cast, even to minor parts, satisfactory. For names on the marquee there are Miss Francis, Lyle Talbot, the amusing and lively Glenda Farrell, and Thelma Todd in a minor role. Una O'Connor is strong in a small character part.

The exhibitor has here drama, something of a triangle and a goodly portion of action to sell, with the woman battling first to overcome the reluctance to call upon the services of a feminine physician, then fighting to keep her self respect and save the man she loves from difficulties resulting from his own folly.

Mary Stevens and Talbot are graduated together from medical school and open adjoining offices. Miss Farrell is Mary's nurse and secretary. Talbot early tires of poor patients, and poorer pay, and begins to capitalize on his friendship with Thelma Todd, daughter of an important politician. While Mary works herself into a position of prominence as a children's physician, Talbot, with money coming easy, takes things that way, and marries Miss Todd. A reform scandal gets him into a tight spot, and when he is clear of it he seeks to divorce Miss Todd, despite her father's objection. On a vacation, he again meets Mary, realizes he loves her, and plans to marry her as soon as his pending divorce will permit.

Mary, about to have a child, goes to France with Miss Farrell, has the child and proceeds to adopt it. Talbot is unaware of the situation. Returning, the child dies when infantile paralysis strikes the steerage and is transmitted to the baby. Broken, Mary is ready to give up everything, is about to commit suicide, when a nearby child has need of immediate attention. She saves it, is thereby rehabilitated, and she and Talbot go on together.

Much can be made, in feminine appeal, of the idea of the woman, a doctor, who could not save her own child, and the rehabilitation of Talbot. There is good drama, suspense and the somewhat unusual theme of the feminine doctor to sell in a fast-paced story. There is no possible appeal in the film for the youngster.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by Warner Brothers. Directed by Lloyd Bacon. Based on a novel by Virginia Kellogg. Screen play by Rian James. Cameraman, Sid Hickox. Film editor, Ray Curtis. Art director, Esdras Hartley. Release date, July 22, 1933. Running time, 72 minutes.

Devil's Mate

(Monogram)

Mystery

Nicely balancing its drama and mystery, its suspense contrasted by timely comedy, logically developing its romantic angle, "Devil's Mate" is a combination murder mystery-detective-newspaper show that carries more than enough audience pleasing entertainment. It is speedily paced, illusion vying with dialogue and action in a well knit series of punchy situations, well acted and intelligently directed.

Maloney, a convicted killer, sitting in the electric chair, is slain by a poison dart just as he is about to name the man who inspired his crime. Suspicion points most strongly at McGee. Into the setup, searching for her co-worker, Natural, comes Nancy, a newspaper reporter. Romance is established at once between her and Inspector O'Brien. Convinced that McGee is innocent, she receives O'Brien's permission to carry on an independent investigation. An interview with Gwen, Maloney's sweetheart, after one with the politically-inclined Parkhurst, gives Nancy a clue which is strengthened when Gwen is killed the same way as Maloney. O'Brien arrests Clinton for both murders. Nancy becomes further involved with Parkhurst and stumbles upon the real killer as she is kidnapped and about to suffer the same fate in the gripping climax when she is rescued by O'Brien.

Interesting patrons is merely a matter of taking advantage of the showmanship that is natural to the show. Primarily the cast is okay for the smaller theatres. Big house managers, however, won't have to worry that they will be taking a chance in playing it. Given the benefit of a healthy build-up, based on the premise that the show is one that will entertain them much more than they expect, it should more than measure up.

Several topical exploitation gags are possible, particularly the 13-13 telephone idea that can be worked from any number of mysterious angles. Likewise the old standby—"Who Is the Killer"—daring your audiences to put its finger on him before the climax, should be good for trick advertising in both newspapers and heralds.

The show is of the type that should interest both adults and juveniles.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

No Marriage Ties

(RKO Radio)

Drama

Excellent possibilities for good, active exploitation are presented to the lively exhibitor in this picture. The story of the "big-shot" advertising man who bulldozes sales no matter how inferior the product he is selling may be, and at the same time makes drastic efforts to remain free and untrammeled, makes for good selling copy.

As far as names are concerned, that of Richard Dix is the best bet of the showman in selling the film. The other names are considerably less important, though Alan Dinehart and David Landau play well and are not unknown. Elizabeth Allan, playing opposite Dix, is a new and young English player, worthy of attention, especially from the exhibitor, in view of the value of build-up for future appearances. She is attractive, appealing and capable. The name of Doris Kenyon probably will strike a familiar note.

The title, though sufficiently sustained by the story's development, gives something of the impression the picture is a semi-domestic tangle, which it is not. Since it has not the implication of action and pace which is definitely valuable in selling, it might be better to concentrate more attention on the star and the story, from the advertising angle, than on the title. It may be of value to indicate that the picture was adapted from the stage play "Ad Man," by Arch Gaffney and Charles Curran.

Dix, a newspaper sports writer, who spends most of his time imbibing freely in a speakeasy, is fired by Landau, the managing editor, encounters the out-of-work artist, Miss Allan, and proceeds to give her a home, with an unwritten agreement of "no marriage ties," acceptable to both. Accidentally Dix falls in with Dinehart, owner of an advertising agency, and Dix displays an uncanny ability of slogan-concoction. In the firm as a partner, he reaches the financial heights, is recognized as the greatest ad man in the business, unscrupulous and shady as his selling campaign may be. Miss Allan is in the art department.

He meets Miss Kenyon, proprietress of a beauty salon, becomes infatuated, and agrees to marry her. Just before the marriage date Dix comes suddenly to realize the feeling he holds for Miss Allan, and breaks off with his fiancee. She commits suicide and Miss Allan leaves for Paris and study. Dix throws his agency into the air and returns to the speakeasy, where finally Miss Allan, drawn back from Paris, finds him.

Working hard on the exploitation possibilities of the ad man angle, the great slogan-maker, and relying on the "no marriage ties" phase to draw the feminine contingent, should bring out the best attendance of which the picture is capable. Promise one of those hard, driving performances by Dix, and point to the appeal of Miss Allan.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Directed by J. Walter Ruben. Screen play by Sam Mintz and Arthur Caesar. Adapted from the play "Ad Man," by Arch Gaffney and Charles Curran. Additional dialogue by H. W. Hanneman. Cameraman, Henry Cronjager. Sound engineer, John Tribby. Art director, Van Nest Polglase. Film editor, George Hively. Release date, August 11, 1933. Strauss Musical

Here is a gay starring vehicle for the lovely English girl, Evelyn Laye. Adapted from Strauss' "Die Fledermaus," it has a jolly little story to tell, with plenty of comedy situations and dramatic twists to carry the sweeping melody of the thing.

Eisenstein (no relation to Serge!) likes wine and women. He also loves Rosalinde, to whom he is married, and it is difficult to do ample justice to both (or all three) at one and the same time.

After a Laundry Girl's Ball he finds himself sentenced to eight days imprisonment to start next day. So he hurries home to his wife, and finds that she has made his bed comfortably on the settee. She has no time for late comers. In the morning they quarrel wholeheartedly, but kiss and make up, and decide to celebrate with a supper and whatnot all on their own that evening.

Eisenstein, however, hears about a Ball where Adele, his wife's pretty maid, is invited, and he slips on pretext of going to see the judge about his prison sentence.

Wife then smells him out, and follows him to the ball, where she is announced as a Hungarian Countess.

Of course she is masked, and Eisenstein, who never could bear to see a woman wearing so much, concentrates upon her with the obvious intention of improving her appearance. Just as matters get interesting the Prison Governor, who, at Rosalinde's instigation, already has arrested a man he believed to be Eisenstein, arrives at the ball.

Plenty of fun follows and Eisenstein discovers that Rosalinde has penetrated every mystery of his technique d'amour! Well, well, it has been a good run of fun and now he can go to prison for eight days, there to reflect upon the past and collect for the future!

Brightly directed by William Thiele, this is noteworthy principally for the lovely music and the spectacular settings. And of course for the lovely star who plays Rosalinde. The supporting players put up excellent performances, and as an entirely new break for British studios it indicates a high standard in musical film conception. The story is neatly and normally told, with the music and songs interpolated with a fine sense of logic.

It represents another undoubtedly ambitious effort on the part of the fast expanding Gaumont British concern, and an effort which should awaken response wherever musical features of this type are popular.—Mooring, London.

Produced and distributed by Gaumont British. Recorded at Shepherd's Bush studios, London, on British Acoustic process. Directed by William Theiele. Adapted from Strauss "Die Fledermaus." Music by Wilhelm Strauss. Running time, 90 minutes.

The Wrecker

(Columbia)

Drama

The name of heavy-handed Jack Holt on the marquee is usually a promise to the patronage of two-fisted action with right triumphant in a large manner. In this instance the principle is no less true, with the exception of the fact that Holt does not do his work in far-off African wilds, nor Abyssinian deserts, but in the big city, as a building wrecker of no mean proportions.

The wreckage which is his means of livelihood, and through which he makes a great fortune, crashes into his own home life with startling suddenness, making of him human wreckage, akin to that which he brought about with his own hands.

There is a goodly portion of action involved, though somewhat less than is usually to be found in a Jack Holt picture. At the same time there is more real drama, pathos and story value here than in the usual Holt offering. The exhibitor has, in addition to Holt, Genevieve Tobin, George E. Stone and Sidney Blackmer to sell from the cast standpoint.

Holt saves the life of Stone, young junk dealer, on one of his early wrecking jobs, and the two become fast friends. The girl who sells sandwiches on the job, Miss Tobin, is undecided between Holt and Blackmer, timekeeper for Holt. She decides on Holt, and then follows the growth of Holt to fortune and importance as a big wrecker, Stone as head of a large salvage company and Blackmer as the executive of a building concern, Stone and Blackmer, aided considerably by the good offices of the important Holt. Holt is sudddenly called away on a job overnight, but returns early in the morning to find Miss Tobin, his wife, and Blackmer together. He wanders out into the night, and disappears, Miss Tobin divorces him and marries Blackmer, and they keep Holt's young son. Stone eventually finds Holt, a down-and-out wreck of a man in the flop house, tries to rehabilitate him. At the dedication of a new school house which Blackmer had built of shoddy materials, an earthquake ruins the building, all escaping but Blackmer and Miss Tobin. Holt, wandering near, comes upon the scene, offers to bring them to safety, but intending to kill them. Stone persuades him not to follow his intention, but a second shock does its work. Then Stone and Holt, in partnership, Holt's young son with them, he returns to his former position.

In no way extraordinary, the picture makes for good, run-of-the-mill program material, with action, rapid pace and dependable performers. Though they may not appreciate it, the picture should give the youngsters a certain amount of enjoyment.—AARONSON, New York.

Live With You

(Gaumont-British)

Romantic Comedy

Ivor Novello, star of this piece, is the author of the story. He staged it successfully in the West End of London, and Julius Hagen of Twickenham Films, who brought it to the screen, decided against heavy adaptation. The result is an entirely entertaining romantic comedy.

There is a touch of brilliant originality about the story which turns on the arrival in London of an exiled Russian Prince (Novello). He is definitely a smooth-faced Russian, but the absence of the robust Bolshie beard is logical in one so clearly allied to the Cause of a "White Russia." Anyhow, he looks romantic, and when Gladys Wallis (Ursula Jeans of "Cavalcade") finds him resting on a public seat in London's famous Royal relic, Hampton Court, she falls to chatting. The upshot is she takes him to her humble home, where Ma and Pa, thrilled to the bones, accept him as a boarder. His only wealth consists of a string of Russian Imperial jewels, but Pop Wallis is in the jewelry trade and does a good deal for the Prince in the diamond market.

The Prince has not studied English customs with the same diligence which must have given him his mastery of the English tongue, so he proceeds to disorganize the Wallis household by spurring on its individual members to unconventional modes of conduct. Of course, he falls in love with Gladys, and Gladys, being English, believes in the bothersome preliminary of marriage. Just when it looks as though the whole home will be broken up, the Prince decides to become conventional and to lead Gladys to the altar. The rest of the family patch up their individual troubles apparently with a view to living happily on the proceeds of the remaining jewels. Acting is good, especially that of a newcomer named Ida Lupino. The dialogue is bright and at times saucy enough to get belly laughs.—MOORING, London.

Blind Adventure

(RKO Radio)

Melodrama

Combining all the melodrama and hokum of a multi-chapter serial into its hour's running time, "Blind Adventure" turns out to be an exciting and funny picture. The entertainment is elemental, and has the appearance of merging several specialty stories, but given a vein of continuity it rolls along in such a style that no one can imagine just what really is going to happen next.

Discounting the first reel entirely, which only establishes that Bruce is a lonesome American in London, the story drops into a series of fog-shrouded adventures. First, lost in the fog, Bruce wanders into a house and discovers a corpse. He rushes out for the bobbies, meets Gerald, returns with him, only to find the Thorn family comfortably ensconsed in the death room. Much hullabaloo tends to prove Bruce a nut, and then as he and Rose are left alone in the library they hear the Thorns and Geralds indulge in some very incriminating conversation just as the "dead" man, Steel, appears again and gives Bruce a cigaret case to take back to his Scotland Yard associate, Regan. Fun gets fast and furious as the pair, escaping from the house through a skylight, run into a burglar, who as the picture develops is also a pickpocket, cockney comic and somewhat of a magicianly-inclined prognosticator of future events. There's a lot of comedy and it is shown that Bellamy is trying to pry some military secrets from Thorn, also that he and Regan are in cahoots. With the serial idea hokum following, Rose and Bruce are prisoners in Regan's den as many matters calculated to amaze audiences ensue. Eventually Regan crams Rose into a sack, while Bruce pops in and out of doors, and when the sack is opened the burglar is in it. Back to the house, Steel meets Regan. Bruce tells each that the other is double-crossing and we have the old ten-twenty-thirty cent melodrama that makes 'em laugh in this sophisticated day and age. Finally Bruce starts a row between the two conspirators and their gangs, the burglar pulls a lot of fancy pickpocketing and the bobbies come in and arrest the crooks.

A lot of fun and foolishness that goes to make popular entertainment, the kind of show that should enthuse the youngsters and amuse the grown-ups. There are exceptional opportunities for trick exploitation. It has the stuff to catch the fancy of neighborhood and small town patronage.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

One Year Later

Melodrama

Here's a real audience-interesting picture. Basically melodrama, its romance is finely appealing. Well developed comedy easing the dramatic tension, the production caught the attention of the preview audience and held it. Illusion practically forces the audience to exercise its imagination, and action predominates over dialogue. The show is expertly directed, acted with a rare understanding, and carries an effective atmosphere of realism.

The title is catchy; the cast, with Mary Brian, Russell Hopton and Donald Dilloway starred, has a big picture impressiveness. Particularly important from a patron point of view is the contrasting of the lives of a trainload of people with the three principals as the picture rushes to its climax.

Opening as a charming love story, Jim and Molly leave on their honeymoon. Then the show switches to one year later. A train is pulling out of a metropolitan station. Molly is seen as a forlorn creature, Jim shackled to a sheriff. A newspaper headline says Jim Collins is to be electrocuted on New Year Eve.

Aboard the same car that carried them on their honeymoon, Jim refuses to see Molly. Tony, a newspaper reporter, is the only one who knows Mary. All the others are departing on Christmas holidays. Flashbacks tell Tony the real story that led to Jim's conviction. Then, in rather episodic fashion, Will Ahern and Clarence inject diverting comedy, show girl Vera wisecracks, a phonograph plays Christmas carols, Joyce golddigs Hunt.

Tony, ill, and knowing he has not long to live, concocts a daring plan to substitute himself for Jim. Tony knocks out the guard, makes Jim don his coat and hat and instructs him to simulate his own hacking cough, as he, now in the clothes of the convict, panics the passengers with a pistol to dash through the train, and leaps off the rear platform as it roars across a high trestle.

No exhibitor, big or little, should worry as to the entertainment or box office value of "One Year Later." The fact that it brought from the preview audience a burst of appreciative applause is an almost sure indication that the show should click. Its cast, with well-known players in bit parts, answers the demand for names. The title suggests its own showmanship, permitting the development of curiosity-stimulating catchlines that suggest but do not reveal the story.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Only Girl

(Gaumont-Ufa)

Lilian Harvey Romance

This Eric Pommer production is the result of the recently operative coalescence of British and German technique and money. It represents a follow-up of the highly successful "Congress Dances," which lost Lilian Harvey to the Continent. As sometimes with things which follow, it seems longer, and is less substantial than the film of which it is the shadowy reflection. Even so, it is arresting: rather a shadow in the bright sunlight, which "dances" here and there.

With Miss Harvey is a fine Continental newcomer, Charles Boyer, who is a Duke in the Kingdom of Pommer. Killing time in a country canter his susceptible eye lights on a lady's garter. He stows it. Later his horse stumbles and he is taken to a hospital, seriously hurt, sightless and unidentified. He calls for a girl whom he once loved and who used to sing to him. At that moment Lilian Harvey, maid to the Empress, arrives and she is mistaken by the injured man for the girl of his old romance. He begs her to sing. He falls passionately in love with the song and when he recovers and learns that the girl songster was not the girl he had known, he searches high and low for the maid of the bedside madrigal.

On a visit to the Empress he hears the voice again, and it doesn't take more than a thousand feet after that to find the girl. There is some delightful background music, and a few song numbers, none of which, however, is likely to make the popular bid of "Live, Love and Laugh."

Photography is more in German than British style, and Friedrich Hollaender has shown in close-up the Continental directorial hand. There are some fine supporting performances by Mady Christians as the Empress and Ernest Thesiger as the Court Chamberlain, and all in all it is a picture worth a run most places. Whether it will be the last effort under the arrangement between Gaumont-British and Ufa of Germany remains to be seen, but if it is this writer will be more inclined to blame Hitler than Pommer.—Mooring, London.

Produced by Gaumont-British and Ufa. Directed by Friedrich Hollaender. Dialogue and supervision by Robert Stevenson and John Heygate. Music by Franz Wachamann. Photography by F. Benn-Grund. Sound by G. Goldbaum. Running time, 95 minutes.

Hollywood on Parade

(Paramount)

Fan Interest

There is, as usual in these series, a definite amount of that fan interest which attaches to the daily doings of the personalities of Hollywood in their off hours. Seen, as the postman makes his rounds, are Richard Arlen with his wife and baby, Mary Pickford, Tom Mix loading his horses on trucks for a vaudeville tour, a shot of the once famed Theda Bara, Jackie Cooper and his mother and several others. Casual, but interesting material, presented with a note of humor.—Running time, 11 minutes.

THE INVISIBLE MAN

Strange Ceremonies

(Vitaphone)

Mildly Interesting

One of the E. M. Newman World Adventures series, this subject pictures odd ceremonials the world over. Seen are the worship of the Japanese before the famed Buddha, the strange Chinese funeral procession and ceremonial, the formal dances of the Balinese and Siamese temple dancers, and other customs of a ceremonial nature peculiar to certain native people, mostly in far-flung places. The subject, though of interest, is hardly up to the Newman standard.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Old King Cole

(United Artists)

Splendid

Once more Mr. Disney indicates his unusual skill with the screen cartoon, particularly with the addition of artful color. Enormously clever, charmingly pictured, is this number, which draws from opened books the characters in some of the most famed of childhood's fairy tales, who rally about King Cole in his castle on a book, there make merry and rush home to their books at the stroke of twelve. The subject is a positive treat for youngsters, and its cleverness makes it almost equally entertaining for adults.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Bosko, the Sheep-Herder

(Vitaphone)

Fair Cartoon

Bosko, as the shepherd, has a gay time minding his flock, while one particularly inquisitive lamb, gamboling over the green, gets himself into all sorts of difficulties until he meets a wolf in sheep's clothing. He is nearly done for, when the neighboring birds and beasts come to the rescue to vanquish the wolf. Entertaining for the youngsters and a light few minutes for the elders.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Marriage Humor

(Paramount)

Amusing

Harry Langdon, possessing that good touch of proper pantomime, is effectively comic and provides the bulk of the rather plentiful laugh material in this comedy. Harry is the servant, and when his master and mistress go at each other with murder in their eyes, Harry and his wife, the other servant, contribute their share of the excitement. When the wives leave, the husbands go on a real spree, wake with big heads and see terrible animals about them. The wives return, place dummies in their beds, and the husbands throw them out the window, following them when they see their wives, whom they take to be ghosts. It moves rapidly, is amusing and has numerous laughs.—Running time, 19 minutes.

An Idle Roomer

(Vitaphone)

Fair

There are a few laughs and the rather customary inconsequential story in this comedy featuring Jack Haley as a roomer in a boarding house, who cannot pay his bill and engages a new roomer, a champion wrestler, in a bout for $100. Haley is tossed about like a sack of potatoes until by hiding the bell beneath his shirt, he permits the champion to knock himself out. As comedy it is only moderately successful, with a tendency in the slapstick direction. There is a laugh or two for those who like that type of humor.—Running time, 20 minutes.

The BLUEBOOK School

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 185.—(A) Suppose a fuse blows, and you install another, which holds all right for, say, an hour, and then it too blows. There is no ground or overload. Where would you look for the trouble? (B) What would be the effect of loose or dirty fuse contacts? (C) May a contact that looks clean be unclean and offer considerable resistance? (D) Name one source of overload which supplies visible evidence on incandescent circuits.

Answer to Question No. 178

Bluebook School Question No. 178 was: (A) To what extent and in what way have you found the Bluebook School beneficial? (B) What is a cartridge fuse? A plug fuse? A link fuse? (C) What various things do Underwriters' rules require with relation to cartridge fuses? (D) What are the required dimensions for a 60-ampere, 220-volt cartridge fuse, ferrule type? Knife blade type?

Breston, B. T. Sampson and G. C. Hendrie, L. and C. D. Dodson, N. Daniels and M. R. Winning, T. M. and S. O'Brien, H. D. Schofield.

I believe I am fully justified in printing several answers to Section A, so that you may see just how those who have been sending answers to the questions feel about it. First, our two oldest "scholars"; namely, Messrs. S. Evans and C. Rau, and G. E. Doe, the first two named of Vancouver, B. C.; the second of Chicago.

Evans and Rau say, "The Bluebook School has been beneficial to us in that it has freshened our memories on subjects which had been studied before but on which we were shaky. Also, it has presented many subjects in an altogether different light, so that obscure points have been brought out and made clear, where before they had been somewhat incomprehensible."

Brother Doe says, "I am especially well pleased to have the opportunity of answering this question and giving some credit where large credit is due. I started in the 'school' a long while ago, believing I would answer only a couple of questions which interested me. I soon discovered I was not nearly so well posted as a I thought I was.

"I honestly believe, Brother Richardson, the Bluebook School has done a very great deal to improve projection knowledge and make more efficient projectionists of its 'scholars.'"

Dale Danielson of Russell, Kan., says, "Anything that demands reasoning and study is beneficial and the Bluebook School does that. Anything that makes one strive to do better work is beneficial. Our school does that. It keeps us up with latest advancements and gives us practical projectionists' ideas."

(B) I believe Brothers Evans and Rau did the best on this section. They say, "The cartridge fuse consists of a strip of fusible metal encased in a fiber case at the end of which are the ferrules or other contacts for inserting in a fuse block or receptacle. The interior of the fiber case may or may not be filled with powdered insulating substance for the purpose of extinguishing the arc when the fuse blows. If the fuse is of the non-renewable kind it will contain this insulating powder. Some kinds of renewable fuses have this powder and some have not.

"A plug fuse consists of a cylindrical porcelain body in which the fuse strip is placed. One end of the strip is soldered to the brass screw shell which surrounds the porcelain body and which forms one of the contacts. The other end of the fuse strip is soldered to the brass center contact at the bottom of the porcelain. At the top of the porcelain body is a mica window which allows a view of the fuse strip and which is supposed to become discolored when the fuse blows. This window is hexagonally shaped when the fuse is of a capacity of 15 amperes or less, and is round when the fuse is over 15 amperes.

"A link fuse consists of a fuse strip or wire connected at each end to a copper terminal which may be one of various shapes."

(C) G. E. Doe says, "Underwriters' rules demand (a) a fixed minimum distance between contact clips, depending upon voltage and amperage capacity; (b) a certain fixed distance over terminals, depending upon voltage and amperage capacity; (c) a certain fixed distance between contact clips, depending upon voltage and amperage capacity; (d) a certain minimum fixed diameter of contact clips depending upon amperage capacity; and (e) a mounting base of fixed minimum resistance. All of which applies equally (with slight change in wording, with respect to contacts) to cartridge fuses having knife blade contacts."

(D) T. VanVaulkenburg answers thus: "Underwriters' rules are based upon the National Electrical Code in matters such as this. I quote therefrom, all measurements of course being minimum. The quotation covers both ferrule and knife blade type of cartridge fuse, 220 volts, 60 amperes capacity:

"Length over terminals three inches. Distances between contact clips one and three-quarter inches. Width of contact clips five-eighth inch. Diameter of ferrules or thickness of terminal blades outside of tube, thirteen sixteenth inch. Minimum length of ferrules or terminal blades outside of tube, five-eight inch. Diameter of tube, three-quarter inch. Width of terminal blades, five-eighth inch."

WILLIAM GAXTON, player, and MRS. GAXTON, reached New York Thursday from Europe.

HENRI LETONDAL, director of Compagnie France-Film and art director of the Stella theatre, Montreal, arrived Wednesday in New York.

Two Sentenced on Bomb Charge

Roy Shepherd and Harry Armstrong, Anderson, Ind., were each fined $150 and costs and sentenced to the Indiana State Farm for 45 days by City Judge Bert A. Fagan of Fort Wayne, for placing a stench bomb in the Creighton theatre, Fort Wayne, on July 20. Tony Nelleson, who owns the theatre, and Mrs. Nelleson, were the chief witnesses against the two.

Spaeth at Radio City

Dr. Sigmund Spaeth, the "tune detective" of the stage and radio has joined the Radio City Theatres as a member of the music staff, on appointment by S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel. Dr. Spaeth will be a feature of the stage show at the Music Hall during the week of August 10.

Cowan Bain Dead

Cowan Bain, 43, manager of the Charlotte, N. C., exchange for Universal, died last week after an illness of 10 days. Mr. Bain had been connected with the company since 1925, having started as a student salesman. James Hobb has been named by James R. Grainger, general sales manager, to succeed Mr. Bain.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Valentine, Neb.

Dear Herald:

If you want to see a sight for sore eyes you should see our corn. Eastern Nebraska will harvest the biggest corn crop in her history, and she has some history. Last night eastern Nebraska got a two inch rain which cinched the crop and everybody is happy, and now if they will come on with some more pictures like "Gold Diggers of 1933" it will make this depression look like nobody's business.

But speaking of "Gold Diggers," it drew the largest business at the Moon theatre in Neligh that that theatre has enjoyed since we delivered the High School baccalaureate, which was so far back that the public has forgotten it and in fact it was so far back that we doubt that we ever delivered it.

When they put Ned Sparks, Warren William, Joan Blondell, Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers, Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon, and Ruby Keeler all in one picture, you can expect something out of the ordinary.

What we'd like to know is, where has that Aline MacMahon been keeping herself all these years that we haven't seen more of her. There's a gal that they haven't been using in pictures as much as they should. We'll bet that she's the life of the party on all occasions. The way she twanged Guy Kibbee's heartstrings would have put ours right in tune the first twang, but whoever told Ruby Keeler if anyone ever did that she's an actress must have been thinking of someone else. "Gold Diggers" is clean and will get the money and send 'em away satisfied, and that's enough for any picture.

AN OPEN LETTER TO ALLEN JENKINS:

Dear Allen: Just because everybody in the country is crazy about you as a screen character actor is no reason why you should get chesty and high hatted and deny being in any way related to us. You know our ancestors came from Wales, and just see what a fix that left Wales in, and when they got over here just think what that did for this country. Jevver think of that? You ought to get acquainted with us Allen. We are not a bad fella. We came from a good family the most of whom were well acquainted with the Warden—and we were rated quite an actor ourself once when we played the "heavy" in a home talent play, and boy, you can take it from us, it was some heavy.

You know, Allen, that us Jenkins folks have got to hang together, those of us who don't hang separately, and the public must be taught to respect us. We are glad to note that the scandalmongers have never made your acquaintance and that Reno is not on your railroad guide, and we'll betcha that your wife —if you have one—sticks to you like a porous plaster, ours does, and sometimes we think she sticks too close, she don't give us enough leeway. Don't you find it that way? If you should ever be short an Uncle or a Grandfather just call on us, but let's not examine our family tree too closely, there might be cocoanuts and monkeys on it. Hurry up and get in another picture, we want to see you.

We note that the music writers are getting all hot and bothered because they claim that the radio and talking pictures are interfering with their "art." Oh, yeah? We have always contended that it was a mistake to spoil a good section hand to make a jazz artist.

And now this NRA comes along and says we can't work only 8 hours a day. Doggone it, but we'll fool 'em, we'll work nights.

Mrs. Georgia Racely who operates the Royal theatre at O'Neill, Nebraska, has a bulldog she is trying to train to go out on the street on show nights and drive 'em in. So far he has only brought in one pair of pants, one step-in and two alley cats. But Georgia isn't discouraged, she says he's a likely pup and has great promise.

There is this about Georgia's show, when she does get 'em in she gives 'em their money's worth and they go out happy. That's why she and the Royal are so popular with the O'Neill folks.

Art Miller of the Lyric at Atkinson has recently been appointed postmaster of that thriving metropolis. Art says that for years the town has needed a good, live Democrat to fill that position. We told him we couldn't see any other good reason why a man should be a Democrat. Then we dodged the inkbottle and paper weight. Art is quite handy at throwing things. If he makes as good a postmaster as he has a theatremanager we can see no good reason why Atkinson folks should not be satisfied and willing to stay in the Union with the rest of us.

A. F. Botsford of the Royal theatre at Ainsworth said he had been working his head off trying to keep his house open and make both ends meet and he couldn't figure out what the trouble was. We told him it was a very simple matter, that he had been struggling along for a year and a half without the aid and assistance of the HERALD and that it couldn't be done, that with the aid of the HERALD he could make one end meat and the other end bread while the producers were getting the pie and ice cream. A. F. said he believed we were right about it, then he reached for his check book. Now everything is all O.K.

Harold Dunn who operates the Jewell theatre here in Valentine, was up in the booth operating the machines when we called last night. He didn't have a damthing on above the waistline except a good, healthy sweat. We told Mrs. Dunn that we were going out and buy him a shirt and she said she wished we would, that she had started to do that once and the children started crying for milk and she didn't have the heart to spend the money for a shirt.

They are going to dinner with us tonight and if Harold don't have a shirt on he'll have to drink water instead of 3.2, we'll insist on that. The Romaine stock company is playing a week's engagement here under canvas, and that will be tough on Harold, but he says he's used to it. He has become so accustomed to competition that an earthquake would be a welcome relief.

And then there is something else we want to talk about. We'd like to be president of the United States just long enough to declare martial law in every big city in the land. We'd order the standing army and marines to police the cities and patrol the highways and bring in every kidnaper and bank robber dead or alive, preferably dead.

We'd give the army and marines something to do besides coming out once a day on dress parade and playing poker and shooting craps the balance of the time.

Why don't kidnappers and bank robbers start operating over in Canada? The reason is very plain. There's a law over there that Canadians obey and respect, and their law enforcement officers enforce the law. That's the answer. Over here money talks. In Canada it is silent. Why not keep our money a little more silent? Think it over. Some time when we get real warmed up we are going to write something hot on this subject, and it may not sound well, so don't read it if you don't want to.

What the Picture Did for Me

1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

BELOW THE SEA: Ralph Bellamy, Fay Wray—A very good picture of the sea. All were pleased and satisfied that we got it, but the business on the picture was just too bad. One of our biggest Sunday flops in weeks, but no fault of the picture. We just could not get them in with lots of extra good added attractions.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

CALIFORNIA TRAIL: Buck Jones—A mighty good western. Buck always gets his man and the gal. This story was better than most of the westerns, and well acted. Good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

CHILD OF MANHATTAN: Nancy Carroll, John Boles—Another good one from Columbia. New York critics may rave over certain pictures, but give me this type. They have the unqualified approval of my patrons, and so are real business builders. While some others are lauded to the skies, like said skies, they are over their head. And goodness knows, I have too much overhead as it is. Columbia has the goods and delivers them reasonable. They are out to win, but don't forget that you are, too. Played July 6.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

CIRCUS QUEEN MURDER, THE: Adolphe Menjou, Greta Nissen, Donald Cook—A good drawing picture, and seemed to please everyone. No complaints. This picture has plenty of music, plenty of thrills, and believe me, that is exactly what people want. Played July 21-22.—Jack Saunders, Palace Theatre, Waverly, Tenn. Small town patronage.

COCKTAIL HOUR: Bebe Daniels—Played this right behind New Orleans. No barriers, not stop or deadlines. That's what I like about Columbia. Just name your date, if it's open you get it. Very entertaining little picture. Made a little money without losing a friend. What more can any picture do? Played July 16-17.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

DEVIL COMMANDS, THE: Neil Hamilton—A very good program picture. Story interesting. Well acted, but did not draw.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

END OF THE TRAIL: Tim McCoy—Satisfactory western. Poor attendance because all highways leading into town were under water. Played July 29.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

NIGHT MAYOR, THE: Lee Tracy—A fine comedy picture. This guy has it all right. Puts more pep into a picture than any other ten men on the screen. He makes the poor stories good entertainment.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

OBEY THE LAW: Leo Carrillo, Lois Wilson—Average draw for Saturday, and it pleased. I still say that I have not run a poor Columbia picture this year. Played July 22.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

SOLDIERS OF THE STORM: Anita Page, Regis Toomey—Dandy program for Saturday or action nights. Splendid photography and recording. Played July 13-14.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

SO THIS IS AFRICA: Wheeler and Woolsey—The best business that we have had in weeks. While we did not pack 'em in, and could have seated many more, we did do a very satisfactory business. Picture has lots of wisecracks filled with smut. They seemed to enjoy it, so give us more like them. We might get some business again. Played July 15-16.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

SO THIS IS AFRICA: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey—A little risque but not risky for the exhibitor. Some say it was vulgar, but then you know some think it vulgar to laugh. Even Shakespeare said, "The loud laugh, that denotes the vacant mind." Well, there must have been several vacant minds present, including my own. Never mind. There was little vacancy in the seats, nor yet in box office receipts. Played July 6.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

STATE TROOPER: Regis Toomey—A good action picture. Fair business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

STATE TROOPER: Regis Toomey, Evalyn Knapp—Again I must hand it to Columbia. A picture that would hardly qualify in the minds of Broadway critics as worthy of even adverse criticism, but one that pleased mightily our little town audience. If only some of the Big City critics would hike out to some little town and carefully note the reaction of motion picture audiences there, they might lose a little of their colossal conceit. What clicks on Broadway often cracks up in the sticks. Played July 12.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

WHAT PRICE INNOCENCE?: Jean Parker—As a sex picture, this is about the best of its kind so far released. Personally do not believe the average picture fan goes very strong for pictures of this type. Put on the biggest advertising campaign that we have done in years and with the extreme hot weather for competition we did an average business. Under normal conditions this might have been a good drawing card. The recording on this film was the poorest sound that we have had in weeks. Voices were impossible to understand at times. Jean Parker is a very attractive little actress. Picture might have had a little more drawing power if the star had been known. Played July 30, 1933.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

WHEN STRANGERS MARRY: Jack Holt—A good program picture. Drew well. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 16-17-18.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

WHITE EAGLE: Buck Jones—Business way off on this one. A very good action picture that had to be shown to just a few. Played July 19-20.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

WOMAN I STOLE, THE: Jack Holt, Fay Wray—This drew exceptionally well, and pleased. If Holt is popular in your location, this should do good business for you. Played July 20-21.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

First National

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess—This is most decidedly in the big league class of pictures of this type. It would be hard to pack in more thrills into one picture, thrills that get away from the ordinary type of air picture. The unusual ending in this will have the customers talking about it. I wish they had left out the bedroom scene. But no doubt the producers feel they must have a strong sex-kick, but this did not need the scene I refer to. The same could have been indicated by a kissing scene instead of the bedroom scene. This drew a little above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess—Ran this picture on my poorest day, and packed them in. Real entertainment for the whole family. Tom Brown and Sally Eilers are exceptionally good. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 19.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

FRISCO JENNY: Ruth Chatterton—Good show of the sob type. Wonderful acting by every member of the cast. Business fair.—Robert K. Yancey, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

MIND READER, THE: Warren William—A mighty good, entertaining picture. Gave good satisfaction to the few we got in to see it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

THEY CALL IT SIN: Loretta Young, George Brent—Just the type of picture for a small town theatre. In fact, would not be amiss in any theatre in any town or city. But why will producers make such an entertaining little picture and then handicap it with a title that is not at all appropriate? Can it be this bait must be attached to the hook when fishing for patronage? A clean little picture with hardly a trace of villainy and less sin. Young, Brent, Una Merkel and David Manners, the four leaders, can make any picture good if some bone-headed director does not misdirect them. Suffice it to say we got 100% approval, and a lot of so-called specials fail to do just that. And let me state right here: First National gives you a living chance and will furnish you trailers at a nominal price and you can use as many or few as you like. Played July 9-10.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

TIGER SHARK: Edward G. Robinson—Extra good picture to better than average business. The best Robinson picture I have seen. Had lots of compliments from patrons. This is an old one, but still gets money at the box office. Would rather play old pictures and pick them, than play them right out of the can, and play them like some I have coming up, and some I have just played.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: Joe E. Brown—Up to the usual standard of Brown's pictures. Drew well. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 10-11.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: Joe E. Brown—A very good comedy, but bucking free shows competition in neighboring towns and hot weather, it didn't do the business I expected.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: Joe E. Brown—Good Brown comedy that pleased the Brown fans. Business above average. Believe this is the best Joe E. Brown to date.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

Fox

ADORABLE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Garat—Splendid picture, but all highways were covered with water, so the box office suffered. Played July 30-31.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

BONDAGE: Dorothy Jordan—I get mad every time I think about this picture. I should think producers would be ashamed to take money for such as this. It did not draw and I did not care because after the showing I was so humiliated at having offered this as entertainment that I stayed in the projection booth while the patrons left the theatre. I promise that if they will forgive me I will never run another picture like this. It has no entertainment value whatsoever; it humiliates the young people and it makes the older ones resentful. The ones who see it will leave the theatre so depressed that you won't see them again soon. I hate to send in a report like this, but I feel it my duty to be frank about such matters. By all means screen this before you run it. You'll be glad you did. Played July 25-26.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

BROADWAY BAD: Joan Blondell, Ricardo Cortez—Not so bad, just ordinary, with business fair. Too short for a feature, takes too many shorts to bring it up to time. Running time, 58 minutes. Played June 21-22.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers, Ben Lyon—I believe some of the adverse criticism levelled at Fox's this year's product to be without just cause. So far, those I have played have compared favorably with the product put out by other companies. Fox occasionally produces a lemon, but I have played other productions that left an acid taste in the mouth. "Hat Check Girl" was O. K. here. Played July 18.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

I LOVED YOU WEDNESDAY: Warner Baxter, Elissa Landi—Fair drama of the lighter type with Baxter and Miss Landi doing fine work. Did not draw. This is the picture Fox released in place of a Gaynor-Farrell. Poor recording in spots—or possibly it was the one set of old discs supplied by the exchange. Fox the worst offenders in this respect. Played July 30-31.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

INFERNAL MACHINE: Genevieve Tobin, Chester Morris—This does not please, and has no drawing power. This one and "Pleasure Cruise" certainly make things bad for Tobin. Dialogue in this is hard to understand. (RCA sound good other nights.)—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

IT'S GREAT TO BE ALIVE: Edna May Oliver, Raul Roulien—Fair. Story ridiculous, but entertaining. Roulien's singing not timed, which was very noticeable. Roulien not liked. Pleased about 50%. Business normal. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 20-21-22.—W. A. Collins, Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

LIFE IN THE RAW: George O'Brien—When westerns go, this will go over big. Played July 15.— D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MAN WHO DARED, THE: Preston Foster, Zita Johann—This is the life of Anton Cermak, opening with his arrival in America as an infant in arms and ends after being killed while talking to President Roosevelt. Well produced, and if your patrons know who it represents, it will be more fully appreciated. Other than this not much entertainment. No appeal to ladies. Played July 18-19.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy, Joan Bennett —A satisfactory program offering that did fair business. Good for any type of audience. Fast in action and holds interest all the way. Running time, 79 minutes. Played Apr. 19-20.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE: George O'Brien—Even in spite of the hot weather this picture drew more than the average mid-week. Picture old and film in poor condition. Just the same it drew them in. We should be satisfied. Played July 26-27.— M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien — George O'Brien always gives satisfactory entertainment. These Fox Westerns have so many very beautiful scenes of the great outdoors. Producers should screen more of the natural beauty of our country. Beauty will carry a thin story a long way to success. Entertainment and business satisfactory. Running time, 63 minutes. Played June 23-24.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

SAILORS' LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Big entertainment for your young folks. We played a Bosko comedy with this one, and everybody was pleased. Running time, 80 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

SECOND HAND WIFE: Ralph Bellamy, Sally Eilers—Good programmer. Business fair. Played July 19-20.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

SHERLOCK HOLMES: Clive Brook—A very interesting mystery picture, but there was too much shooting in it. Producers should cut down on the noise and shooting. The use of soft and pleasing music would be an addition to many pictures that are made nowadays. Business was fair. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Apr. 21-22.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

STATE FAIR: All star cast—This is the perfect picture. It pleased everyone, and did more business than I have seen in three years. I printed and distributed fifteen hundred tack cards and sixteen hundred handbills on this, and the picture repaid me for my labor. I sold it especially to the farmers, had some in the theatre that I have never seen there before, and some of them have been coming since. More comments on this than on any picture I have ever run before, and all complimentary. The objectionable bedroom scene which many exhibitors have criticized was cut out before I got the print, which saved me the trouble of censoring.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

WARRIOR'S HUSBAND: Elissa Landi—This is a good comedy, but it pleased only about 40%. The draw was average. It cost lots of money to make this, but it is useless to try to put costume pictures over. No more like this. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 18-19.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

YOUNG AMERICA: Spencer Tracy, Doris Kenyon —Played this on double bill with "Speed Madness," and it made a good Saturday show. Very good picture. Played July 22.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Invincible

SHADOW LAUGHS: Hal Skelly, Rose Hobart—Well, this picture I will have to report as just a picture. Some of the acting was good and some very much overacted. The patrons said the plot was too deep for them to appreciate, and there you are.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Mercury

ON YOUR GUARD: Richard Talmadge—A cheaply made picture, and my patrons didn't hesitate to tell me so.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SPEED MADNESS: Richard Talmadge—Excellent. A good Saturday show. This man Talmadge is a great stunt man, and had a good story to work on this time. Played on double bill with "Young America." Played July 22.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MGM

BARBARIAN, THE: Ramon Novarro—Didn't gross film rental.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

BARBARIAN, THE: Ramon Novarro—Good picture and drew well, but the recording was terrible. Pleased all the women, and some of them raved about it. Played July 14-15.—Jack Saunders, Palace Theatre, Waverly, Tenn. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S BROTHER, THE: Laurel and Hardy—These supposed comics are a bore to me and should certainly stay in the 2-reeler class. To watch them for 90 minutes is, to me, the ultimate in torture. Dennis King and Thelma Todd are also in the picture, which redeems it somewhat. Booked it Monday and Tuesday to only fair business. Better play it Saturday.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

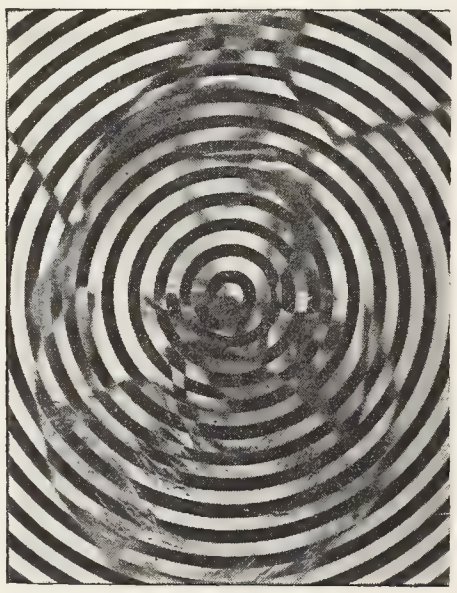
FAST WORKERS: John Gilbert—An extremely mediocre film that is nevertheless about the most entertaining picture John Gilbert has made since talkies came in. It was nice to see Mae Clarke back again, and her performance in this is the high spot of the film. We don't like Robert Armstrong here. The picture will not do business. Like so many others, I just cannot imagine what happened to the John Gilbert who was so splendid in "The Big Parade" and other silent pictures.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston—Well, if I was the President of this good old U. S. A. I would O.K. this great picture, and I do wish every theatre under the shining sun would date this picture. It will give them a brighter hope for tomorrow. This picture tells the story so plainly that you will know it is real. Huston told the story great. Running time, 88 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

HELL BELOW: Robert Montgomery, Madge Evans—A fine picture, splendidly produced and cast, that will certainly please your patrons. The film has some extremely thrilling shots, and although the ending may not please everybody, the audience on the whole will be well satisfied. The box-office cast, including Montgomery, Evans, Walter Huston and "Schnozzle" Durante, should come in for a big play. Give the picture all it's worth.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

HELL BELOW: Robert Montgomery—This is marvelous production. It drew extra business and pleased 90%. It is a great satisfaction to run a picture like this. Running time, 105 minutes. Played July 23-24.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

How can they show an invisible Man?... Well, do they? ... Wait and see—



THE INVISIBLE MAN

LOOKING FORWARD: Lionel Barrymore, Benita Hume, Lewis Stone—Any production with Stone and Barrymore should be good, but this is all cluttered up with pig latin or is it cockney English? Whatever it was, you couldn't understand it, and the whole thing was talk and no action. Why don't producers make pictures for England and see them over there and give us American stuff?—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

MADE ON BROADWAY: Robert Montgomery, Sally Eilers—This one pleased on a Wednesday and Thursday, and with a stage show drew well. For a while the popularity of Bob Montgomery was on the wane—but can it be he's coming back? I hope so.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

MIDNIGHT LADY: Loretta Young, Ricardo Cortez, Franchot Tone—Another cluck from M-G-M. Would not have run it had I known what it was. Miss Young deserves better stories than this. Drew fairly well account of the players, but they were disappointed. Lots of drinking scenes. Played July 25-26.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

NUISANCE, THE: Lee Tracy, Madge Evans—Do you like Lee Tracy? If you do, you'll call this picture a dandy, but if you, like me, are one of those who get pretty damned tired of his continuous and monotonous hollering and gesticulating, then dodge this show! As far as your patrons are concerned, however, only those who like him will come, and the picture itself is good enough for a Saturday date. From a general standpoint I believe Tracy is a fairly good box-office star, but boy, how he gets on my nerves!—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

PEG O' MY HEART: Marion Davies, Onslow Stevens—Played to the biggest crowds I have had on any MGM picture this year. Yes, and we played "Today We Live," "Rasputin and the Empress" and other specials. Believe me, what the small town needs is more pictures of this type. Give me pictures of rural line with characters in rags, plenty of music and plenty of excitement. The devil with these crying foreign pictures. People want something real, something they can understand and something that's amusing. Why don't these producers get wise.—Jack Saunders, Palace Theatre, Waverly, Tenn. Small town patronage.

PEG O' MY HEART: Marion Davies—Splendid picture. It drew better than average and pleased well. The role of Peg suits Marion perfectly. Photography was rather indistinct and dark. Otherwise I would rate it with the best. Played July 16-17.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

PEG O' MY HEART: Marion Davies—Our box-office said this was the best picture Marion Davies had made in a long, long time, and our patrons were of much the same opinion. Played it July 4, to unusually good biz. Personally I couldn't go for it, but my own opinion doesn't matter when the audience was so well pleased. I know the critics went for it too, but I guess the star killed the picture for me.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

WHEN LADIES MEET: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery—It is a talking picture along the same lines of all pictures that start talking and end talking. Just a picture that won't draw the second night. Running time, 85 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

WHEN LADIES MEET: Robert Montgomery, Ann Harding, Myrna Loy, Alice Brady, Frank Morgan—At last MGM have given us an honest to goodness picture chock full of entertainment. If you don't call this good entertainment, then I guess I don't know a good one when I see it. Step on it. Excellent cast that delivers. Good story. Smart and good settings. A perfect picture, had Luis Alberni been left out. He is N.G. Played July 16-17.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WHEN LADIES MEET: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery—The classiest picture out this summer. Clever, witty, smart—a film that is delightful. The cast is perfect, and Alice Brady comes back to the screen in a performance that is positively swell. The heat killed it here, but it should be big box-office in the right weather. Robert Montgomery is excellent in a grand role, and Ann Harding (although late in entering the picture) gives a fine account of herself. I happen to have seen Miss Harding's latest film, "Double Harness," an RKO-Radio picture in which she co-stars with William Powell, and although I have not yet played the picture, I think all exhibitors should be told of what a splendid film it is, instead of just letting it be the surprise hit which it is eventually sure to be. It is so fine, so satisfying, so invigorating from a standpoint of box-office anticipation, that I hasten to urge all real showmen to give it their best dates and publicize it big. The entire cast is so grand, the production so perfect and the possibilities at the box-office so stimulating that "Double Harness" deserves advance recognition in every town throughout the land.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

WHISTLING IN THE DARK: Ernest Truex, Una Merkel—Above average Metro for this year. Don't know how the draw was as I featured Phil Harris in "So This Is Harris," which I am sure drew me the crowd. Stars don't mean a thing, so doubt if it will mean anything at the box office by itself. —Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

Paramount

A BEDTIME STORY: Maurice Chevalier—Hurrah for Chevalier! Or shall I give this hurrah for Baby LeRoy. Or should the praises for the success of this go to the author of this, or perhaps to the director for the skillful direction. There is enough for all concerned. Anyone falling down on the job could have made a mess of it. So when all is said and done, the hurrah should go to everyone who took part in making this the fine piece of entertainment that it is. A very hot Sunday hurt business. A cool Monday was much better.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

A BEDTIME STORY: Maurice Chevalier—First of Chevalier's pictures we have run. The people seemed to like him. Music splendid. Running time, 86 minutes. Played July 19-20.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

BIG BROADCAST, THE: Bing Crosby, Stuart Erwin—This is certainly an old one, but I doubt if there ever was a better one or one that will please as many people. Got people I never saw before, and people who hadn't been to the show in over a year. Makes you glad you're in the business to have 'em like this. If you haven't run it, by all means do so. —Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

COLLEGE HUMOR: Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie—A-1. The kind of picture you have been yelling for. A highly entertaining musical comedy that you'll enjoy, whether you're troubled with ingrown culture or gout. One of Paramount's best drawing cards here. Played July 23-24.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

COLLEGE HUMOR: Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie, Richard Arlen—Here is a picture that's a cleanup. Did tremendous business all five nights. Young people especially liked it. Many of them came back to see it twice. Very entertaining. It has pathos, humor, wonderful singing by Crosby and excellent recording. Wonderful word-of-mouth advertising. Good Sunday picture. Grossed almost as much as "State Fair." Running time, 81 minutes. Played July 23-24-25-26-27.—W. A. Collins, Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

FAREWELL TO ARMS, A: Gary Cooper, Helen Hayes—Just another picture, but one which registered more complaints than usual. Drew no good in small towns.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

GIRL IN 419: James Dunn, Gloria Stuart—A very ordinary picture that pleased almost 100%. James Dunn is getting to look so common, but Gloria Stuart adds beauty with every picture. Played this Sunday, and with a stage show, the day was extra big.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

GIRL IN 419: James Dunn—Very good. Satisfied all. Entertaining throughout. Can be played any night. Business normal. Running time, 64 minutes. Played July 16-17-18-19.—W. A. Collins, Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

HE LEARNED ABOUT WOMEN: Stuart Erwin—No good for small towns. Too much talk, too slow. Whenever you make a dub out of the hero you have ruined the picture for everyone but the critics. This picture did not please our patrons. Business off for Friday and Saturday. Too much talk puts this one on the suicide list. Running time, 68 minutes. Played June 30-July 1.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

HELLO, EVERYBODY: Kate Smith—A dandy picture for small towns. First part better than the last. Too much radio stuff in the last half of picture and not enough action. Did nice business and pleased all. Running time, 69 minutes. Played June 26-27.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

HELLO, EVERYBODY: Kate Smith—Kate was the whole show, and we're not alluding to her size, either. She dominated the picture and it was well dominated. Our people (including the writer) just love Kate. This little picture was entirely free from even a suggestion of vulgarity, and I suspect Kate acted a part that did not require any acting at all but was just Kate as is. As big as she is, we'd like to see more of her, artistically speaking, of course. Running time, 80 minutes. Played July 27.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

HER BODYGUARD: Wynne Gibson, Edmund Lowe—Swell little picture. It's peppy and good for any night.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Randolph Scott—A fair Western that did good business. The new leading man was a drawback, not because of his work but because he was a "stranger" to our patrons. The average movie-goer likes to see players he knows. There are too many new faces and names on the screens today—people are more interested in ones they know. Running time, 58 minutes. Played June 9-10. —R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Randolph Scott, Sally Blane—Westerns are still good in this town, and this one was no exception. While nothing outstanding, it is good and brought all the kids and quite a few mamas and papas with them.—A. L.

NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL

ROSE PELSWICK CHEERS

May Robson, Aged Actress, Steals Show in Great Film And Soars to Stardom

By ROSE PELSWICK.

Disguised as a round-the-world flier arriving with a message for Damon Runyon, this column slipped past an assortment of guards, sentinels and watchdogs yesterday afternoon and got itself an advance look at "Lady for a Day," Columbia Pictures' filmization of the famous Runyon's equally famous Cosmopolitan Magazine story, "Madame La Gimp."

Rose Pelswick.

And what a picture this one turned out to be! Make a note of the title and when "Lady for a Day" opens (sometime in the next month or so) at your favorite theatre, drop whatever you're doing and rush over to see it. For here's a piece of entertainment that packs every kind of a movie punch there is. You'll laugh and you'll cry. You'll sit in the audience with your eyes glued to the screen and beg for more. You'll enjoy yourself so thoroughly that you'll want to dash out and tell everybody else in the block not to miss it. If I've made myself clear the picture is simply swell.

Runyon, who needs no introduction, rates raves for thinking up one of the most appealing story ideas of this or any other season. His yarn about a sodden old apple woman who has to impersonate a grande dame is rich in human interest, heart-warming in its sentiment and hilariously vivid and flavorous in its fast-moving comedy. To Director Frank Capra and Scenarist Bob Riskin go laurels for turning the brilliant yarn into a brilliant picture, and Columbia, who filmed it, is assured of one of the year's smash hits.

She Steals Show

What's more, "Lady For a Day" introduces a new screen star—May Robson. Hollywood, always crying for youth, has learned that dimples and long eyelashes aren't everything. Box-office records of pictures starring Marie Dressler, George Arliss, Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore, Alison Skipworth and other veterans, have proved that. And now add to that distinguished list May Robson, a Broadway stage luminary for decades when the Frohmans dominated the theatre world. Miss Robson recently celebrated her fiftieth anniversary in the theatre—and after the heart-tugging performance she gives in this production, is set for a long and successful career on the screen.

So now Miss Robson is the star. And her supporting cast is something to cable about, too. There's Warren William, as a big-time Broadway gambler. Glenda Farrell, as Missouri Martin, a dizzy night club hostess. Guy Kibbee, as a pompous penny-ante plunger. Also Ned Sparks, of the dry voice and the quizzical eyebrows; that superb actor, Walter Connolly; Jean Parker, the 17-year-old film "find," and a number of others—all written with the colorful and tangy understanding that is Runyon's. You have a treat in store for you.

Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Bros.—Just fair. Not as good as "Animal Crackers" if the box office is to be the judge. Wish they would let Chico and Harpo give more than one selection. Business low. Running time, 72 minutes. Played June 5-6.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll—Fair program picture. Did not draw them in. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 12-13.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: George Raft, Richard Bennett—Personally thought this good. It has entertainment for any taste. Failed to do any business for me.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: W. C. Fields, Peggy Hopkins Joyce, Stuart Erwin, Burns and Allen—This is a great mixture, and while there is not much story, it was entertaining, and went over with our patrons pretty well. Fields is too vulgar to build here. Gracie Allen is gaining in favor. Girls in cellophane was a good number. Baby Marie was excellent. Played July 23-24.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: All-star musical—Grand and swell! Great entertainment, and a cast that is sure-fire at the B. O. We played it Friday and Saturday in hot weather to well-nigh capacity business, and were the patrons pleased! This one has nice music, and a grand line-up of entertainers. Peggy Hopkins Joyce is not at all hard to look at, and W. C. Fields is positively killing. As a team they are a knockout, but not so much so as when Fields is with Alison Skipworth. The radio stars were well received, especially Baby Rose Marie. You just must play this picture. It's a honey.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: All star—Excellent comedy. Will entertain the children and adults alike. Built for laughing purposes and fills the bill. A good drawing card. Played July 4-5.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Frances Dee, Buster Crabbe—Very satisfactory in every respect. Business slightly below normal. Played July 26-27.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald—A good picture, entertaining and pleasing to our patrons. Should do well almost anywhere, for it has beauty, music and comedy. The story is romantic. Business good. Running time, 92 minutes. Played June 12-13.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

LUXURY LINER: Frank Morgan, George Brent, Zita Johann—Fair picture, and one that is different. Failed to click at box office, however.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—Good. Seemed to be just what most people are looking for. Advertised "not recommended for children," and this caused lots of excitement. Did a little better than average business.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

SIGN OF THE CROSS: Fredric March, Elissa Landi, Claudette Colbert—A wonderful production from an artist's standpoint. Walkouts during gruesome scenes. Drew slightly above average.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

STORY OF TEMPLE DRAKE: Miriam Hopkins, Jack LaRue—A story too daring for motion picture audience consumption has been brought to the screen, where it never belonged. A picture so fraught with sex as this becomes morbid. Mind, this show does not merely suggest sex, but paints it in big red letters across the screen from start to finish. By the end, our cooling system was exhausted.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

SUNSET PASS: Randolph Scott, Tom Keene—Poorest western we have run in a long time. Party that read the book recently said the only thing in the picture that was in the book was the herd of cattle. Wonder why Zane Grey allows his stories to be butchered up this way. Played July 22.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SUNSET PASS: Kathleen Burke, Tom Keene, Harry Carey—Very good out-of-door picture. Played July 21-22.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S.D. Small town patronage.

TONIGHT IS OURS: Claudette Colbert, Fredric March—Two good stars doing good work in a darn good picture that pleased 100%.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

RKO

AGE OF CONSENT: Special juvenile cast—Another high school kid story with one very pathetic death bed scene. It couldn't compete with hot weather.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ANIMAL KINGDOM: Ann Harding, Leslie Howard—An immoral and vulgar stage play that should not have been put on the screen. When will the producers learn that photographed stage plays are not motion pictures. Too much talk—too much sex and not enough business. Played May 15-16.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

CHRISTOPHER STRONG: Katharine Hepburn, Colin Clive, Billie Burke—This is certainly a fine picture, and well acted. An awful box office flop here. This is not the type of entertainment they want in towns of this size, and you have got to give them what they want nowadays or they just won't come to your show, and most of them know more about pictures than us exhibitors can find out. Played July 23-24.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

CONQUERORS, THE: Ann Harding, Richard Dix—This picture pleased our patrons and did for us a nice business. A type of entertainment that should do well in any theatre. Running time, 86 minutes. Played Apr. 12-13.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

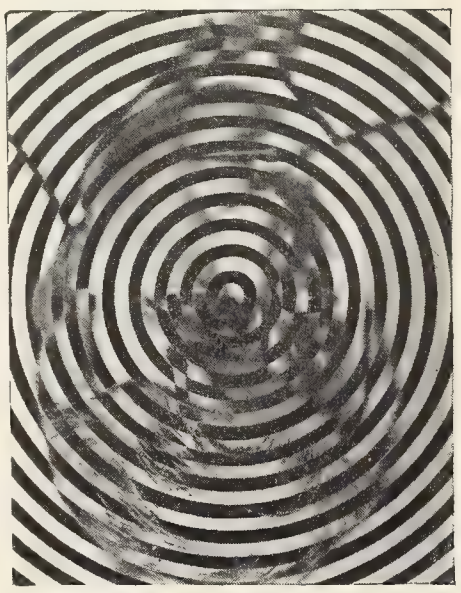
DIPLOMANIACS: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey—You will get what you are expecting in this one. Plenty of laughs, some good songs and music. Running time, 70 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

DIPLOMANIACS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Frisky, but not up to this team's par. Personally, they are my favorite comedians, but the box-office reported only fair on a Sunday and Monday.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

EMERGENCY CALL: Bill Boyd—This is a little better than average entertainment that failed to get any business. I have had so many bad prints and service and pictures from RKO that my patrons are learning to stay away from their pictures. William Gargan steals this show. He could make an exceptionally good star as he has the stuff to please the public.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

GOLDIE GETS ALONG: Lili Damita—A patron told us he had seen in some publication that this was the worst picture ever made. And as he had seen so many bad ones he wanted to see what this was like. It turned out to be an all right little picture without any "dirt" in it. As for the "critics," I say shoot 'em at sunrise, for they are almost always wrong. This did about the best Friday and Saturday business this year. Running time, 66 minutes. Played June 16-17.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

Of course it's impossible, but he's here just the same—



THE INVISIBLE MAN

GOLDIE GETS ALONG: Lili Damita—A good program picture. The star extra good in this.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: Richard Dix—Rather depressing story. Did passable business on a hot night. Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray—The best of its kind. A fantastic novelty that hold the interest throughout. It is packed with thrills, action, suspense and entertainment for all types and ages. It is also the best drawing card we found in RKO pictures. Played June 4-5-6.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green—As nice a picture as anyone could wish to see. And such a relief, no gang, no sex, no horror, just a clean, interestingly human bit of entertainment. There is something wrong with the patrons of any theatre that does not do well with this one. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Apr. 17-18.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

LUCKY DEVILS: Bill Boyd—The right kind of picture for my Saturday night crowds. The kids thought it great at Saturday matinee. Running time, 63 minutes. Played July 21-22.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre. Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

MELODY CRUISE: Charlie Ruggles—Very good.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

MELODY CRUISE: Charlie Ruggles—First rate. A musical comedy romance with a general appeal. Novel in construction and settings, good camera work and plenty of comedy with some music makes it delightful entertainment. The ice-ballet near the end is the outstanding part of the picture.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

MEN OF AMERICA: Bill Boyd, Chic Sale—Best western we have run. Made us some money. Many favorable comments. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 4-5.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

OUR BETTERS: Constance Bennett—This was just terrible. After this one I doubt if we could get anyone to come to see a Constance Bennett picture. At one time she was a sure draw. But no player is good or strong enough for these "suicide" pictures. Played May 22-23. Running time, 82 minutes.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

PAST OF MARY HOLMES, THE: Helen Mackellar—Fair picture. Hot weather, slim business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROCKABYE: Constance Bennett—Not the type for the small towns. Good picture, however. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 14-15.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

SILVER CORD, THE: Irene Dunne, Joel McCrea—Over-talkative and depressing tale of mother-in-law vs. daughter-in-law. Fine acting and clean story. Played July 23-24.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

SILVER CORD, THE: Irene Dunne—Fair picture to rotten business. Hope I can hold out to complete the contracts.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

SWEEPINGS: Lionel Barrymore—At last RKO came through with a real picture, one that pleased 100%. Running time, 80 minutes. Played July 16-17.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TOPAZE: John Barrymore—Not the type of picture for small town. Too much talk. Oh, this table talk! Why can't the directors let the camera tell the story—this makes motion pictures. The public is sick and tired of so much talk in pictures. Motion is what they want. Business low. Running time, 78 minutes. Played June 7-8.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

United Artists

CYNARA: Ronald Colman—Very hard to understand. Otherwise would have been a fair picture. No drawing power.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

SECRETS: Mary Pickford—Best Mary has ever made, and an all around good picture.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

SKY DEVILS: Spencer Tracy, Cooper, Boyd—Very old and very good, and if they are good they will keep until they come down in price so we small fellows can buy them. This was a real motion picture—fine entertainment and did good business. I only wish that some of the new ones were as good and could get the business this old one did. Running time, 87 minutes. Played May 31-June 1.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

Universal

ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen—This is a little old, but a real picture, and liked very much. First night about average business. Second night nothing. Played July 22-23.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

BIG CAGE, THE: Clyde Beatty—Bucked a circus and free show with this, and did fair business. It's a very good picture.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

COHENS AND KELLYS IN TROUBLE: George Sidney, Charlie Murray—Some seemed to enjoy this real well. Others did not care for it at all. It certainly is not anything to write home about. Business average. Sound only fair. Played July 22-23.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE ARENA: Ken Maynard—Satisfied the western fans. Business good considering the hot weather. Played July 29.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

KING OF THE ARENA: Ken Maynard—A good western that drew well on Saturday with Little Orphan Annie on the stage. Universal has given us a consistently fine group of pictures this year. Our box office (our barometer, naturally) was especially well pleased, after the shove it received from the profits on "Back Street" last fall, right on through the winter up to the amazingly profitable reissue of "King of Jazz." Besides, their line up for next season, from a standpoint of really fine books and plays, looks as sweet to us as that of any company, and we buy from them all. Universal does not announce their casts, but casts are always changed from the original announcement anyway. From the point of product purchased, however, we have great hopes of a great year from Universal. The story properties they own invite success. And like a patron sometimes says of a short subject—the Slim Summerville-Zasu Pitts series alone is worth the price of admission—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

LUCKY DOG: Chic Sale—Booked this one for two days. Ran it one, and that was one too many. Chic is all through with me with or without whiskers. Running time, 60 minutes. Played July 26.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—This is a very funny picture. This team certainly gets the laughs out of the natives. After every one around us playing it we got out of it alive on a double bill with "Night Mayor," and small admissions. All were satisfied with the show.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy—Good picture. Fair Saturday business, not that that means much nowadays.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy—Any director who can't make a good picture with Lee for his leading man is not so hot. If Lee doesn't deliver the goods it's because some fool director took the play away from him. It's my private opinion, "Private Jones" is a good picture. Played July 21.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy—Good. Don't fail to play it. It will please all ages. Played July 4.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

RUSTLERS ROUNDUP: Tom Mix—Advertised this as Tom's last, and everyone wanted to see it, so it broke all house records for a Friday and Saturday run.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainvew Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—This pleased a large Saturday night audience. Summerville especially well liked here. Played July 22.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Slim and Zasu are left a fortune jointly. Hence the title. Fair comedy-drama with a bit too much semi-suggestive stuff on honeymoon. Played July 28-29.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—A fine comedy drawer. Had many comments. This team are really good. House in uproar most of the time. We want more like it. Above average business.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

Warner

FORTY-SECOND STREET: All star—To praise this picture is but to echo verdict universally pronounced. Warners are no doubt proud of it, and we are proud to have shown it. And we had no occasion to weep at any scene in the picture, nor at the results from a financial standpoint. Warner Brothers give you a break to keep you from going broke. Played July 23-24.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

FORTY-SECOND STREET: All star musical—(Repeat run)—Any showman who doesn't bring this picture back to his theatre doesn't know what he's missing. We played it on our weakest night (Thursday) to full admission prices and packed the house. Can one ask more?—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

GIRL MISSING: Glenda Farrell, Ben Lyon—Highly entertaining, splendid recording and perfect photography. It would have drawn better without the trailer, I believe. People thought it would be another murder

THE Film DAILY

• • • A VERY modern and gorgeously entertaining hard-boiled Fairy Story for grown-ups.....that gives you a rough idea of Columbia's smash pix, "Lady for A Day".....it is so crowded with Showmanship Values that we are dizzy trying to figure out the angles to present to you.....suffice it to say at the jump-off that it is a swell mixture of Smiles and Tears.....with an Emotional Kick like seven Missouri mules .....characterizations by May Robson, Guy Kibbee, Ned Sparks and Warren William that have you fighting with yourself as you scan the opus, trying to decide which characterization is the most engaging, appealing and entertaining.....

* * * *

• • • AN AUDIENCE of metropolitan exhibs, their wives, sweethearts and daughters.....along with the fan crits and the trade fellers.....crowded the auditorium of the Waldorf-Astoria to the number of 1,000 .....and all about us the ladies were dabbing their eyes as May Robson hit her emotional and tremendously gripping human bits.....and the next moment laughing uproariously at some swell piece of business by Guy Kibbee or Ned Sparks.....and exhibs who only laugh when they put something over on their local exchange .....(shall we name them?.....why?.....you know the Type)..... laughed right out loud and were unashamed.....what if their laugh added another ten berries to the rental?.....they were in a Holiday Mood..... t'hell with the Expense.....it is that kind of A Picture.

* * * *

• • • COMPARISONS?.....they are always odious .....especially in the film biz where producers are so touchy .....but as a matter of fact there can be no comparison .... "Lady for A Day" is so INDIVIDUALISTIC that it simply defies comparison.....it is one of that rare breed that automatically enters a Class By Itself.....

.....we're tellin' you that it's a honey for downright Entertainment.....a bear for continuous sparkle, suspense and surprise punches.....a lulu for what it takes to get the femmes all fluttery and weepy with the Cinderella Stuff and the mother-love and human touches that tug right at your heart .... add to this the hard-boiled Ned Sparks humor and the polished finesse of the Guy Kibbee drolleries.....and if you can't get two dozen intestinal guffaws out of it we hope your face muscles freeze and you never crack a smile till your toes turn up.....you deserve it if you're that hopeless..... saying which, we sign off on "Lady for A Day".....with deep obeisances to Damon Runyon for the type of Story this biz sadly needs.....to Frank Capra for beautiful pace and consummate cunning in masterly direction.....to Joseph Walker for cinematographic composition that is Art Work .....and to members of the Ace Cast aforementioned who deliver about the best work of their separate distinguished careers.....

mystery. Played July 11-12.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

KEYHOLE, THE: Kay Francis, George Brent—A fair picture, but not the type for a small town. Many told us they liked it, and it is a woman's picture. Runnning time, 69 minutes. Played July 24-25.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

KING'S VACATION, THE: George Arliss—A mighty good picture. Arliss is well liked by my patrons. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 23-24.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LIFE OF JIMMY DOLAN, THE: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—Very good picture for action nights. The draw was average. They all liked it. Played July 25-26.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

LIFE OF JIMMY DOLAN, THE: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Loretta Young—Entertaining little picture that pleased everyone. Young Doug is well liked here, and this film is just made for small towns. Play it. It should pay.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

MINSTREL SHOW: Scrappy cartoon—Very good. The Scrappy cartoons are all fine. Running time, 1 reel.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

MINSTREL SHOW: Krazy Kat—An extra good cartoon. Several of the grown-ups stayed to see this one twice.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

SAFE IN JAIL: Fair. A few laughs. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

SASSY CATS: Scrappy cartoon—Excellent. People talked about this for days. Running time, 1 reel.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

WOLF AT THE DOOR: Scrappy cartoon—A very satisfactory comic. Patrons enjoyed this very much.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

Educational

HOLLYWOOD RUNAROUND: Monty Collins—Good comedy with quite a bit of action.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

MGM

DAUGHTERS OF THE SEA: Traveltalk—Not much. Metro shorts very weak this year, is the opinion of myself, and had several tell me they didn't care much for the shorts I have been showing.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

FALLEN ARCHES: Charlie Chase—Good silly comedy—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

FISH HOOKY: Our Gang—Very good.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

FISH HOOKY: Our Gang—Better than average Our Gang. Gang comedies not nearly so good as Mickey McGuire.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

FORGOTTEN BABIES: Our Gang—Splendid. I think these are the best on the market. Running time, 2 reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PREMIER: Colortone Musical Revue—Best of the series so far.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PREMIER: Colortone Musical Revue—Very good. Two reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

ICELAND: Traveltalk No. 706—Interesting, where these are liked.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

ME AND MY PAL: Laurel and Hardy—This is a very funny two-reeler. One of the best, I think, but all their comedies are good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

NOW WE'LL TELL ONE: Charlie Chase—Very funny. Laughs from start to finish, and that's what we want.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

TAXI BARONS: Taxi Boys—A good slapstick comedy.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TAXI FOR TWO: Lot of action, but the two male leads are perfectly terrible. Why a company like MGM will release junk like this is beyond me.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

TOY PARADE: Oddity—Quite entertaining, especially for the children. One reel.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

WRECKETY WRECK: Taxi Boys—Their best comedy to date. All slapstick.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP CARTOONS: These cartoons are as popular as Mickey Mouse, and that's saying something.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small patronage.

BETTY BOOP, M. D.: Betty Boop—Not so good. Has a horrible ending.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

BETTY BOOP'S KER-CHOO: Betty Boop—Old, but one of the best cartoons produced. Your patrons will eat this one up.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

BREAKING EVEN: Tow Howard—A lot of old gags with whiskers. If our patrons thought they were funny, they didn't show it. No laughs. Running time, 9 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

DADDY KNOWS BEST: Walter Catlett—One of the best Sennett comedies I have run. Running time, 21 minutes.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

POPEYE, THE SAILOR: Betty Boop No. 18—One of the best of this series. Good on any program.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

POPEYE, THE SAILOR: Betty Boop—A cartoon worthy of special mention. A knockout, and pleased old as well as young. Lots of laughs.—W. A. Collins, Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

SING BING SING: Bing Crosby—Very good two-reel comedy. Running time, 19 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

SING BING SING: Bing Crosby—Will please 100 per cent when musical shorts are liked.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SNOW WHITE: Betty Boop, Cab Calloway—One of the very best cartoons we have shown. It deserves

Whirl this in front of your eyes and look for—billing. Running time, 9 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

THE INVISIBLE MAN

WALKING THE BABY: Gracie Allen, George Burns—Not much to this one-reeler.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

RKO

BRIDE'S BEREAVEMENT: Masquers comedy—Good burlesque comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

CATFISH ROMANCE: Cartoon—Fair—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

DIVORCE COURTSHIP: Headliner act—Too much drinking. Producers are not contented with filling a feature with such rot—have to put it in what they call comedies. Two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

JITTERS, THE BUTLER: Clark and McCullough—Not quite so funny as they usually are, but passable.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S BUSY DAY: Mickey McGuire—Fair kid comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PAIN IN THE PARLOR: Harry Sweet—Should be re-titled "Pain in the Neck."—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

SHAMPOO, THE MAGICIAN: Roscoe Ates—Ates well liked here. Good comedy. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

SHAMPOO, THE MAGICIAN: About the best comedy this company has ever produced.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

SO THIS IS HARRIS: Phil Harris—Splendid. Good. Fine. Well liked and we believe that this short drew in a few extras. Running time, 30 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

SO THIS IS HARRIS: Phil Harris—A musical comedy. Fine in every respect. Pleased all. Running time, 30 minutes.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SO THIS IS HARRIS: Phil Harris, Walter Catlett—Bought this several months ago. Delayed in dating it. Comedy with music. Good for any house, anywhere. Run it. Three reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SO THIS IS HARRIS: Phil Harris, Walter Catlett—Three reels. Music, singing and dancing that will rank with the best. Walter Catlett stole the show. One of the best comedians on the screen. I featured this above the picture, and had about double usual Sunday and Monday audiences.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

Universal

MORTON DOWNEY NO. 1: Morton Downey, Vincent Lopez—I consider this one the best of the series so far. I have run half of them. Two reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

PICK ME UP: Marie Prevost—It is terrible and no foolin'.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

PICK ME UP: Marie Prevost—Marie, an old timer, looked O. K., but the comedy was slapstick with too much shouting and screaming. Running time, 19 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BOSKO CARTOONS: All good so far.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

HOW TO BREAK 90: Bobby Jones—We have played three of this series. The few who come to see them think they are great. Jones has no voice for talkies. Have not drawn here, even though we have a golf club.—A. B. Jefferies, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

NOTHING EVER HAPPENS: Broadway Brevity—This is burlesque on "Grand Hotel." It is clever, but I don't think it can compare with the other Broadway Brevities I have run. The impersonations are splendid. Running time, 2 reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

SKYSYMPHONY: Broadway Brevity—Very good. These are the best two reels made.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

SPEAKING OF OPERATIONS: All star—This one of the best two reel Brevities we have ever played, also Vitaphone's Melody Masters "How's Tricks." A great one reel subject. Vitaphone shorts makes most of the others look cheap.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre. Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TIP TAP TOE: Hal Leroy—Good dacing short.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE INDEMITY: Just a comedy, two reels. No laughs.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Serials

RKO

LAST FRONTIER: Creighton Chaney—A serial that is giving satisfaction. But it is time that we have a change in type. We have had enough of Indians and frontier days for a while. Why not something like "Crimson Flash," "Tiger's Claw," or "Queen of the North Woods?" Running time, 20 minutes.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

Universal

CLANCY OF THE MOUNTED: Tow Tyler, Jacqueline Wells—On the fourth episode. Do the kids like it? Raised our Saturday matinee from about 40 children average to 120 average. This is good for a town of 1,000 population. The grown ups like it too. Running time, about 18 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

The Latest Reports From San Salvador

In his newest reports on the motion pictures that come to his attention as manager of the Meardi-Hermanos circuit in San Salvador, El Salvador, Central America, Mr. O. Beer discusses the following productions:

RUSTLER'S ROUNDUP: Universal, with Tom Mix—A good western, they liked it. Tom Mix is always a draw. Running time, 55 minutes. Played June 3.

LAUGHTER IN HELL: Universal, with Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart—Draw not bad, but chain gang story too depressing, nobody liked that picture. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 25.

SMILIN' THROUGH: MGM, with Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—An MGM hit, fine picture, fine story, fine cast. A good draw. Running time, 100 minutes. Played May 28.

NOCHE DE DUENDES: MGM, with Laurel and Hardy—Broke every record in the 2nd gala show. All Spanish talking. Always good business with this picture. Running time, 45 minutes. Played June 4.

RED DUST: MGM, with Jean Harlow, Clark Gable, Mary Astor. A hit. Everyone liked it. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 4.

DOWNSTAIRS: MGM, with John Gilbert, Paul Lukas, Virginia Bruce—John Gilbert is always a good drawer, but this picture didn't please. I suppose it is the kind of the story, which is without any interest in Central America. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 15.

NEW MORALS FOR OLD: MGM, with Lewis Stone, Myrna Loy—No draw, just average business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 8.

BEAST OF THE CITY, THE: MGM, with Walter Huston, Jean Harlow, Wallace Ford—An outstanding hit, broke every record of the second gala show since we have had talking pictures. If MGM would make a few hundred pictures a year then world depression would be over as far as we are concerned. Running time, 90 minutes. Played June 11.

MAN IN POSSESSION, THE: MGM, Robert Montgomery, Charlotte Greenwood—Fine picture, but didn't draw. Running time, 85 minutes. Played May 21.

EL CANTAR DE MI CIUDAD: San Martin Film (Argentine), with Maria Turgenova—Synchronized. with a few good songs, but poor picture. Songs in Spanish. Running time, 70 minutes.

INGAGI: Congo Pictures (European) — Travel through Africa. Trash. Didn't show it. Running time, 80 minutes.

NAGANA: Universal, with Tala Birell, Melvyn Douglas—A good picture, a good draw, in spite that they get tired of jungle pictures. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 25.

SHORTS

SPREEWALD FOLK: Fox—Travelogue—An outstanding failure. I do not understand why Fox is making such trash. May be that this would interest in Germany. Running time, 10 minutes.

BIG GAME OF THE SEA: Fox—Travelogue. An interesting picture. Fine. Running time, 10 minutes.

RKO Midwest Sells Bonds To Refund Issue of 1930

The RKO Midwest Corporation, with headquarters in Cincinnati, has issued bonds to the amount of $3,500,000, with interest at six per cent, in order to refund the bond issue of May 1, 1930, which was limited to $4,375,000.

A blanket real estate mortgage to secure the issue has been given the First National Bank, Cincinnati, as trustee for the bondholders, which includes four Cincinnati theatres, together with office buildings, the Paramount and the leasehold on the Grand Opera House. Out of town properties are in Dayton, and Grand Rapids, Mich.

Academy Membership Grows 17 Per Cent in Half Year

The active membership of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast has increased 17 per cent within the past six months, the largest increase in any similar period in the organization's history, according to Lester Cowan, executive secretary. The art directors' section and the technicians' branch led all groups, tripling the rosters.

Following resolutions adopted by members of the Writers' Guild, in Hollywood, to separate from the Academy, 28 writers recently resigned from the major organization.

Walter Branson, RKO district manager, is back from a trip to New York, where he conferred with home office officials.

Emma Abplanalp, film board secretary, is off on her vacation. Miss Abplanalp will be gone for several weeks, spending part of her time on business at the Rochester film board offices.

Joe Abramson has resigned as manager of the Imperial theatre.

Elmer Miller is carrying his arm around in a sling. Young Miller made a wicked swing at a golf ball and broke his arm.

Jack Miller took a midnight plane to get to New York in time for a code meeting. When he reached there the meeting had been postponed and he was forced to lay over in the big burg until last Tuesday, when the conference got under way.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A CALL TO ARMS

The following anonymous communication stating a situation that unquestionably exists in hundreds of theatres in every section of the country, is reproduced in full for the benefit of our readers.

Dear Mr. Vogel:

A meeting has been called for Tuesday, August 8th, to formulate a code for the National Recovery Act. The motion picture theatre manager will not be represented at this meeting, unless someone like you, who as Chairman of the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB, does so.

At the present time, the code calls a theatre manager an executive. This title gives him the license to work 75 hours a week at a salary comparatively lower than that of any theatre employee. His salary will not be raised, nor his hours shortened, unless you, or someone else represents us at this meeting.

The average theatre manager cannot afford to jeopardize his position by appearing in public assembly to assert his rights. I believe that it should behoove you, as a former manager, and a representative of the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB, to represent us.

In fairness to myself and my position, I am omitting my name from this letter. However, should you care to communicate with me, you can do so through the columns of the ROUND TABLE.

Sincerely,

A Theatre Manager,
Member of the Round Table.

This cry in the wilderness does not fall upon deaf ears. Conscious of the obstacles to be overcome, nevertheless your chairman zealously accepts the charge and has taken upon himself the duty of exposing to the light the deplorable and humiliating conditions under which so many managers labor at the cost of health, yes, even to the cost of self respect.

On their behalf, we attended the code meeting and there brought these abuses to the sympathetic attention of Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt. He immediately requested a report to his Washington offices so that full consideration could be given to the alleviation of these managerial hardships.

So far, so good. But our efforts to gain shorter hours and better pay for the less fortunate brothers can be successful only with the cooperation of those managers who up to now have suffered in silence. To these we say:

If yours is a situation that needs assistance; if you know of a case that calls for attention, write us immediately. Communications will be held in confidence, names will not be divulged. These reports will constitute the ammunition with which we will wage the battle.

Those who are exploiting the manager must be brought to time if they themselves do not see the weaknesses of their short sighted policy. The pitiless glare of the NRA spotlight shall seek out every corner of the land and the industry where these conditions flourish.

Here is the long denied opening; here is the long awaited opportunity to shake off the iron heel of despotic greed and tyrannical indifference to the managers' welfare, the importance of whose job must not be lessened.

Managers, do you accept the challenge?

PROFITABLE COOPERATION

Managers everywhere would do well to study the article on Page 10, Aug. 5th issue of Motion Picture Herald, describing a long tested cooperation between St. Louis (Mo.) exhibitors and their local Better Films Council, reported to have resulted in a definite gross increase of the participating theatres over a two and one-half year period.

This movement, inaugurated in 1929 with the active assistance of the MPPDA, evidently has been the means of producing better business by the wholehearted teamwork of managers and leading local club women. Reviews of pictures in advance of their showings were broadcast, printed in club magazines and bulletins, posted in libraries and clubs.

It is significant to note that out of 284 features reviewed, only 12 were rated poor or not recommended. With this ratio in favor of the theatres, and with the accompanying spread of good publicity, there seems to be something in this movement for the benefit of the long suffering movie that might be utilized by managers where similar cooperation is desirable. There can be few places where it is not desirable.

Held up by many last minute entries, the judges in the Round Table-Producers' World's Fair Contest will announce the winners in the issue of Aug. 19.

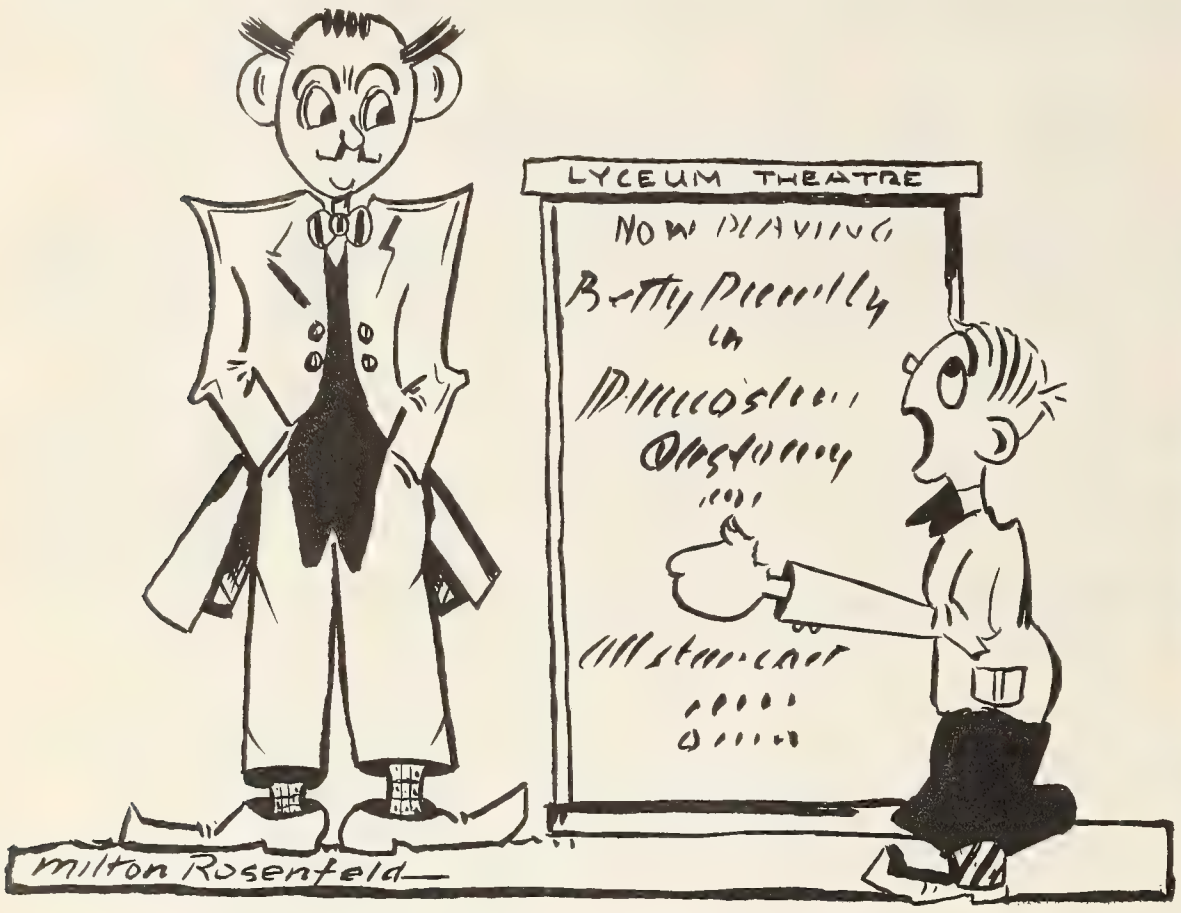
SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!



MANAGER'S SON: "What does S R O mean, Dad?"
MANAGER: "You're asking me?"

HOBBS PROVES BRITISH SHOWMANSHIP RIGHT UP TO DATE

We are pleased no end to receive membership applications from showmen outside continental America, and that of Sidney J. Hobbs, managing director, Plaza Theatre, Coventry, England, is therefore warmly welcomed. As are the exploitation photos and stories he sends along that class with many of our outstanding American campaigns.

Take a look at Syd's front on "Bitter Tea of General Yen," illustrated below. Not 'arf bad, eh, what? Especially the Chinese drop effect that covers the lobby wall. For "Tiger Shark," Hobbs put out a crowd stopper street stunt with a real shark (dead, of course) mounted on a float to resemble the ocean waves.

Window displays are also emphasized by this hustling showman, and he did some very nice work on "Igloo" by making the biggest tieup he ever put over with a leading auto leader. Syd promoted stuffed reindeer, Arctic penguins, and a waxed Eskimo figure in furs steering an Arctic sleigh, all backed with an Aurora Borealis poster. Alongside was placed a new model car to emphasize the quicker transportation.

Hobbs also got him a nice fur window on this picture, and followed up the good work by cooperating with a credit store for a "Payment Deferred" display, the main feature of which was an animated figure that tapped on the window calling attention to the theatre posters and production stills.

This exhibitor is an old-timer, having been in the business for 24 years, and has been the winner of a number of exploitation prizes. Well, again welcome, Syd; thanks for your stuff, and send some more, and dig up other membership applications from some of your wide-awake English showmen.

The British brothers have come a long way in putting over their pictures, being constantly on the alert for the latest in American exploitation to add to the stunts and selling methods originated in the "tight little else." The visits to England of American showmen and the trips to these shores of British exhibitors have resulted in an exchange of a lot of healthy box office ideas.

O.K. Harry, you have no idea how interested your brother showmen on this side of the water are in foreign activities, so send 'em along.

CALDWELL HAD MANY GOOD WINDOWS FOR NEW MUSICAL FILM

Further evidence of the selling ability of Wally Caldwell, manager of Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, was displayed in his campaign on "42nd Street."

A strip of photos we have at hand shows that Wally obtained five fine fashion windows, each displaying various styles one might see on Park Avenue, 5th Avenue,

Wally's Window Display

6th Avenue, Broadway and 7th Avenue. Note in the accompanying illustration that circular "42nd Street" cards and stills tied in the attraction at Wally's house. Center sketches of New York sky-scraping buildings were carried out in all windows.

In addition he secured a huge, corner 75-foot window in the downtown Edison Company's building; six other downtown windows for display of life-size cut-out chorus girl oil paintings; all sidewalks sniped with 8 by 20-inch arrow streamers; use of 120 Neon signs containing 11 by 14 cards in merchants' windows; use of 16 special merchants' windows with mounted 11 and 14's and stills; large banner stretched across a main street; and special posters in hotels and empty stores. Heralds were also given wide distribution. We scarcely need add that Wally got away with his usual amount of free newspaper space.

In other words, a typical Caldwell Campaign; and thanks to him for passing the information along. We'll be telling you more about his activities from time to time.

PETE EGAN IS STILL KEEN ABOUT PUZZLES; ALSO PINK HERALDS

Our old friend Pete Egan, manager of the Palace Theatre, Calgary, Canada, among other things akin to selling shows has been indulging in the fashionable pastime of jig-saw puzzles, to say nothing of distributing pretty cerise-colored heralds.

His jig-saw was a three sheet of Barbara Stanwyck and used to plug "Bitter Tea." The puzzle was placed in a merchant's window and passers-by were invited to exercise their skill and participate in awards and guest tickets.

The pink herald was used to plug "Woman Accused" and featured "The Ten Best Writing Names in America," or those who contributed to the story published first in "Liberty."

More about Pete Egan and the Palace later on. He's always on the job up in his Canadian stronghold and always has some interesting information to pass along to his fellow showmen.

Stockton Leigh, who publicizes the Mayfair, on Seventh Avenue, New York, hit a new display angle to crowd his lobby on the engagement of "Savage Gold," the South American explorer picture. As the picture concerns adventures with the head hunters of Ecuador, Leigh secured through the cooperation of the Museum of the American Indian, four shrunken human heads, blow guns, spears, poison darts, ornaments and native necklaces, and placed these in the lobby under guard, insured for $3,000.

Plaster of Paris heads, three feet high, modeled from the human originals, were suspended from the side of the theatre building on spears, and at night, powerful lights were used for illumination. The lights also helped to call attention to the Hollywood opening, with reserved seats, red carpet on the sidewalk with all other fixin's.

Bide Dudley, one of radio's better known commentators, broadcast a review of the picture immediately after the opening, and also interviewed Commander Dyott, the leader of the expedition. In advance, a group of pictures describing the life of the aborigines was placed in the mezzanine, and this helped to sell the picture.

All in all, a very effective campaign. The shrunken heads make a spectacular flash, and although a bit gruesome for some spots, will attract attention, especially where good judgment is used in lining up local natural history museum heads and educators to help in putting it over.

SCHOOLS HELP MILT PUT OVER COSTLESS LOCAL STYLE SHOW

Selling the high school principal on the idea of furnishing 25 pretty students to act as style models is the height of something or other, and that's just what Milton Field did when he promoted a fashion show at the Parker, Darby, Pa.

Milt first got the Business Men's Association and Chamber of Commerce in back of him and these bodies secured the whole hearted cooperation of every worthwhile merchant. With these sterling endorsements it wasn't the most difficult thing to swing the high schools in line.

There was no cost to the theatre, as the girls worked for the fun of it, the cooperating stores furnishing all the necessary wearing apparel. The local papers carried front-page stories, and the house was packed for the two-day showing.

Local style shows, done well, can always be depended upon to bring in extra bucks at the box office. Field's campaign was put over very wisely, as he got the help of every one in town who counted, making it possible to get off the nut. Very good, Milt, and we are now waiting for those other campaigns you promised to send along.

Ask Ad Rate Reduction

Loew theatres down in Baltimore have asked "Sunpapers" for a reduction in advertising rates through William K. Saxton, city manager, who claims that depressed business conditions make the move an imperative one if space allotment is to be kept up. Two other local newspapers are said to have agreed to a rate reduction.

JOHN SURE CLICKS WITH LOCAL FOLKS IN MANY CAMPAIGNS

When the columnist in the leading paper devotes plenty of space to the praises of a local manager and his theatre, you may rest assured that something more than friendship earns the plaudits. And this proves so in the case of John S. Trewhela, head man of the Judith, Lewistown (Mont.), whose swell guest editorial we had the privilege of running a few weeks ago.

Johnny is in the way of being an old time minstrel star, and every now and then he blacks up and gives the folks out front a treat with his song and dance. This talent is good for plenty of space, for on our desk we have four different copies of the local paper, each of which alludes to John's talents.

On "State Fair," Trewhela and his staff put on a sock campaign which was entered in his divisional prize drive. It was good enough to grab the first prize which John distributed among his house staff, being the kind of a guy he is. And that, too, was chronicled in the paper, as was a letter from a patron who went to great length to tell the folks what a nice manager Johnny is and the swell movie he runs.

Managers Look Forward to Large Evening of Conviviality and Fellowship; Air Cooled Grill Assures Great Comfort

It looks very much as though the party is going to be a highly enjoyable evening. Of course we mean that Round Tablers Midnite Get-Together, to be held at the Brass Rail, 49th Street and Seventh Avenue, New York, on this coming Thursday, Aug. 17, and if you haven't acted yet, well, the blank at the bottom of this page tells you just what to do. Quite a few of the boys have already followed instructions, so it seems the welkin will ring.

From the reservations, the various circuits as well as the independent theatres will be well represented. There will be quite a gang from the Skouras houses and we've been asked to keep a lot of space open for the Randforce boys who say that Brooklyn will be well represented.

The Warner boys from New York and New Jersey will be there, headed by Mort Blumenstock. Delegations from the Prudential and Century circuits are making plans to attend, as are groups from the local and nearby RKO and Loew theatres. And of course, many members from the independent houses will be out in force.

We've told you that Hal Horne, United Artist ad chief and well known wit, will be on hand to turn on the laffs, and, incidentally, Monroe Greenthal has been in conference with Mickey Mouse and it appears that some kind of a surprise is in the cards.

Other features are planned to help banish dull care, and with the addition of eats and beer, everyone should have a swell time. Privacy and comfort are assured, as the gathering will take place in the air cooled grill, opened especially for our private party.

The cost of One Dollar is within reach of everyone, and if you have no one to come with, then drop over alone. The party starts at midnight, and will run until —(?) so even if you are located in nearby Jersey, Westchester, Connecticut, or on Long Island, you still can get in after the day's work in time to thoroughly enjoy yourself.

See you Thursday night.

A-MIKE VOGEL.

Here's The Dollar!

Please mail me my ticket for the Round Table Midnite Lunch to be held on Thursday, August 17th, at the Brass Rail, Seventh Avenue and 49th Street, New York.

CITY & STATE .....

VISITING ELKS!

Summer and its attendant dog days has its compensation when it means vacations and visits to Club headquarters from such aggressive and enterprising showmen as Frank Boucher, Hagerstown, Md., and Frank La Falce, Washington, D. C. If these boys complain of the greeting they received from us, we'll tear up the welcome mat and go back to taking in washing. What say, boys? And be sure to come again.

KENNETH TAYLOR IS PUTTING HIS TRUCK TO EXCELLENT USE

Kenneth Taylor, manager of the Strand Theatre, Uvalde, Texas, certainly gets good use out of that truck he uses to ballyoo his wares. Not long ago we published a photo showing how Ken used the truck's flat body to depict a couple of convicts breaking stone under the watchful eye of an armed guard. The accompanying illustration shows the same vehicle loaded with money bags for exploitation of "Silver Dollars." A man in mining costume is seen standing with ore pan in hand.

Like other Round Tablers, Taylor has a way of using many of old displays and props on pictures of a somewhat similar theme and background. When he played "Congorilla," for instance, he went into the storeroom and dug up a lot of jungle atmosphere used on "Bring 'Em Back Alive." In fact, he even used the cabin that played such an important part when exploiting "Cabin in Cotton." With these revamped props and other selling aids he put the picture over to most satisfactory returns.

As we've hinted before, Taylor is a young, up-and-coming showman and very much on the job of show-selling down in his town. More about his work in future issues.

PAYNE PLANTS ACE NEWSPAPER ANGLES FOR HIGH RETURNS

Earle Payne, helmsman of the Indiana, Washington, Ind., has surely educated the newspapers in his town on the value of tie-ups, and he sends us a batch of tear sheets on three recent campaigns that landed plenty of free space in addition to prizes from participating merchants.

On "Bedtime Story," a local creamery gave away free admissions which took the form of special milk caps concealed under the regular caps placed on every bottle. Not only did the creamery take sizeable space in the papers, but the editor ran a front-page box calling attention to the stunt. A local bank also tied in by opening free bank accounts for every baby born during the run of the picture—$3 for the first birth reported and one buck for each succeeding, which was also publicized in paid space and free cut and story.

A Mickey Mouse cut-out puzzle contest went over big, with a week of teaser ads in advance, and 12 three-column layouts containing the cutouts. Twenty-five prizes were donated by cooperating merchants, who ran window displays. The "King of the Jungle" newspaper memory contest was also promoted for healthy returns.

All the above were well planned and effectively executed, and although this showman modestly states that he got these ideas from the press books, nevertheless the most important part of an idea is to put it over locally. So, Earle, you are entitled to a bow for your good work.

STYLE SHOWS CLICK FOR YOUNGBLOOD AND GOOKIN DOWN SOUTH

Realizing the box office value of a properly produced fashion show, Managers Youngblood and Gookin, who make the wheels turn at the Majestic and Liberty Theatres, Johnson City, Tenn., put over a musical review fashion show that had the town buzzin'.

As the Majestic runs vaudeville one night a week, it was decided to place the acts in the body of the review which proved to be very successful—so much so that the local department store which cooperated gladly footed all the bills for the orchestra, models, extra advertising and even the acts. That's selling!

The review was put on very professionally with a capable master of ceremonies who announced the acts and the type of gown as each model entered. In fact, these live wire managers state the demand for a second style show is so insistent that another of like magnitude is now being arranged.

What we like about the above is the clever inclusion of professional acts in the style show. This takes it out of the amateur classification and gives it the swank touch that brings the extra business.

O'BRIEN HAS BEEN PRODUCING SERIES OF ATTRACTIVE ADS

A number of tear sheets from George O'Brien, operator of the Fargo Theatre, De Kalb, Ill., disclose that he has been experimenting in an effective way with advertising layout suggestions made in various articles published from time to time by this department. Use of rules and mats in the proper proportions combined to produce very attractive ads.

We also note that George was a party to the promotion of a full page co-op ad from local merchants and that he stole half of a large two line banner head to call attention to a current attraction, which we assume cost him nothing as the reward for getting the deal under way.

Thanks for that cartoon on "Goona Goona," George, but we're afraid it's a bit too advanced in theme to pass the board of censors. It's a clever piece of work, however, and just the kind of thoughts that the picture might inspire. Let's hear more about your work.

ATMOSPHERIC!

Credit E. A. Rambonett, manager of the Granada Theatre, Lexington, N. C., for this colorful "Big Cage" front. The "cats" are cut-outs, but the monkeys were real and very much alive.

BABY CONTEST AND OTHER SMART IDEAS GO OVER FOR LOUIE

A most popular baby voting contest was one of the box office stimulators that we have on hand from Louis Lamm, head man at the Capitol, Elyria (Ohio), and brother of the irrepressible Julius. Louis interested his merchant friends to put up the prizes and also promoted a co-op page to further plug the idea.

Arrangements were made with a local photographer to take free pictures of all entries, these limited in age from six months to three years. Voting coupons were distributed at the theatre and stores, and the contest ran a month, the results of which were very successful, according to Louie.

Lamm worked the free pretzel gag on "What! No Beer?" by promoting the thirst-inducers from a nearby restaurant, and distributed cellophane bags with copy headed "are you thirsty for laughs?" "Cavalcade" was plugged in advance, among other gags, with a post card personal endorsement of the picture under Lamm's signature.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Maybe a good rabbi was lost to the synagogue when Harry Greenman quit his studies for the clergy and turned his attention to the theatre, but showbusiness gained an enterprising devotee.

Born in Russia, on March 21, '98, Harry came to America at an early age and began his theatre career as usher under the managerial guidance of Harold Franklin when the latter was skipper of a theatre in Buffalo, N. Y. Since that time he has climbed the several rungs of the ladder that led to managing director of the Fox Theatre in St. Louis, where he has been for the past three years.

Greenman's past assignments include the Academy, New York City; the Fox-Washington; Fox-Detroit, and the Fox-Liberty, St. Louis. He is a Mason, a Shriner, is married and the father of a boy and girl. He would again choose showbusiness for a career had he to start all over again.

STUDY!

by JOHN TREWHELA, Mgr. Judith, Lewistown, Mont.

The theatre manager who has not for lo these many months seen signs of the returning tide, and who is not confidently proceeding with the business of making new channels to his own foyer and dredging deeper the old ones, lacks the sensitive response to his surroundings that is the first requisite of those who sell the intangibles of existence. With every type of entertainment arriving at his door, begging for an audience, where could you find a more ideal and interesting test of showmanship? Here is the chance to feel the pulse of the industry.

Take a little gem of a theatre in the geographical center of Montana, plus every physical requisite in equipment, colors that glow and please, theatre chairs that invite, carpets that mire you down, and—don't overlook this—a crew that radiates good will. Radiating is the best thing you do where you meet your customers eye to eye. There are no stiff-necked factotums out where men are men and the only brass buttons and gold braid are still in them thar hills.

Add to this a potential audience of a hundred mile area (it's really 300), with the clatter of high-heeled boots in the foyer mingling with the rattle of George O'Brien's heels on the high boardwalk in front of the Sheriff's office. Where leather coats alternate with otter on the backs of the seats with complete serenity in the democracy of the West.

Here is the perfect opportunity for studying what brings them in. Here is aupply and demand in its simplest form, the heart-beat of the theatre under the microscope, the single-cell amoeba of the business ready to give up its secret. We know what's happening, we are watching it happen.

JAMES Q. CLEMMER PROMOTES FREE BUS SERVICE TO THEATRE

Free motor bus transportation to the door of the Fifth Avenue theatre was offered residents of Seattle, Wash., by Manager James Q. Clemmer.

Taking advantage of the local visit of the U. S. Frigate "Constitution," otherwise known as "Old Ironsides." The historic ship was docked at a considerable distance from the downtown area, so Manager Clemmer and Vic Gauntlett, publicity and advertising director for Evergreen State Theatres, chartered a sightseeing bus and equipped it with signs reading "Free Ride to the Fifth Avenue Theatre." As visitors left "Old Ironsides" they were invited to board the bus. Several full carloads were carried every afternoon, and Manager Clemmer reported that only in one or two instances did passengers fail to buy tickets to the theatre when they were let out of the bus in front of the house.

FAST BOOKING MEANT FAST SHOWMANSHIP FOR EGAN AND BLACK

It was a nice Spring day when J. H. Black and Pete Egan of the Capitol Theatre in Calgary, Alta., Canada, received a note informing them that "Cavalcade" had been booked in the house on short notice.

There they were: no exploitation campaign figured out, no advertising laid out—nothing but a trailer. However, they knew the drawing power of the film, especially in

Pete's "42nd Street" Bally

Canada, so Black hot-footed it over to the printer's, rushed off a lot of window cards and heralds, and spent the next few days driving over 1,300 miles (within a 100 mile radius of Calgary), posting the advertising matter all over 42 towns.

He and Egan then called up all the editors of the small town papers and had them insert readers giving showing date. This, and the advertising stunt, did tremendous business. On the morning prior to opening, school teachers were invited to the preview and the pedants showed their appreciation by telling the kids.

The success of "Cavalcade" spurred the pair on to greater heights for "42nd Street," where they engineered a fine campaign, one of their most noteworthy efforts being rental of a street car, which advertised, from top to bottom, the film. Look at it in the cut we are showing and see the fine job. This was but one of the many showman angles used, but that alone could have sold the picture for Pete and Black. How about it, boys?

SID'S CHUCKLE IDEA GRABS TWO COL. AD ON CLASSIFIED PAGE

Sid Dannenberg, Warner Bros. Theatres Cleveland exploitation helped sell First National's "Central Airport" at the Sigma Theatre there, by crashing the Lima News with the "Chuckle Ad Contest," which invites the newspaper readers to submit at least four complete lines from the classified ads and combine them into a humorous paragraph, for free tickets to the Sigma. Here's a typical answer to this contest:

"Why cook when a
Single man will work part time for Plenty of water and grass. No
Business ability, one who has lived."

This "Chuckle Ad Contest" is a novel departure from the usual run of classified ad contests, and can be worked to good advantage on any picture. The guest tickets are almost a guarantee that readers will sift every ad on the page, which made it easy for Sid to sell the gag, and to corral for the theatre a free two column smash at the head of the page.

Cumulative Advertising

S. Charles Einfeld, Warner ad chief, worked out a different press book idea with a culminative advertising campaign on seven Warner pictures from "Central Airport" to "Little Giant." Managers were advised to sell the seven pictures at one time in advance of their showing and a number of selling points and ad angles were made up in mimeographed form, and included in press books.

Sorry!

We had intended announcing the winners in this issue of the Managers' Round Table-Producers' July Exploitation Contest. But we regret that we cannot as the number of entries makes it impossible for the judges to render their decisions at this time. We crave the indulgence of all those who have forwarded entries, but we feel that you will not mind the short delay so that every contestant will be sure to receive every last bit of consideration possible.

Though the contest closed officially at the time stated, July 31, there were many who forwarded campaigns that they had put on in the last days of July and the first few days of August, in accordance with our statement that these entries would be eligible for the prizes. This has also held us back a few days in deciding the final awards.

However, the winners will be announced in the Round Table section of the next issue, August 19. So please be patient for these few extra days. And to all of you, who by your cooperation have helped to put this over big, our many heartfelt thanks.

FRANK BOWS THANKS AND BLANKETS TOWN WITH SNAPPY GAGS

After that very swell campaign put on by Hagerstown to welcome him back to the Maryland Theatre, Frank Boucher more than expressed his thanks with a shattering build up on "42 Street" that included twenty-three different wide spread stunts.

Some of the outstanders were teaser mail and laundry package stickers, exploitation records played at theatre, on radio, in all music stores; window displays in every leading main street store; special heralds with a contest angle, sidewalk stencil, jig saw giveaways and street ballyhoo of masked girl passing out "42 Street" cards.

Frank also pepped up his campaign on "Private Jones" with a funny war story contest that he planted in both his papers. A dollar was given for every story printed, and an interesting batch of war jokes were sent in.

CLEVER PUBLICITY FROM HARRY HARRIS, BRITISH SHOWMAN

We have been receiving some fine examples of British exploitation, and among them is the snappy campaign on "Australian Week," by Harry B. Harris, General Manager, Exchange Kinema, Lincoln, England.

Harry had two Australian features to play in one week, so conceived the swell idea of putting on a week in honor of the "down under" island. He promoted Australian cutouts, posters, fruits and farm products, using "Aussie" shorts as well.

On the last half, Harris played "His Loyal Highness" and tied up with a local hospital carnival, awarding prizes for all Australian costumes worn in the fancy dress parades. One of his staff was dressed in a royal outfit and joined the parade advertising the picture by distributing heralds, printed on a two color background of the Union Jack.

The awards got Harry a three-column newspaper cut and story, and when H. R.

Harry and the Kids!

H. Prince George visited the carnival, the town was hung with banners welcoming "his loyal highness" to the theatre.

It certainly was a well planned and executed campaign. Harry sends us samples of his one sheets and heralds which sure shout the news. The photo above shows the judges at the carnival and Harry is the smiling gentleman in the center. Very good indeed, "H. B.," and now that you know the way, come again. Remember us to Harry Crull when you're in London.

Zombies in Mexico!

Walter Gould, representative for U. A. down in Mexico, constructed a striking front for the Cine Palacio on occasion of "White Zombie." In line with the regular campaign he had built atop the marquee a reproduction of the old castle and employed four persons to stand there and impersonate "Zombies."

Wear Your Club Pin!

SMAKWITZ PUTS OVER SPLENDID CAMPAIGN FOR "GOLD DIGGERS"

Charles Smakwitz, Warner Bros. exploiter in Upstate, New York, had all of Albany "Gold Diggers" conscious with his smash campaign on the Warner Bros. musical hit when it played the Strand there.

Smakwitz's biggest stunt was the using of a large Federal truck as a street float, equipped with loudspeaker, microphone, phonograph and amplifying set. The float presented a gorgeous spectacle as it passed through the busiest sections of the city, with its cargo of scantily clad girls dressed as gold diggers, each one holding a gold-painted pick or shovel. The background was made to represent a stone pile, with the foreground representing bags full of gold nuggets.

The float stopped at street corners, where the girls distributed heralds of the picture. On the opening night they acted as hostesses in the theatre lobby, handing out cards, etc.

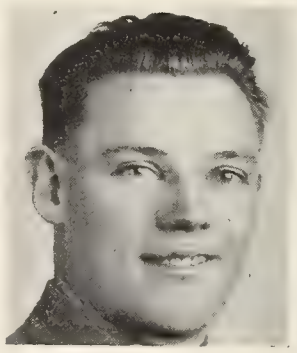
They were also posed in the theatre lobby to represent a live twenty-four sheet—a stunt which caused considerable word-of-mouth talk on the attraction. Music, songs, etc., were also put over on the opening night, which was a memorable occasion for the Albany citizens.

Good Program Idea

R. C. Jones sends us a copy of his four-page "token" program from the Ashland Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., which is worth 10 cents at the box office. Here is how "R. C." works it: On the back page is printed instructions asking patrons to bring the program whenever they come to the Ashland, at which time cashier stamps date. After program has been stamped four times, patron is allowed 10-cent reduction for the fifth show. As the program contains five changes, the extra inducement helps in having patrons retain it, thus selling the entire week's shows. Jones says the stunt is going over very well for him, and no doubt other managers might use it with the same success.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

No guardian angel appeared before the vision of James Snyder and directed him to choose the theatre as his career because of any sentimentality; no, James looked show business over with a cool, calculating eye and went into it because he thought he could make some money thereby.



And so we find him out in Crested Butte, Col., where he occupies the post of partner-manager of the Princess Theatre. Before he went to the Princess, however, he had considerable experience in the projection end of the business.

Round Tabler Snyder was born in Crested Butte and received his education in the schools of his home town. He is married and the father of one child. If he had to start all over again he would pick show-business as his means of livelihood.

QUICK SERVICE IDEAS THAT WORKED

JAKE ROSENTHAL, the Waterloo (Ia.) Thunderbolt, got himself a nice story when he allowed the unemployed to see "42nd Street" at the Iowa Theatre, during one day of the engagement. The only admission necessary was a card from the relief organizations. Jake managed to include in the story that the capacity of the house could take care of 5,000 free guests during the day (heavens forbid!). . . .

HENRY REEVE, director, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas, put out a special tabloid to announce his theatre's sixth anniversary. Half the copy advertised a drug store that donated ice cream and other party gifts, the store also paying half the cost of the tabloid. Henry also sends in his membership application and tells us that the Mission is still going strong. Glad news, Henry, and don't be a stranger. . . .

LUDWIG SUSSMAN, manager Adelphi, Chicago, in cooperation with K. Louis Linker, ad expert, gets out some very smart newspaper copy which he says has helped make the past year the best his theatre has experienced. Fair enough, gents; your ads do look as if they were going some place and hope they continue to fill the house. . . .

JULIUS LAMM, up-grosser of the Uptown Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, sends along a copy of his monthly house organ called the "Uptown Mouth Organ," a nine-page mag. in multigraph, with a picture of Julius himself on page 1. Everything of interest to the house staff is covered, with laughs and giggles in profusion to give that homey touch. Very good, Julius; we're looking for ads in the next issue. We know you. . . .

ED HART, the Plainfield (N. J.) thunderbolt, gathered all the canines in town and put them on the stage of the Paramount Theatre there for a contest in connection with his showing of "Peg o' My Heart." The dog in the picture was sufficient excuse for Ed to tie in his most important local paper on the idea, and prizes were awarded for the cutest doggies who were dressed in costumes that best struck the fancy of their owners. Winners were determined by audience applause. . . .

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

The above photo shows some of the excellent work turned out by Will Wills. For definition, Wills is hard to beat. Let's have some more from you, boy, and how've you been?

H. A. LARSON, manager, Majestic Theatre, Oakland, Neb., got out a one sheet that sold his double feature showing, stressing "The Fighting President" and the newly arrived 3.2 brew. His copy tied-in the kick of the beer to the strength of his show, and "3.2 Sold Here" was interwoven through the ad, standing out in caps. H. A. had no trouble in planting his paper in every place that sold the brew. . . .

CARL WHEELER, manager of Smalley's Theatre, Delhi (N. Y.) sends in his first contribution, and if it's a sample of his work we want some more. Carl got out a card—a message from Eddie Cantor in advance of the local engagement on "Kid from Spain." Eddie addressed the folks, tieing-in his broadcasts to the picture and recommending the songs in the "Kid" as the same ones he has put over on the air. Carl says that this card, sent out to his mailing list and inserted in newspapers pushed his business way up. Good enough, brother! . . .

LOUIS ORLOVE, the "excitement stirrer" at the Modjeska Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., sends along a few gags he has worked to good results. One is a baseball schedule put out with a Polish paper; another is an invitation card for a newsboys' preview showing, and the third is the announcement of the opening of his free dancing school. All these ideas are bringing in the good publicity and admissions, which is usual with Louie's stunts. . . .

ARTHUR JEFFREY, Warner exploiteer in the metropolitan New York district, put over a neat one in advance of "Picture Snatcher" at the New York Strand, by pulling a contest for the best professional pictures of the opening of the Cagney picture. Money prizes were given for the three best shots, and representatives from every local newspaper and photo syndicate were represented. . . .

BOB PASKOW and WALT LEACH of the Newark (N. J.) Branford Theatre pulled a Neon effect on the "Shadow Waltz" number of "Gold Diggers" by inserting a piece of "red fire" gelatine in the color wheel. The effect was startling, many in the audience believing that actual Neons were used. The stunt is being passed along and should click wherever it is used. . . .

CHARLIE BASSIN, otherwise known as "Kid Kasanova," from the Oriental Theatre up in Mattapan, Mass., comes through with a mailing card which he sends to the outlying districts for patronage within a radius of twelve miles of his house. The card gives the program for the week on the left-hand side of the card where the address is carried, and on the reverse he sells his cooling system and his Starlight Promenade, which has taken on so well. Smart work, Charlie; we'll be seein' yuh. . . .

JAMES F. LUNSFORD, newly appointed manager of the Palace Theatre, Columbus, Ga., is sure putting lots of stuff on the ball since his promotion. Jim made a nice Mother's Day tie-up, inviting mothers to see the show free of charge and presenting each with a flower he promoted in a tie-up with his leading florist. Jim is also organizing a Kiddie Club and is very enthusiastic over the interest aroused. Swell work, boy; looks like you're going places. . . .

J. J. PARKER, Portland (Ore.) theatre operator, rarely lends his name to a personal newspaper picture plug, but did so with "Secrets" in which he compared it with some of the screen's mightiest. Endorsement ads by "J. J." are only run two or three times a year which makes them mean a lot to the box office when they do appear. . . .

LOUIE'S LIFE STORY MAKES SWELL STORY FOR DALLAS PAPER

Louie Charninsky, that peripatetic showman, now reports himself back at his home town at the Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Tex., and to announce himself to the folks, transformed the lobby and box office into a tropical setting, not forgetting the native hut to the right, as you can see below on "Narrow Corner." Louie swears the girl is also a native. Of Dallas?

As befits a wandering son who returns to the fold, the Dallas papers gave Louie a welcome and the leading daily ran a two-column story with cuts of his entire career. Very interesting, too. This showman started his theatre career as a musician, and as orchestra leader of the Pantages Theatres, Kansas City, also doubled as manager while he wasn't in the pit.

Charninsky is also known for his skill in costuming himself in the character of whatever picture he is playing, and the paper ran his photo in cow-hand makeup with one of those 10-gallon hats presented to him by Tom Mix. If Louie keeps dressing himself in character, we hope he never plays "This Nude World."

TED OUTLINES PLAN FOR FREE SHOWS TO HELP DULL PERIODS

A plan that is going over very well to aid business during slow weeks is Ted Schlosser's free-show idea that is helping his box office at the Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. In fact, it is going so well that Ted has kindly volunteered to tell us all how he does it for the benefit of other small-town exhibitors. We quote from Ted's interesting letter:

"In the next few paragraphs I am going to try to tell the small-town exhibitor how to put over the free show idea in their own theatres. I have never seen anything like it for creating interest and getting the public to talk shows. I showed to over three thousand people in a single day in a town where the population is only 950.

"The first thing to do is to get the merchants and leading professional men interested. It is absolutely the cheapest and best advertising that they can buy anywhere. It is best to have them understand from the start that this is not a money-making proposition for any one; it's sole purpose is to create interest and good will. Then see just how many men you can sign up to cooperate with you. In small towns they should not be assessed more than a dollar or two, just enough to guarantee your expenses for each of the free shows. It is best to assess each of them a certain amount rather than to charge them according to the number of tickets they put out.

"In return you agree to furnish them with handbills advertising the free shows, window cards telling the public that this store gives free show tickets and all of the tickets that they may need to supply their customers and friends. In order to get the best distribution possible they should give tickets out freely and not hold out for a 25-cent purchase or anything like that. Remember that the more tickets they put out the more people you are going to show to in your theatre. An ad from a local concern on the back of the tickets will more than pay for the printing.

"Don't let any one stay from one show to another. Fill your house before the picture starts and clear your house when it is over. Don't let them run in and out during the program. Stop after each show long enough to empty and refill your house."

Ted has put this over very effectively and kindly has volunteered to answer any questions, send samples of handbills and tickets to other managers. Good enough, Ted, and expect that you will have many takers.

BETTY BOOP PICNIC LANDS SIX-COLUMN SMASH FOR WAITE

That kiddie clubs are not on the wane and can be made a prosperous source of revenue for the box office is the contention of Irwin R. Waite, manager of the Paramount, Austin (Tex.), who sends along a tear sheet carrying a six-column cut and story with streamer banner of his Betty Boop Club first annual birthday picnic.

The event started with a free show at the theatre in which the kids participated, after which a string of trolleys were loaded with the youngsters and the proceedings adjoined to an amusement park. Here a lengthy program of sport competitions took place, topped with a kiddie bathing revue, after which sandwiches, pink lemonade and ice cream were served free of charge by the company co-sponsoring the club activities.

All this was put over without cost to the theatre, and Irv. reports that a large majority of the club's 2,500 members attended, many bringing friends and relatives. He further states that he believes his Betty Boop is the first club in his part of the country, and judging by the way it goes over, it certainly won't be the last. Thanks for the good wishes, Irv., and we will appreciate some early news of your other activities.

"It's a Panic, Joe"

For a model of its kind, we certainly can recommend Joe Krinsky's rube herald, which he got out for the local appearance of a popular hill billy air unit at the Capitol, Sioux City, Ia. It is regular newspaper size with front page make-up, called the "Toonerville Trumpet," and contains a load of laffs besides selling both the stage show and picture. Joe says that it may be of use to managers playing similar attractions, and as it contains too much good stuff to try and describe it within our space limitations, we suggest that interested members write Joe direct for a copy of this panic attention-stopper.

SURE, THIS IS BULL!

But don't get us wrong. The only bull about E. M. Hart's campaign at the Oxford Theatre, Plainfield, N. J., was the two cows he used on the float publicizing "Kid from Spain." Hart hit the box-office on this one. A truck ballyhoo (see photo) carried two cows with horns (bulls to the public). A small boy in toreador costume, mounted one of the cows. The ballyhoo proved effective.

BOTWICK'S BEER GAG GIVES VERMONTERS BOX OFFICE THIRST

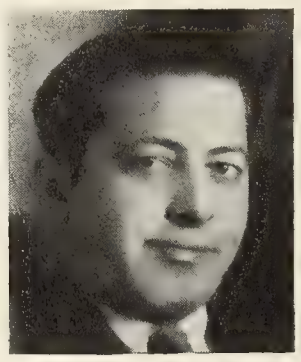
Live members are going for the beer tie-ups, and Harry Botwick, manager, Paramount, Rutland, Vt., put a nice "head" on his campaign on "Song of the Eagle" with a co-op page headed "Beer's Back," and carried the idea further by making up a 22x28 window card planted in stores and bars, the top two-thirds reading: "Beer for Sale Here," and the rest plugging the picture, which opened a few days after the brew was legalized.

An ace attention stopper proved to be a stack of old time beer kegs that Harry placed on the sidewalk and in the lobby. The pretzel pitching contest also gathered the folks, and with jumbo telegrams announcing the date, a midnight showing gave this feature a swell sendoff for a healthy gross.

Sorry we couldn't run a shot of the lobby, Harry, but you'll have to have more light on your photos for proper reproduction. Better luck next time, yes?

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

One of the Naify trio of brothers in showbusiness out on the West Coast, Fred Naify, manager of the Senator Theatre, Chico, Calif., began his theatre career at 20 years of age.



He has stuck to one circuit—the T & D Jr.—has Fred, and some of his past assignments include the Royal, San Francisco; the State, Martinez, and the Senator and National in Chico.

This member of the Round Table Club received his education in Atlantic City before making his trek to the West.

Asked if he would again pick out the theatre as a means of livelihood, his answer was a decided yes. He has no intention of ever leaving this field for another.

Just as a tip-off to the girls, he's still single. We can pick but one flaw in Fred's character . . . he hasn't made a contribution to this department in quite some time. Here's hoping he isn't sick.

EVENTUALLY—WHY NOT JOIN NOW!

ELMER H. BRIENT
than whom there are mighty few better showmen, joins us from Loew's Theatre in Richmond, Va. Elmer dropped into headquarters almost immediately after joining us, so he's tied up all the way round. He promises us some excellent material for use in our pages as soon as he returns to his desk from a well-earned vacation. Don't forget your promise, Elmer, we'll be waiting for your stuff with open arms.

out at the Rexy Theatre, in La Salle, Ill., joins us and we extend the welcome mat to him. Come in and sit around the Table with us, Tony, we're a nice bunch, as you will learn later. But the only way to get in our good graces is to send in your own stunts for the rest of us to read about.

is with Skouras at the Victoria Theatre in Ossining, N. Y., and he's more than welcome. Nick is coming down from up yonder to be with us at the Round Table get-together and if he doesn't start off like an ardent rooter for the Club, we've missed our guess. We'll be seeing yuh, Nick, and don't get dressed up in "swallertails" for the occasion either.

manager of the Warner Theatre, in Erie, Penna., is one of those boys who has contributed to our pages and only just joined up. Too busy sending your stuff in to sign on the dotted line; is that it, Jimmy? Well, now that you're actually one of us, keep up the good work, 'cause as fast as you send material in, we'll use it.

assistant manager at the Lafayette Theatre in Buffalo, N. Y., comes to us recommended by his superior. With the boss you have, Jimmy, you'll be learning the business right, so we're expecting big things from you. Don't disappoint us.

assists at Loew's Theatre in Richmond, Va., where Elmer Brient holds forth. Francis speaks highly of our Department and starts his membership by contributing to our pages, so he's off to a good start. Keep up the good work, and when Elmer gets back home keep after him till he sends us the story he promised.

keeps the shekels coming in the cash box at the Mission Theatre in Menard, Texas, and we wish he'd write and let us know how he does it. Remember, Henry, this is a Service Department and the rest of the boys want to take advantage of the stunts you pull, just as you do theirs, so get the old Waterman out and let's hear from you.

holding down the fort at the Smithtown Theatre, Smithtown, L. I., joins the ranks of up-and-coming showmen and we're counting on him for big things. Long Island is pretty well solidly sold on the Round Table Club, "J. J.," so you'll have plenty to do to keep abreast of the rest of the boys. Are you on?

is the youngster manager of the Family Theatre, an E. M. Loew house up in Worcester, Mass., and since we are always interested in the activities of our younger members, we're hoping he'll keep us posted so we can report his doings via our pages. Remember us to the rest of our friends in Worcester, Herb, and let's be a'hearing from you.

RAYMOND COHEN
is another Warner man to join the ranks and he comes from the Capitol Theatre in Belleville, N. J. From what we have seen of the activities of the Warner Jerseyites, you boys are in for some good, snappy campaigns from Ray, unless he doesn't live up to the reputation of the rest of the lads in his division—and I'm sure that's not the case. Better prove it to us, Ray; we'll be seein' yuh.

comes to us from the Orpheum Theatre in Utica, N. Y., and he's another of the younger set to show his aggressiveness by wanting to be one of us. You're bound to succeed in this business, Ray, and one of the best ways is to take advantage of the many slants in our pages that have been successfully tried by other showmen in the field.

is the owner manager of the Opera House in Stanford, Ky., and joins up by wanting a Club pin, showing that he is with us 100%. O. K., Hays, we need members like you as an incentive to keep the pages alive, so your next step is to send something for reproduction in our good sheet. What say, can we count on you?

manager of the Roxy Theatre in Walla Walla, Wash., apparently takes the prize for being the youngest manager to join our ranks. Corwin says he was born in nineteen hundred and fourteen, which makes him exactly nineteen, unless our mathematics is poor. Well, Corwin, we bid you welcome, and you come from a town of pretty snappy showmen, who are brother members of yours, so you'd better show us that Walla Walla can boast of another live-wire showman.

PHIL BILLIET
is out at the Coliseum Theatre in Annawan, Ill., where he operates a little 250 seater house. You ought to be on your toes trying to keep them coming in, and since we have thousands of members and readers in towns your size, they'd be particularly interested in reading how you exploit your various pictures.

manages the State Theatre in Mendota, Ill., and we're glad to acknowledge his recent application for membership in the Club. Now that you're on the active list of contributors, Walter, let's see what you can do to keep the pages full of interesting slants on what's going on in showbusiness. What was that last stunt you pulled to swell the box office receipts? Shoot along an account of it.

owns and manages the Crescent Theatre out in Little Rock, Ark. He joins our Club by sending in a contribution, and if that isn't a good sign we don't know what is. You'll find your first contribution in our pages as soon as we can jockey it in, Ensor, and keep them coming; we love it.

manages the Majestic Theatre in upper Manhattan, New York City, and knowing that neighborhood as well as we do, we are sure he has his hands full keeping them out of the opposition houses, of which there are plenty, and coming to him. Tell us about it, Oscar, the rest of the boys would like to know, too.

assistant manager of the Bellevue Theatre in Niagara Falls, N. Y., wants to be one of us. In his enthusiasm he tells us to watch him. Well, Shelly, we're only too happy to see what kind of stuff you're made of; so go to it and send us dope on how you help keep Niagara Falls show-conscious. Are you on?

manages the Majestic Theatre in Ellwood, Pa., and he's not quite thirty yet. Judging by the rate with which the "younger set" is coming along with us, the older boys had better look to their laurels. Well, Andy, a little lively competition is always relished by good showmen, so do your stuff.

resident manager of the Capitol Theatre out in Morrison, Ill., tells us that he has intended joining us for the past year but for no good reason kept putting it off. Well, R. S., even though you're a little late coming through, we bid you welcome and the only way you can make up for your tardiness is to send us in some good ideas on how you "keep them coming." How's that for a bargain?

is the assistant manager at the Jewel Theatre in Oklahoma City, Okla. Jimmy tells us his house is a four-hundred-seater in the heart of the residential section. He also says that the house is not quite two years old and that they are still trying to sell it to the folks in Oklahoma City. Write and give us some more dope on how you're doing it; we'd be interested.

hails from out in Salem, Mass., where he manages the Rialto Theatre. Massachusetts is a very show-conscious state, Harry, and some of our most active members come from out there. So here's hoping you'll help swell the ranks of live-wire managers from Salem.

ONCE upon a time Mack the pointer and his little playboy friend, Rags, the half-breed terrier, were taken a-hunting. They put up a bevy of birds. Rags was ecstatic with excitement and zeal. He dashed hither and yon, hell-bent and full of noise. He forgot the birds and took after a rabbit, but they passed a woodchuck hole and Rags stopped to dig for the chuck. There was a skunk in the hole. We drop the curtain about here—but of course you know it was the thoroughbred pointer which brought in the birds.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD is a thoroughbred motion picture publication—incidentally the only one with an audited circulation—it is not at all confused about its business.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD does not leap from screen to vaudeville and back to film again. It is not in the carnival business, or the fair business. It does not merchandise rattlesnake oil, nor peanuts, popcorn and chewing gum or slot machines.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD is not concerned with false scents, editorially or in business. It does not vociferate about rumors, or print this week that which is likely to be untrue next, just to have a story. It says who says and what and tells why who says what about which.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD leaves no doubt in the minds of its advertisers about to whom he is addressing his message, and leaves no doubt in the minds of its readers about its purpose of service to the exhibitor and his business.

AND THAT IS WHY MOTION PICTURE HERALD HAS THE WORLD'S GREATEST—ALL MOTION PICTURE—CIRCULATION.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

Attention Mr Luke Conner;-

Dear Luke

I am enclosing herewith film rental check on GOLDDIGGERS 1933. It is over four times as large as any film rental check I have ever sent to any film distributor. But I am sending it WITH PLEASURE.

The fact is, we broke every house record for the past nine years with this feature. We more than doubled the gross business we did on "42ND STREET" and our gross on that subject was 25% more than on any other feature we have played in the past twelve months. My books bear out that statement.

After paying you what appears to be an exorbitant rental for GOLDDIGGERS 1933 we still have a net that exceedes any other feature played in over a year. My books bear out that statement also.

Playing this feature first in this terretory, pushing it hard with advertising, and getting a good break on the weather and other factors, accounts for some of the surprising business we did these last three days. But there is magic in that title, it is timed right for the public demand, and "42ND STREET" gave it the build-up to crash through old records. But the picture itself is overwhelming in its charm, beauty and bigness and word of mouth advertising really put it over after the first night.

I am already thinking about bringing it back in October when the resort people are gone and winter people are here. What can you do for me?

With sincere best wishes,

Cordially

Ed Fuller

TRAFFIC IN SCANDAL

CONTINUED reverberations of the recent impingement of Mr. Al Jolson upon Mr. Walter Winchell suffice to remind us that the production community of Hollywood continues to be the field of operations of a well defined traffic in scandal in behalf of an equally well defined area of the newspaper press.

We are confronted by the interesting picture of these newspapers, through their columns and columnists, exploiting for sale to their readers the players and personalities of the motion picture on the editorial hand and on the business hand, charging the industry, through the motion picture theatre and the high amusement advertising rates, a discriminatory price for access to the same readers.

For the lack of adequate central consolidated commercial representation, and for lack of courage to take issue in some quarters, Hollywood and the motion picture industry stand for it.

Can you fancy just what would happen if the newspapers so interested in the adventures and "romances" of Hollywood developed an equally probing interest in the lives and loves of the motor barons of Detroit? Automobile editors go to the motor shows but they do not go backstairs at Detroit, Flint, Pontiac and Dearborn.

Now it may be argued that while the motor industry sells just machines, cars, the motion picture sells personalities and hence invites, or at least automatically incurs, a more personal treatment. But that is only the semblance of the fact, not the fact. The motion picture really sells personalities-on-the-screen, not in the wrong bedroom, not on the beach at Malibu and not in the ship news photographs with skirts around the neck.

Fan followings are followings of idealizers. Idealizations are not based on facts and most assuredly not on the spice and garlic of the columnists' pabulum.

The motion picture industry has, generally speaking, long recognized that stories about "how it is done," destroying consumer illusion about feats of daring on the screen, are invasive of box office drawing power. We submit that exposition in the fan magazine and daily press of the sex technique, the preferences and peccadilloes of the players do not conduce to audience support of the screen roles of those same players.

Mr. Jolson took a large handsome swing at what he didn't like in current journalism and appears to have landed with some considerable degree of success. But who swings for the motion picture industry?

THE SENTRY DROWSES

SUMMER having been what it was, one can have a certain sympathy with the art of Miss Sally Rand, famed for the moment for her achievements at the Chicago Fair, costumed in two fans and the fanniest act that these alert old eyes have focused upon in several decades. One idly wonders, however, who was nodding in the August heat, when a brace of theatre managers, cultured in the Chicago school, were permitted to make arrangements to superimpose this ruddy little maraschino cherry upon the cup of the motion picture already overflowing with delightful aphrodisiacs. It is announced that the two fans, with robust Miss Sally in between their intermittent arcs of motion, are to be displayed on "an extensive tour of film houses," and that "offers have been received for her appearance at Radio City." Mr. Diego Rivera was painted out for less. And so the motion picture adds a sprig to its bouquet of rue.

BY STAR LIGHT

LEADING up to the premiere of "The Power and the Glory," one may suppose a very good publicity job is currently being done on Mr. Jesse Lasky and in connection with it comes a story from Hollywood, presented in Motion Picture Daily, in which the producer discusses the public pressure which he sees as "a silent but successful campaign to establish the star system."

Every showman will find himself in considerable sympathy with Mr. Lasky wherein he expresses the problem of the divergence between the policies of fitting the star to the story and the story to the star. Mr. Lasky would prefer to fit the star to the story. He finds he can do that successfully only by getting the overwhelming story. To be sure, when he does that he is almost certain to start a new star.

Public inertia, the dumbbell consumer mind, likes stars and types in part because they are automatic narration, in part because they become readily recognizable vicarious agents of attainment of heart's desire.

Producer-distributor inertia, the merchandising mind, likes stars and types because they provide ready-made advertising, semi-automatic selling, pre-introduced, pre-digested wishfood.

THREE motion picture concerns are said to be angling for the services of Mr. Elliott Roosevelt in various capacities—executive, exploitation, etc. One presumes that this bidding arises from an exhaustive investigation of his experience in this field.

PERENNIAL BUTT

Once more is the much-maligned motion picture industry the butt of self-important, zealous reformers, this time in Kansas, where last week was launched a campaign by the Kansas Council of Christian Education, its objective: stricter regulation of the industry in Kansas. The courageous council has taken upon itself the task of "educating the people" to the need of industry reform, urges the censor board to greater stringency, asks prosecution of the "Sunday" law. Toward the Council cause is seen leaning state attorney general Roland Boynton. To what would church councils turn if there were no motion picture to be the perennial objective of burningly righteous attack. . . .

STARS A-MAKING

Startling, little short of revelation is the order passed down from the Soviet government to the film producing companies under its thumb to popularize individual cinematic stars, build up personalities. In line with a growing liberal policy toward the arts is the radical permission to establish the star, attempt to put more interest into Soviet productions, make them less boring, less anonymous in personality. To the "directive," (government order) has come ready and willing producer response. Yet far from musical comedies on the screen, the Russian cinema may soon show pep, personality. . . .

COLOR'S PROGRESS

From an expensive hobby into a reasonable business proposition would the use of color photography be turned by the use of the screen's latest improvement, emanating from Berlin, in the opinion of its sponsors. One Dr. Gaspar, indefatigable worker, over a period of 10 years has developed a new type of color film, representing progress. No claimant is Dr. Gaspar of discovery of a new principle, merely the achievement of an improvement of major significance. The method: film covered with three sensitive layers, each of which reacts to light rays of only certain colors. Layers are tinged with the color to which they are susceptible. Yet may color be feasible, practical in ordinary feature film production. . . .

ADVERTISING LEADER

To the motion picture industry, perhaps more than to any other, is advertising a most important vertebra in the backbone of successful enterprise. Well may the industry, then, mourn the passing of John I. Romer, longtime president and publisher of the renowned "Printers' Ink," purchased in 1908 from its founder, George P. Rowell. One of the first professional writers of advertising in the country, Mr. Romer gave untiringly in his pages of his long experience to raise the tone, improve the quality of advertising. He "combed the advertising and commercial world for the best thoughts on selling and week by week infused advertising with the tenets of experience and tested methods." Credited is Mr. Romer with founding what today is the vital Better Business Bureaus of the nation, important to the motion picture, as to other industries. . . .

AUTHORESS, PLAYWRIGHT

Not from a garret of mean appearance to trudge weary miles of streets to innumerable hardened producers came a budding playwright last week to New York. Rather by plane, in state, wined, dined and greeted, came this authoress. Her name, Mary Pickford, whose name made startling recent news with the announcement of a shaky, not yet completely shattered marriage to one Douglas Fairbanks. Authoress Pickford brought her play to New York, with Max Gordon as possible producer, Grace Moore possible star. Revealed suddenly by newshawks was the fact that Miss Mary is also a writer of novelettes, short stories. Not yet lost, however, is her first love, since a new picture will occupy her attention when she returns Coastward, late this month. Extremely uncommunicative was she about marriage, Mr. Fairbanks. . . .

WOMAN'S SCOOP

Familiar to the newspaper is the often heralded "scoop." Less frequent, less common is the scoop in the field of magazines, periodicals. To the popular "Woman's Home Companion" has recently gone a definite scoop, two years in the making, fostered by quick thinking and rapid action. To a woman goes credit for the beat. When Charles Chaplin finished "City Lights," two years ago, Miss Gertrude B. Lane, editor-in-chief, was bathed in the light of a great inspiration. She cabled Chaplin in London, dispatched managing editor Willa Roberts to conclude negotiations. The result: in the current issue (August 18) begins the great comedian's 40,000 word autobiography, to run in five instalments. One of Chaplin's terms was that the piece be published as he wrote it. Glad to comply was Editor Lane, knowing well the value of her scoop. . . .

NAME OF THE HOUR

Powerful in selling, exploitation would be the byword name of the hour: Roosevelt. Not unconscious of that conspicuous fact are motion picture companies, reported last week hot on the heels of recent Renoite Elliott Roosevelt, one of the President's sons. To him, says report, have gone offers from Twentieth Century, Universal, Radio, the last ready to compensate services to the extent of $500 per week in an executive post. An exploitation job is Universal's bait. Obvious is the ready tieup with a White House inhabitant. . . .

POOR RISK

No good bet to insurance companies are the theatres of Kansas City, relative to coverage on holdup and robbery. Rapidly are companies canceling such insurance on theatres, while new policies are not being written. The revelation came last week when Jay Means, local organization president, reported a holdup at his Oak Park theatre, $200 gone, and a canceled policy. With Saturday and Sunday receipts still about, Monday morning is the popular moment, with such raids on the increase in the past year. One more problem have Kansas City owners to fret about. . . .

"STILL" BOOMING

To the publicity man at the studio, avid for good shots on or off the set, has come a possible great boom, in the form of a new "still" camera, the product of Coast inventor George Walters. Long difficult, troublesome has been the problem of making stills after the scene has been shot. The camera: electrically button operated, set up beside the motion camera, takes 60 to 90 stills a minute, shooting the scene, putting new film in place and refocusing for the next shot, automatically. . . .

KOHN HEADS PARAMOUNT THEATRES; COKELL IS ADVANCED TO TREASURER

Former Treasurer Will Represent Trustees and Management on Board in Subsidiaries; Continues as Vice-President

The management of Paramount Publix this week effected the following important changes in the executive structure of its motion picture and theatre companies:

Ralph A. Kohn was placed in charge of all theatre operations.

Walter B. Cokell was elevated from the assistant treasurership to treasurer.

Sam Dembow, former Publix theatre executive, was given an opportunity to purchase an interest in one of the company's theatre subsidiaries.

Herschel Stuart joined Paramount to participate in management of various subsidiaries of Publix.

Adolph Zukor announced Tuesday from Paramount's home offices in Times Square that Ralph A. Kohn had been appointed vice-president of Paramount Publix Corporation in charge of all Paramount theatre operations. The appointment was approved by Messrs. Leake, Hilles and Richardson, the trustees in bankruptcy.

In such subsidiaries as Paramount has an interest, Mr. Kohn will represent the trustees and the management on the board, after the reorganization of such subsidiaries by the advisory committee on theatre properties, headed by S. A. Lynch.

Mr. Kohn will continue as vice-president of Paramount Productions, Inc., Paramount International, Inc., and Paramount Distributing Corp., Inc.

Cokell Becomes Treasurer

This move is generally regarded as placing Mr. Kohn in the post now occupied by Sam Dembow, Jr., who succeeded Sam Katz as the operating head of Publix theatres late in 1930.

The trustees have under consideration an arrangement whereby Mr. Dembow will be given an opportunity to purchase an interest in one of the company's theatre operations now controlled by Paramount, in keeping with the plan of theatre decentralization. Mr. Dembow has, for some time, according to reports, been negotiating with the company to take over its group of Upper New York State theatres, but has met with opposition from Mr. Lynch.

Walter B. Cokell, who has been with the company for over twelve years and is now assistant treasurer, succeeds Mr. Kohn as treasurer. At the same time, George J. Schaefer, general manager of Paramount Publix, announced that Herschel Stuart had been invited to join the company, and that he will participate in the active management of various subsidiaries in the theatre department. Mr. Stuart's first assignment is in Detroit, where he now is in charge of all theatres in which Paramount is interested.

Meanwhile, Referee Henry K. Davis

issued a statement pointing out the necessity that creditors of Paramount Publix file proofs of their claims with the referee before September 14. According to Mr. Davis, large numbers of creditors thus far have neglected to file. The statement said the bankruptcy law makes no provisions for extending the time for filing claims, under any circumstances, and that creditors who fail to comply will be barred from participating in bankruptcy dividends.

According to Mr. Davis claims have been filed upon less than $8,000,000 principal amount of Paramount-Famous-Lasky 6 per cent bonds and Paramount Publix Corp. 5½ per cent bonds, out of a total of about $25,000,000 outstanding, indicating that many bondholders are unaware of the necessity of submitting proofs of claims to the referee. It was stated that every individual bondholder or his representatives must file a proof of claim upon his bonds.

Kohn With Paramount 20 Years

Ralph A. Kohn has been associated with Paramount Publix and its predecessor companies for the past 20 years. Immediately on his graduation from law school in 1913, he became a member of the law firm of Elek John Ludvigh, then counsel of Famous Players Film Company, of which Adolph Zukor was president. In 1914, Mr. Kohn was elected assistant general counsel and assistant secretary of Famous Players.

On organization of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in 1916, he was given the same positions in the new company and served in these capacities until 1918, when he was given a leave of absence for the duration of the war. He enlisted as a private in the Signal Corps, and later was commissioned as a second lieutenant.

After the war he returned to Famous Players in his former duties and in 1922 was elected a member of the board of directors and also assistant treasurer. On the formation of Paramount Productions, Inc., Paramount International and Paramount Pictures Distributing in November, 1932, he was elected a director, vice-president and treasurer of each of these three subsidiaries.

Cokell First an Accountant

Walter B. Cokell came from Denver to study at New York University. Upon completion of his course there he returned to his home to enter the railroad business as an accountant. Then followed positions with American Telephone and Telegraph Company, with whom he continued until the World War. After service with the Ordnance Department, Mr. Cokell joined Paramount in May, 1920.

Sam Dembow, Jr., was educated in New York and started his business career as a salesman, variously handling lines ranging from financial securities to paint. In 1913 he joined the sales force of Film Rental Company, owned by William Fox, and remained until 1922. That year he joined Samuel Goldwyn as Pacific coast district manager and one year later joined the Herbert L Rothchild theatre circuit as general manager. Famous Players-Lasky owned one-fourth of this organization and in 1925 it purchased the remainder. Mr. Dembow took charge of all buying and booking of attractions operated by Famous Players, and at the organization of Publix Theatres Corp., became executive vice-president.

Herschel Stuart started his career as a newspaper man and then turned to publicity for chain theatres. He later became general manager for the Hulsey theatres and film exchanges and later was made division manager for Paramount theatres in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. After that he was for eight years Harold B. Franklin's chief of staff, and handled Washington, Oregon and Montana. He then became manager of the Fox Poli circuit, in which capacity he remained for four and one-half years. In 1933 Mr. Stuart joined the RKO Theatres staff as general manager of all RKO theatres under the supervision of Mr. Franklin. He resigned early in the summer.

Threatened Sales Tax Defeated in Colorado

As a result of unusual activity on the part of Duke Dunbar, secretary of the Denver Film Board of Trade, in addition to protests from business men and newspapers, a threatened two per cent sales tax has been dropped. The governor had recommended the tax to the special session of the legislature, and that body is now attempting to raise revenue by other means. Theatres would have been included in the provisions of the sales tax.

Mistress Mary Asks Producers To Try Discovering America Again

by TERRY RAMSAYE

Mistress Mary Pickford, quite contrary, with golden curls, pouting lips and Irish eyes not always too unsophisticated, put on a blue and white polka dotted frock and had some friends to luncheon on a terrace of the Sherry Netherlands in New York one day this week.

It was not precisely an official occasion. Miss Mary, chatting along from the fruit cocktail until quite a distance past the demitasse, for once, spoke her mind with a sharp succinctness of matured executive opinion that no fervid fan would ever believe of his screen lady. It might just as well be admitted now that Miss Pickford, unlike some of the spokesmen of the great creative community of Hollywood and most of its hired hands, does not see the institution of the motion picture as precisely perfect.

"'What are they doing to America?' Miss Pickford quoted a questioner in the round table badinage. "I can tell you one thing— — —

"The other morning, it was only a few days ago in Beverly Hills, I passed the door of my young niece's room, Gwynne—she's only about seventeen and has been raised, oh so carefully, always under the eye of her governess, when Doug or I were not with her —and I heard her singing bits from that song from 'Diamond Lil'—I say 'that song,' just because I'd blush to quote the title line even here.

"NOW WHAT DO YOU SUPPOSE I THINK about a production policy that puts on the screen things that can invade the home—no matter how carefully guarded—with the lyrics of 'Diamond Lil.'

"Such things are not for America and for Americans. It is not our taste, our point of view, our kind of life that is getting on the screen in so many of today's pictures."

"And I am talking about America," Miss Mary reiterated. "New York is a country, a nation unto itself—and so is Hollywood. America is that great big land in between those two countries—and America is where the customers are."

The talk drifted about to this and that and alighted on the fact that Charles Chaplin's autobiography was about to start its appearance in serial publication.

"I do hope that he puts in the story about the time he was the only little boy that did not get an orange for Christmas when he was a forlorn waif in an English orphanage," remarked Mary. "The world does not know, and probably never will, the tremendous vital drama and the desperate sufferings back of the art of Chaplin."

MISS PICKFORD GREW MERRILY REMINISCENT about Chaplin, recalling in glee the time, way back yonder before the wave of Chaplin appreciation started in "better circles," that Sidney Chaplin came to her with an offer of $10,000 a week for four weeks playing opposite Charles.

"'What—play opposite that moustached little pie thrower—Mary Pickford in a pie picture—sir, never!'

"I was handsomely insulted then," Mary remembered, "but you know I shouldn't at all mind working in a picture with him now—except that before Charlie got around to finishing it, they'd probably be wheeling me on the set in an old lady invalid's chair."

To be sure every one knows now what a deep, firm friendship has existed these many years between Mr. Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and Miss Pickford. Many the whimsical story that Miss Mary has to tell of goings on at Pickfair with that trio.

"And I remember how Douglas and I were all on pins the time that we were to introduce Charlie and John Barrymore at dinner at our house. In some things they are so much alike that there was more than a chance that the fur would fly.

"Well it all turned out fine. Douglas and I gave up and retired at two o'clock in the morning and when we came down for breakfast the next morning at seven-thirty they were still sitting at the dinner table, talking so earnestly they didn't hear us come in."

Then the talk got back to pictures again Miss Pickford is in the early stages of thinking about two pictures. She is given to a deal of that before electing to go to work.

"You know," she exclaimed, with a gesture made especially handsome by the glint of the armour of platinum of diamonds about her right wrist, "this motion picture industry would be much better off if everybody has his money taken away from him and he had to go to work—and I include myself, too. All of us, actors, directors, producers and everybody did a better job when we were poor."

MISS PICKFORD IS VERY MUCH ALERT, AS ever, to the evolutions of the art of the screen, and is just now much of the mind that the motion picture has yet to make its adjustments in the assimilation of sound.

"It seems to me," says Miss Mary, "that we still should have motion and pictures in the motion picture. A great deal that had been tediously learned and worked out in the years of the silent picture went overboard with the coming of sound and dialogue. We now must get back to more pantomime, and I think we can use more music. Talk, dialogue, it seems to me, ought to have about some such degree of importance and function as the printed titles of the silent screen had.

"The talking picture has strangely taken on many of the limitations of the stage and the locutions that are forced on the drama of the stage by reason of limitations that the screen can so easily escape. Just to use an old Shakespearian example—the stage sometimes has to say 'this is a horse', but for the pictures we can show them the real horse.

"And, too, since the coming of the motion picture the stage has had to play to minorities and limited rather than general audiences—not the whole country and the whole people. So if we borrow too much from the stage we borrow limitations of audience with it."

EAGLE WITH STRIPE FOR NRA EXCEPTIONS

General Hugh S. Johnson announced this week that a special Blue Eagle, bearing a chevron, or wound stripe, on his breast will be made available for those employers actually unable for specified reasons to enroll under the NRA program. The chevron will bear the reasons and extent of the exception.

Dowling Planning Own Film Company

Eddie Dowling, popular musical comedy star, who has made two motion pictures in the past, is negotiating the formation of a holding company, planning to produce from six to 24 features in the east with various Broadway stage producers. Arthur Hopkins is to be the first.

The company will be capitalized for $500,000, of which Erpi is said to have agreed to supply 50 per cent. The firm has not yet been incorporated. Production will be at the Erpi-controlled Eastern Service Studios, formerly the Paramount Astoria plant. "The Great Adventure," starring Lillian Gish, with Roland Young in support, will be the first. William de Mille will direct, with Mr. Hopkins supervising. Ben Jackson, formerly of Fox, will be production manager and Arthur Edeson cameraman.

Additional deals with other producers are under way. It is understood the arrangement will not interfere with the stage activities of the producers, but calls for their assistance in production.

Utah Exhibitors Decide Handling of Sales Levy

Exhibitors in various cities and towns of Utah will decide whether the new two per cent sales tax will be absorbed or passed on to patrons. A majority vote will decide in each case, with the practice uniform in each community, according to the Intermountain Theatre Owners' Association.

Permit Sunday Shows

The city council of Greenville, Ill., has amended a city ordinance to eliminate restrictions against Sunday showings of motion pictures.

CAMERAMEN BEAT JAILS, BULLETS, RIOTERS IN FILMING CUBAN REVOLT

One Hoisted Into Jail at End of Bayonet; Cars Attacked, Photographers Roughly Handled, Part of Film Burned

The dramatic coup of the military in displacing Dr. Geraldo Machado as president of the Republic of Cuba, came none too soon to deliver from peril some dozen or more intrepid American newsreel cameramen. Despite the dangerous antagonism of the Machadoists toward their filming activities, these newsreel men shot through over the week-end, to the screens of the nation, a pictorial record of one of the most gripping screen stories of recent history, of blood and joy, destruction and vengeance, showing fighting, cheering mobs as they swept the streets of Havana, storming homes, looting the Presidential Palace, which Dr. Machado found it advisable to abandon so hastily.

The film records which reached New York home offices and newsreel laboratories between Sunday and Monday, caught the hysteria of what appears to be all of Havana's 600,000 native and Oriental population cheering wildly the abdication of Machado.

Fires are shown raging throughout the city as the contents of elaborate mansions are thrown from the windows to the anti-Machadoists.

Finally, from the hysterical joy, the mob turns to a more venomous mood and crowds break up into small armed groups, pursuing Machado cohorts about the city, murder bent.

One of the gangs even paused proudly in the act of "pumping" forty bullets into Colonel Jiminez, head of the secret Cuban police, long enough to pose for Paramount's cameraman, James A. Buchanan.

Theatres Closed Two Weeks

And in Cuban exhibition and exchange circles, too, there appeared to be cause for celebrating the newly created possibilities, under the new provisional president, Manuel de Cespedes, for supplanting chaos with peaceful home life and orderly business. Not a coin had passed over the box-office counters of Cuban theatres for two weeks, until Wednesday afternoon. Houses in the interior will open gradually.

Foreign managers in New York for some time had heard stories from the island about the serious effect of the reign of terror on theatre business. For the past two years hundreds of Havana residents have not dared venture forth from their homes at night.

The newsreel cameramen got negatives out of Cuba under almost insurmountable difficulties. David Oliver, Universal's man, literally was hoisted into jail by the seat of his pants before a Cuban bayonet when he appeared in the streets of Havana with his camera. One strange bit of irony was the repeated arrest of Buchanan of Paramount, who finally was ordered from the country last week by President Machado. A few hours later Machado himself was forced to flee the island. Luckily the revolution triumphed before the order against Mr. Buchanan could be enforced.

In the meantime newsreel representatives frantically were cabling New York for aid in obtaining governmental intervention in their arrests. For some 48 consecutive hours crews were at their posts in the New York newsreel offices, awaiting negatives, and contacting Washington, Havana and elsewhere.

Because of the strict telegraphic censorship, Paramount News referred to ex-President Machado in cablegrams as "Aunt Mary."

Cameramen Under Guard

Each of the cameramen reported that at the start of the revolution they were placed under guard and a strict ruling against filming was enforced by Machado. Communications to and from New York had to be written in code. Paramount's Buchanan, as others, fought vigorously for permission of authorities to "shoot" the historical events. Last Thursday, Buchanan wired New York: "No credentials yet. Ambassador Sumner Welles (mediator in the Cuban upheaval) trying to secure. They don't mean much. Can't take cameras out of our hotel (Plaza, Havana), because of guards. Each door carefully watched."

The Paramount newsreel official in New York replied, by cable: "Remove to Saratoga Hotel as nicer location. Get big, airy room with plenty windows, as it must be hot." Knowing his Havana, the Paramount executive realized that the Saratoga Hotel afforded a better strategic spot for filming. And, in view of the fact that at that time the bar was up against photographing on the street, he reasoned that shots could be taken directly from the hotel room. It was merely a reminder to Buchanan not to forget lighting angles in case of "inside" filming. Machado's flight, however, lessened the difficulties.

Working with Mr. Buchanan, for Paramount, were staff cameraman Lou Hutt; soundman, George Westbrook, and three native photographers hastily enlisted and placed in strategic positions around the city.

As soon as the rioting broke out, cameramen

got to work in the open. But even then a photographer could scarcely set up his camera before a threatening mob would surround it. Other instances repeatedly were reported of cameramen with their long-lens cameras being mistaken for machine gunners. In still other cases enthusiastic mobs would capture a cameraman and drag him along with them to take pictures of their activities, while they posed near the bodies of pro-Machado victims.

On Saturday afternoon, when the rioting was at its height, practically all the newsreel men in Havana rushed to the Pan-American airport to get their negatives out of the country. Their arrival at the field was met by several thousand blood-thirsty Cubans. The cameramen's cars were attacked, many of the photographers were roughly handled, much of the film was burned or destroyed, cameras were broken, and noses, too. The mob opened fire on the plane and drove it off the field before any of the pictures could be placed aboard..

Early Sunday morning, in conjunction with the Associated Press man, Paramount News obtained the only plane then available in Miami and flew it across the channel to Havana. Buchanan secretly put out in a small motor launch, meeting the plane outside the harbor. Within a few minutes, the seaplane was nosing for the Florida shore, carrying a complete pictorial record of the revolution and its horrors. At Miami a fresh relay of planes rushed the film to the laboratories on West 44th Street in New York. Prints were on Broadway Monday night.

Run Ragged by Rioters

Typical shots were the crowds ransacking Machado's palace, tearing down the monuments, Lt. Col. Erasmo Delago leading the Cuban army in revolt against Machado, and the slaying of Col. Jiminez.

Truman Talley, director of Movietone News, paid tribute to all the cameramen. "Their filming of the revolution was more of a story of personal heroism of the newsreel photographers than one of newsreel enterprise," he said. "The men were run ragged day and night while shooting the incidents. When a mob is out to murder, they don't want cameramen around to take pictures of their crimes, which would serve as evidence."

Heading Mr. Talley's Cuban staff assigned to the revolution was James Painter, regular staff photographer, and three others were brought to the island from the mainland, including I. Miller.

Fox also rushed negatives by plane from Cuba to Miami, and thence to the laboratories at Tenth avenue and 55th street, New York. Principal shots showed the rioting and murderous activities of the thousands of revolting Cubans, the burning of police cars, raids on Machado's palace and on the homes of his lieutenants.

Almost coincident with the recent release of Universal's two-reel subject, "The World's Greatest Thrills," depicting newsreel cameramen at work in tight spots, came word from Havana of the attack by revolutionists upon David Oliver, Universal headline shooter.

Assigned by cable to cover the Cuban rebellion, Mr. Oliver experienced one of his most exciting eposodes when, with Leo Reisler,

GERMAN PRODUCT DECLINE OPENS EASTERN EUROPE TO U. S. PICTURES

Exhibitors of 15 Smaller Countries, Uncertain as to Where Their Programs Are to Come From, Look to Hollywood Now

by ENDRE HEVESI
Special Budapest Correspondent

Exhibitors in central and eastern Europe are looking to Hollywood to recover lost prestige in the motion picture market, now that production in Adolf Hitler's Germany has made a precipitous decline. The status in Hungary mirrors a condition which has developed in a dozen or more countries, a condition distinctly favorable to American distributors and producers, outside of Germany and France with their severe quota restrictions.

Until the advent of talking pictures, American product had reigned supreme in Hungary. But when talkers came in, exhibitors naturally preferred those made in a language which the entire intelligentsia of Hungary speaks, besides its Magyar mother tongue. The major part of audiences in Budapest, the capital, understands German, and this fact accounts for the three-year slump in American pictures, and the boom in German talkers.

Hires 800-Seat Theatre

Local branches of American companies began to realize that, since exhibitors were shying at American pictures, their one hope was to reconquer audiences for Hollywood by exhibiting in their own theatres. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer accordingly leased Radius theatre, a house seating 800 and decidedly in the red, three years ago. The purpose was to show MGM pictures, but at the same time to popularize American pictures in Hungary again. Months went by while the public gradually found its way into the Radius theatre again. It attracted a high-brow public at first, but finished by conquering the masses for Hollywood product once more. Most critics are turning strongly against German product, not so much for political reasons but because of a preference for American artistry. Now a strong tendency in favor of American-mades is making itself felt throughout.

The history of Radius' three years is instructive for American producers and distributors. This is certainly the moment to win back lost ground on the European market. Production in Germany has gone down tremendously, and the limited number of pictures produced offers less attraction for other countries. Hungary, Austria, Switzerland, Holland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Finland, Esthonia, Poland, Rumania, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Greece were all tributaries to German pictures for several years, but now they are buying fewer films from Nazi Germany. Exhibitors are in absolute uncertainty, not knowing what pictures they will have for showing this season.

One reason American pictures retreated in most of these small countries was that the branch offices gave in too easily to their German competitors. Radius in Budapest offers an example of how to fight successfully for the prestige of American pictures in all the more important European cities. It will be far easier to follow this example now, when German pictures have lost so much ground, than it was to take up the problem three years ago when German pictures were trumps.

American Ballyhoo Used

The local representatives of MGM realized that it did not suffice to exhibit good American pictures, but it was necessary to advertise them a l'Americain. European audiences are far more susceptible to American exploitation methods than the American public itself, which has grown hardened.

Before the opening of "Hell Divers" the management, in conjunction with the Hungarian Aero Association arranged an aerial exhibit which 35,000 persons visited. The winner of a contest for the best criticism of the picture was awarded an aerial trip to Paris.

Before the opening of a Greta Garbo picture, Radius, in conjunction with a Budapest daily newspaper, arranged a contest to find the Hungarian girl who bore the strongest likeness to Miss Garbo. This resemblance contest proved such a success that it was repeated on the opening of "Grand Hotel," with doubles for six principals honored. The opening of "Grand Hotel" was the first "Hollywood premiere" in Hungary. Attila Petschauer, fencing champion, was broadcasting announcer. Society turned out in full force, with the Regent, Nicholas de Horthy and his wife, also present.

These few examples show the way American films were reinstated in one theatre. The coming season is the time for American producers to reconquer the European market by the method which MGM used in Budapest by managing their own theatres or at least by having a say in publicity matters. American propaganda in Europe must be original, novel, and inexpensive. The European market cannot be burdoned by costly advertising, but a clever idea may work wonders.

Reviewers Must Sign Form At Warner New York Houses

The Warner advertising and publicity department at the home office, by letter signed by S. Charles Einfeld, department director, has informed press representatives who review films that, as a result of a new regulation of the government, the company must return an affidavit giving the names, addresses, signatures and reasons for attendance at the theatre on all tax free admissions.

All holders of the passes will be required, according to the letter, personally to sign a form which will be kept at the box office by the cashier, having pass number, signature and address of the holder. A guest accompanying the reviewer will have to pay the tax, the letter said.

Watterson, Who Found Berlin, Dies

Henry Watterson, the man who is credited with having given Irving Berlin his start, and who was generally known in and about New York as the dean of "Tin Pan Alley," died suddenly last week at his summer home in Porter's Corners, near Saratoga Springs, N. Y., of heart disease. He was 63 years old.

Mr. Watterson, virtually stone deaf, and knowing nothing about the reading of music, was chiefly identified with the "ragtime" melody so popular in the early part of the century. He had an uncanny ability to call the turn on public preference six months ahead, and organized the Grand Radio Company as early as 1920. Other interests included mines and industrial chemical plants. At the time of his death, he, with his son, Henry, Jr., was interested in a health machine imported from Germany which he was about to market.

In 1912 Mr. Watterson bought the music publishing house of Ted Snyder. Later he met Irving Berlin, and the result was a series of popular melodies which made fortunes for both. In gratitude Mr. Watterson took Berlin into the firm, calling it Watterson, Berlin and Snyder, a name it still bears. Mr. Watterson is survived by his widow and a son.

Fight Paramount Trustees in Court

Samuel Zirn, attorney for a Paramount bondholders' group, has filed an action in the circuit court of appeals, New York, appealing a decision against the removal of Paramount Publix trustees. The action may be heard late in October.

Referee Henry K. Davis is scheduled to hear, on September 6, a proposed settlement of a controversy between Paramount Publix and Fox Film arising out of a west coast theatre leasing agreement. The difficulty developed from an agreement by which Fox was to lease 10 Coast properties from Paramount.

In his original action Zirn charged the then Paramount trustees, Charles D. Hilles. Eugene W. Leake and Louis J. Horowitz with "not being qualified." Referee Davis was charged in the complaint with being "disqualified by bias."

The Criterion and Loew's New York theatres property, held by a Paramount Publix realty subsidiary, will be sold at public auction during November unless an acceptable offer for the property is received by the Paramount Publix trustees in the interim. It was publicly advertised for sale recently by the trustees but no bids were received.

COMMITTEES SPEEDING WINDUP OF COORDINATING INDUSTRY CODES

Subjects Reported Awaiting Public Hearing Include Double Bills, Open Buying, Playdates, Score Charges, Rejections

The industry entered the second week of its official code drafting, under orders from Sol A. Rosenblatt, deputy administrator for amusements under the National Recovery Act, with a completed production code, a superficially-completed distribution code, and disagreements on several proposals in the exhibition code, completed Tuesday at midnight.

Charles L. O'Reilly, exhibitor coordinator, said late Wednesday that "without a doubt a tentative draft of the industry code would be completed some time Thursday," indicating that the distributors and exhibitors will have completed the coordination of their respective drafts. It appeared, however, that certain important clauses will not be adjusted until later, possibly not until the official NRA hearing on the industry code at Washington.

Sidney R. Kent, distributor coordinator, presented to the exhibitors' committee late Wednesday the distributor recommendations for inclusion in the exhibition code. Subcommittees were at work throughout Wednesday night adjusting the codes and at 10 o'clock Thursday morning the exhibitors' and distributors' committees of the whole were to begin final coordination.

The distribution code was finished Monday with the exception of five specific proposals set aside for the coming public hearing in Washington. These were: open market buying, picture rejection privileges, score charges, double featuring and designated playdates. It is understood that the exhibition committee agreed on all proposals except the five already mentioned, the four Allied members standing pat in their views.

On Wednesday, Sidney R. Kent, coordinator for production and distribution, met with Charles L. O'Reilly, coordinator for exhibition, in the rooms of the Association of the Bar Building, to begin coordinating the exhibition and distribution codes. They were still coordinating at press time.

Windup Thursday Awaited

The production code, completed early Saturday morning, was destined to stand with few changes, Mr. Kent said. Wherever any of its proposals affected any activities other than production, they were passed on to the distribution committee for coordination only between exhibition and distribution codes. With but one exception, all of the production code provisions were adopted unanimously by the committee, Mr. Kent said, and in this one case the one dissenting vote reserved the right to present an opposing viewpoint at Washington.

Nothing in the production code calls for any salary reductions for studio personnel, Mr. Kent said, this to be left to the individual companies.

Louis B. Mayer, on his return to Hollywood this week, had been quoted as saying he expected the industry code to provide for downward salary adjustments for high-salaried executives and many lesser actors, but that stars under contract would not be made to bear the brunt of the revisions.

Joseph M. Schenck, en route to the Coast this week, said at Kansas City that the production code would be submitted to Mr. Rosenblatt Wednesday and that among the most important provisions was the prohibition of "star raids and secret and premature agreements and negotiations between studios and contract players belonging to another studio." He said a minimum wage for extras had been set at $3 a day with no guarantee on any number of work days. Mr. Schenck said the code did not call for cuts in the salaries of executives or contract players.

Labor provisions for studio and production employees not under contract were included in the code. Hour and wage provisions for studio union employees were to be drawn later, after conferences late this week in New York.

The Agents' code will be heard separately in Washington, Mr. Kent said. Most of its provisions relate to contract workers.

On the production committee placing the code in its legal form were B. B. Kahane, RKO Radio; J. Robert Rubin, MGM; H. S. Bareford, Warner-First National; Nathan Burkan, Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, and Edward Loeb, counsel for several Coast studios.

"There is no doubt," Mr. Kent said, "but what the coordinating committees will complete a whole code for the industry without outside assistance and, moreover, with a minimum of proposals left to Washington for settlement."

60 Items in Exhibition Code

"The job of Mr. Kent and myself as coordinators has been to secure as much agreement as possible, leaving a minimum of proposals for controversial discussion in Washington," Charles L. O'Reilly, coordinator for exhibition, said Wednesday in announcing completion of the exhibition code. "What we have been unable to agree on among ourselves, as well as what we may not be able to coordinate with the other branches, will have to be settled by the deputy administrator."

Some 60 separate items comprise the exhibition code, which fundamentally is based on the code draft drawn up by the MPTOA in Chicago early in July. A draft of this code was published in the July 22 issue of Motion Picture Herald.

Disposition of these 60 proposals had been accomplished by midnight Tuesday, and as fast as each one had been voted on it was sent to distribution committee members for action. As soon as the proposals were returned, they were collaborated into a whole and submitted to the distributor committee for formal coordination with the distribution code.

The committee on Wednesday went to work on communications sent in from exhibitors in all parts of the country. These were being carefully considered and placed under the heading of miscellaneous addenda.

That double features in all probability will be left to local opinion was the general sentiment. Open buying, when it comes before the deputy administrator, quite possibly will be left out of the code, according to distributor opinion. Score charges as such are, in the opinion of many, an annoyance which has no particular significance to either distributor or exhibitor. As to designated playdates, a distributor pointed out Wednesday that the only films on which dates are designated are percentage pictures. Rejection privileges, for which the Allied members of the exhibition committee want a cancellation of 20 per cent, are expected to be the subject of much discussion within the committee at the hearing, with most exhibitors reported opposed to that high a percentage as encouraging overbuying.

There may be coordination of some of the five proposals before the Washington hearings, an official source said late Wednesday.

While Mr. Rosenblatt was bringing pressure to bear on the committees' work, Mr. O'Reilly said Wednesday that the deputy administrator realized fully that coordination of the wishes and desires of some 15,000 live businesses, with their problems of many years' standing, could not be finished as quickly as if the committee represented only sixty.

"He appears satisfied with our progress," Mr. O'Reilly said.

When the Washington hearings get under way the opponents of specific proposals will be allowed their say.

COMERFORD AND KUYKENDALL DRAFTED

M. E. Comerford and Ed Kuykendall have been drafted by the President to serve as national administrators of the Recovery Act in their respective states. These appointments will not interfere with their present code activities.

Box Office Receipts Show Large Increase; Movement for Added Employment and Higher Pay Shows Results

Increased Business Reported

With the Blue Eagle of the National Recovery Administration flying over most of Broadway theatres this week, the various units of the film industry took up the job of creating new jobs and raising wages. Exchanges, equipment dealers, premium and poster supply dealers as well were indicating that they were "doing their part."

Home offices of all major and independent companies were showing the Blue Eagle in conspicuous places.

Throughout the country theatre men reported increases in box-office intake. In Chicago business was recorded as better than it has been for six years and the theatre men were said to have "only begun to realize what it means to be a World's Fair town." Employees were added in many exchanges.

From Buffalo came word that all exchanges had adopted the 40-hour week and that all theatres were operating under the NRA.

All Saenger theatres in the New Orleans territory hoisted the Blue Eagle despite the fact that striking stagehands, musicians and projectionists had opposed the action on the charge that receiver E. V. Richards had locked out his union employees and decreased salaries. All exchanges in the sector were taking steps to acquire the NRA emblem.

To conform with the NRA code, John Hamrick, owner of the five Hamrick theatres in Portland, Ore., announced a rearrangement of working and pay schedules for all his employees.

Reflecting the box office upturn in Kansas was the statement by W. H. Eggleston, Atwood, Kan., exhibitor, that with run-of-the-mill product and with no special campaign, the last 10 days of July had shown a 200 per cent increase at his theatre over the preceding 20 days.

The Eastman Kodak plant at Rochester reports that its manufactures are almost on a level with 1926 and will increase employment and wages when the photographic code goes into effect.

BLUE EAGLE FLIES OVER INDUSTRY

NRA Film Drive Enlists Exhibitors

The fullest facilities of the motion picture industry are to be called upon in an intensive campaign to "put over" the national recovery drive, according to plans now nearing completion by Frank R. Wilson, motion picture pioneer and head of the propaganda division of the National Recovery Administration. Screen stars are to be enlisted in the production of a series of short dramas depicting recovery themes, the raw stock for which will be supplied from a donation of 600,000 feet tendered by J. E. Brulator.

The campaign will be made without cost to the government, and the production and distribution of these pictures, as well as trailers, are being donated by various branches of the industry.

Joseph I. Breen, chairman of the production committee of the NRA motion picture publicity drive, met in Hollywood Tuesday with the heads of the eight large studios, who agreed to produce individually one short subject running 250 feet showing the story of the human side of reemployment and portrayed by leading stars. The producers will attempt to persuade President Roosevelt to open their drive with these subjects on September in theatres throughout the country.

By August 25 one thousand prints from each studio will be despatched direct to theatres. Actual production is in the hands of William Holman, Columbia; Edward Ofearma, Fox; Jack Cummings, MGM; Merritt Herlburt, Paramount; Glen Alvine, Radio; Robert Fairbanks, United Artists; Warren Doane, Universal; George Thomas and George Bilson, Warner-First National.

In a letter to 15,000 exhibitors, John C. Flinn, of the motion picture division of the NRA, outlined the campaign as follows:

"The motion picture industry, characteristic of its patriotic spirit expressed frequently in the past, has mobilized its vast resources as a channel of information in behalf of the President's emergency re-employment campaign under the National Recovery Administration.

"You are earnestly requested to communicate immediately with the local campaign chairman of your community and present this letter of formal notification as an indication on your part to cooperate with local activities to the extent of your time and ability for volunteer service.

"You will receive prior to week of August 20 an official film trailer manufactured and distributed through the generosity of Messrs. Herman Robbins, of National Screen Service; Alan E. Freeman, De Luxe Film Laboratory, and J. E. Brulator. This trailer, with its timely and effective message, should be exhibited at every performance in your theatre throughout the week commencing August 20. There will be no charge for this trailer.

"On or about September 1, you will receive through the distributing offices of National Screen Service the first of a series of six or more short motion picture feature films of approximately 250 feet in length, produced through the generosity of some of the largest studios, prepared by outstanding authors of the stage and screen and featuring world famous stars. The companies which have volunteered this generous cooperation are Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, Universal, Columbia, United Artists, RKO, Harold Lloyd, and others."

ments in the United States because of the probability that the new policies under the film code will have a direct effect on business in Canada.

Reports from Hollywood Monday indicated that protection of extras under the code is under consideration. Telegrams were dispatched to J. T. Reed in New York by the Academy.

Adoption of the NRA blanket code by individual theatres and circuits is said to have added 18,000 employees and increased the industry's weekly payroll by $250,000. The Loew payroll is understood to have been increased by $15,000 a week; Warner, $16,000; RKO, over $5,000; Balaban & Katz, nearly $7,000.

Representatives of actors, producers, stage unions and dramatists joined in approval of the legitimate theatre's code Thursday at the public hearing in Washington.

At the theatre hearing Mr. Sol A. Rosenblatt read a telegram from Sidney R. Kent, who placed the motion picture industry on record as agreeing to the provision in the theatre code against "stealing" of actors from stage plays for films and asking a reciprocal provision.

Independents Make Proposals on Code

Independent exhibitors, representing 45 theatres in New York, Wednesday presented recommendations to the exhibition code committee. The recommendations were compiled by Lee A. Ochs, president of the Ochs Theatre Circuit, from representations made to him by Consolidated Amusement Enterprises, Inc., and the Manhattan Playhouses, Inc., both operating theatres in the metropolitan area.

Included in the recommendations were specific proposals for elimination of protection, compelling of exhibitors to play unsuitable product, withholding of films contracted for, withdrawals, substitutions, double features, score charges, and broadcasting by motion picture stars during certain hours.

Objection to the present form of contract and a request for the writing of "a uniform contract by the Administrator" are made. Give-aways, added attractions, gifts, lucky numbers, two-for-ones, personal appearances, contests and amateur acts are opposed.

The report recommends formation of a federal board to regulate all differences within the industry so that "once and for all time, truly fair competition and a square deal would be guaranteed to all divisions of the industry."

Harmon Yaffer, of Consolidated, and Mr. Ochs submitted the recommendations—printed in a 16-page booklet—to each of the exhibitor members of the code committee Wednesday. No announcement regarding action on the proposals was made by the committee, which already had started coordinating its code with the distribution code.

NRA Request to End Strike Waited

The inspiring NRA letters appear to be the "open sesame" to the studio strike deadlock in Hollywood. There is expected momentarily from official channels a request to both strikers and studios to "forget it" and get back to work, with all arguments to be taken up later.

The NRA was considering, late Wednesday, the advisability of asking studios to adopt the legal provisions of the proposed industry code as a means of settling the difficulties, even prior to NRA acceptance of the code.

Some place along the striking front, someone seems to have dropped the gentle "hint" that studio officials and union leaders call an abrupt halt to bickering and negotiations for a settlement and place the problem in the hands of an arbitration board in which the American Federation of Labor and the labor board of the National Recovery Administration will participate. This decision was reached in Hollywood at a conference of strike leaders and film producers with Timothy A. Reardon, state director of industrial relations, who was appointed mediator by Governor James Rolph, Jr., on specific request from the NRA. Mr. Reardon said the factions had agreed to recognize government methods for harmony.

Following the opening of the strike several weeks ago, IATSE and the electrical union, IBEW, had disputed the right of each to control sound technicians. Producers said they were unable to negotiate with either group without incurring the enmity of the other. This was one of the chief obstacles to a settlement and will be referred to the meeting of the board of the American Federation in Washington in October.

Governor Rolph was asked over the week-end by the National Labor Board to appoint a coordinator, and if the governor's appointee. Mr. Reardon, failed to effect a settlement, the board indicated it would take up the matter.

Following conferences early in the week with Mr. Reardon, Governor Rolph received assurances from Leo Wolman, NRA representative in Los Angeles, that the industry code would be pushed with all speed to settle labor difficulties in Hollywood.

Mr. Reardon met later with representatives of the IATSE and the IBEW, and the IATSE and the Electrical Brotherhood agreed to let the American Federation of Labor settle the question of jurisdiction over soundmen.

Both Hollywood unions demanded there be no discrimination in the rehiring of striking sound technicians.

The presence at the Reardon conferences with union executives, of federal labor conciliators Fitzgerald and Marsh, and of W. H. Evans, NRA representative, is believed to have expedited the unions' agreement to have the matter arbitrated by the NRA and the AFL.

Erpi Signs Blanket Code

Electrical Research Products, Inc., on Wednesday signed the blanket code under the National Recovery Act.

EQUITY DRAFTS CODE TO REGULATE STAGE PLAYERS IN HOLLYWOOD

Speculation as to Whether New Move for Equity Shop Is Underway Left in Air by President Gillmore

Actors' Equity Association this week launched its sixth attempt to regulate the affairs of the actor from Broadway's legitimate stage who is attracted to Hollywood's motion picture studio.

Equity began drawing up a code which will deal with wages and working hours for players engaged in actual film production, provide against voluntary release by a producing manager of any actor to permit his employment in motion pictures, prevent inducement of any sort by a motion picture producer to breach contract during the run of an attraction. (An account of individual moves by Sidney R. Kent and Lee Shubert to prohibit star "raiding" appears on page 28.) Several other matters will be treated in the code, said Frank Gillmore, Equity president, but he declined to make specific explanation.

Code Going to NRA

The organization, by its latest effort to assume jurisdiction in the motion picture field, is merely proclaiming itself as a bona fide representative of a large group of actors in the films, Mr. Gillmore said. To speculation in theatre circles as to whether this code project signalizes a new fight to obtain an Equity shop in the film business, Mr. Gillmore replied cryptically: "These times are so wild and wooly, we cannot tell what will happen from one day to another."

"We naturally are not going to make public any information at this time," he added. "It is only fair and proper that the Recovery Administration carefully considers our proposals before we give out any of the details."

Questioned as to the direct purpose of the proposed code, Mr. Gillmore said it was designed for the protection of "the vast numbers of our members who are in Hollywood engaged in the rigors of motion picture production."

"We cannot prevent our members from deserting the stage for the more lucrative pursuits of the West Coast," he said. "Nor would we if we could. But so long as they remain Equity members in good standing it is our duty first and last to protect them, to see that they get fair play from all and to prevent their becoming enmeshed in the webs of unfair practice. It is not within the province of any organization to countenance the breaking of contracts. This is a practice which has occurred time and again in the theatre and it must be stopped."

In 1929 Equity waged its severest war with Hollywood in trying to obtain all-Equity casts and the Equity contract in this industry. A 10-week strike of Equity members on the Coast resulted in a tactical victory for the producers. Equity also was defeated in similar campaigns in 1919, 1922, 1924 and 1927.

The fracas in 1929 started early in June when Mr. Gillmore went to Hollywood to attempt to promote an eight-hour working day for actors. At that time Equity maintained considerabe influence over the acting branch of the industry. Mr. Gillmore explained the move at that time as follows:

"My study of the situation disclosed the fact that the phenomenal success of sound and talking motion pictures created such a demand for actors whose voices record well that members of our association have gone into them in droves. Many complete casts in Hollywood are made up entirely of Equity members. Recently conditions in the studios, as far as the actors are concerned, have been going from bad to worse. Many producers have been working their people unconscionable hours, and keeping it up day after day."

Early in June of 1929 Willard Mack and Lionel Barrymore, both Equity members, came out squarely opposed to the project. The Equity order, which required that all casts must be Equity casts and that actors must work under none but Equity contracts, involved some 2,500 actors.

Advisory Board Dissolved

When the producers, independents and majors alike, challenged Equity's move with the declaration that they would "continue to engage artists for our productions only under the fair and just form of contract which was formulated by representatives of both producers and motion picture actors," Mr. Gillmore dissolved the Advisory Board of Equity. The producers declared they would close every studio rather than accede to Equity's demands.

Many stars, Equity members, signed non-Equity contracts. Fewer and fewer were the numbers of actors supporting the Equity move as June drew to a close. More than 175 Equity members had signed producers' contracts between June 4 and June 25 of 1929.

Demands of actors for a true representation in the dispute brought a new phase of the issue before the production branch early in July. This demand was climaxed by a move by Conrad Nagel to obtain 30 required signatures on a petition to Mr. Gillmore for a closed meeting. Mr. Gillmore declared the petition invalid, after a series of events that brought some sharp clashes. A meeting at the Beverly Wilshire hotel was beclouded when 150 Equity "loyalists" entered and hurled charges of "traitor" and "Judas" at the conferees. Fists flew.

Gradually the Equity move faded and in July producers were making all the pictures they wished to produce.

Fred Datig, chairman of the casting directors' committee, announced names of 268 who had signed contracts since June 5. At the end of July 350 had signed the new contracts of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. The Academy had been formed shortly after the Nagel petition for actor representation.

And late in August Mr. Gillmore called off the Equity shop movement.

ROOSEVELT TALKS ABOUT NEW RELIEF

President Roosevelt on Tuesday summoned his recovery council into session for agreement upon a new plan, details of which were not made known, whereby the federal drive toward better times will be more closely coordinated.

Under discussion were not only the business man and the wage earner, but the farmer and those who are being maintained through charitable sources.

Merely Proclaiming Itself Bona Fide Repreesntative of Large Number of Actors, Says Gillmore; Five Efforts Defeated

Schenck Predicts Early Prosperity

Voicing a prediction of record business by all industry in the country within a few months as a result of President Roosevelt's NRA program, Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, stated this week his utter confidence in the national recovery plan.

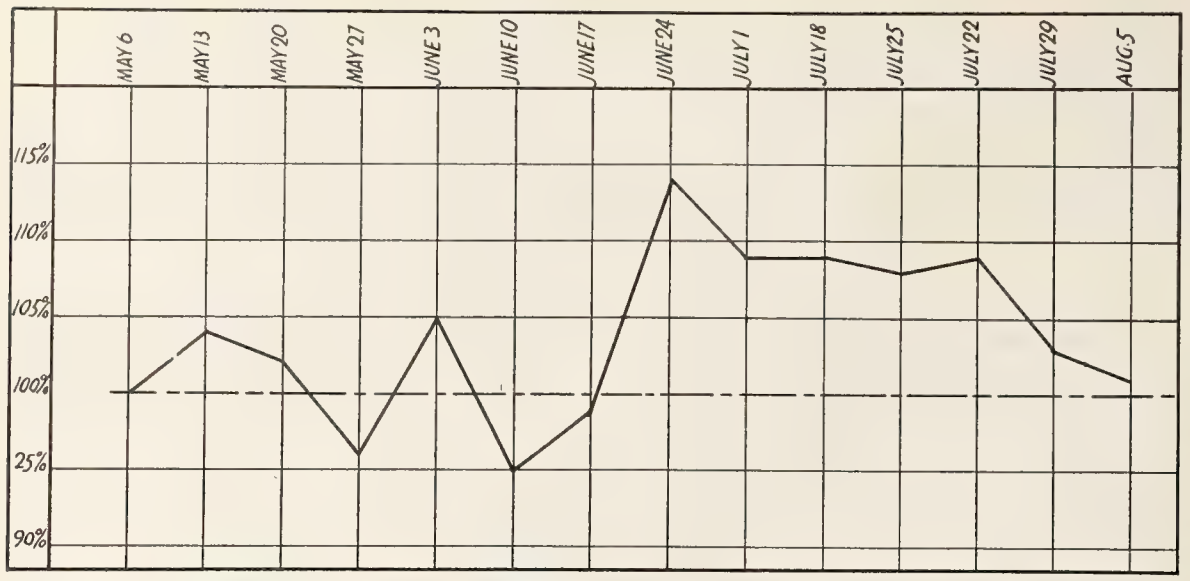
Mr. Schenck pointed to his recent formation, with Darryl Zanuck, of Twentieth Century Pictures as evidence of his confidence in the future. "I am producing more pictures than ever before, and am putting all my own money into the venture," he said.

Mr. Schenck also announced that working hours in the home office and throughout the country have been reduced without any reduction in compensation, although hours were always above the minimum of code requirements. The same policy is being followed in production on the Coast, he said. "I feel certain that this year will see a decided increase in revenue everywhere. We intend to pass this new prosperity on to our employees, and, at the first opportunity, we are going to increase wages."

The United Artists studio is now employing over 1,200, which compares with 300 at this time last year, Mr. Schenck said, chiefly as a result of the organization of Twentieth Century. The sales personnel has been increased 10 per cent, from 469 at this time last year to a total employed today of 512.

"Film Curb" Moves

"Film Curb," independent monthly trade journal, will move next week to new quarters in the RKO Building, Rockefeller Center, New York.



The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's weekly compilation of box office grosses, indicates the changes in receipts during the fourteen-week period from May 6 to August 5 in twelve key cities. The 100 per cent line represents the business done during the first week of this period. The cities used are Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Hollywood, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Portland and San Francisco.

Hochreich Attacks Procedure on Code

Protestations against socalled "star chamber" sessions for drafting a motion picture code were voiced late last week by David R. Hochreich, former independent sound equipment distributor, who, in a supposedly private communication to General Hugh S. Johnson, NRA administrator, denounced the action of Sol. A. Rosenblatt in appointing committees of representative industry leaders to coordinate all previous code efforts. Simultaneously, Mr. Hochreich issued copies of his letter to General Johnson to the press.

Attempts to upset the industry's code activities were made by Mr. Hochreich, who coincidentally is trying to stage a comeback in the film business, following the general industry code conference last week. Hochreich recently sued Erpi and its affiliated Western Electric interests for some $65,000,000, claiming damages for a number of alleged grievances, principally supposedly unfair competitive actions of the electrics.

Mr. Hochreich will be remembered for his activities in connection with Vocafilm, which he said was unsuccessful in marketing sound equipment at the beginning of the talker era. Later he became associated with the Schlesinger interests in a sales capacity in General Talking Pictures, but in recent years he has remained quiet.

Using a press "blast" on the Erpi suit as the signal for his return to the business Mr. Hochreich followed up with an announcement of a company called America's Theatres Corporation, which he said will produce, distribute and exhibit motion pictures on a wholesale scale, and participate prominently in marketing motion picture theatre equipment.

Mr. Hochreich's newest "broadside" to General Johnson and to the press said that he had attended the general industry code conference at the New York Bar Association Building last week, fully "prepared to discuss certain phases of the proposed codes submitted, but it was decided by your deputy administrator (Sol Rosenblatt), that all matters pertaining to the code were to be discussed at private meetings of producer and distributor representatives, thus not affording an open hearing to anyone whose interests are vitally affected by the code to be finally adopted."

Mr. Hochreich's charges, however, do not appear to be supported by the record. At the opening session, Mr. Rosenblatt repeatedly invited discussion and code suggestions from the floor. Several individuals, of both independent and large interests, responded. Mr. Rosenblatt then said that any and all problems should be taken up with the two industry coordinators, Sidney R. Kent and Charles L. O'Reilly, and that if anyone does not get the proper attention from the coordinators, "let me hear from you." Mr. Rosenblatt emphatically said, "There is no problem too small and none too large to get attention." Public and private statements voiced both by independent and major executives, following the conference with Mr. Rosenblatt, indicated that this was generally understood.

Nor does it appear that Mr. Hochreich attempted to participate in or discuss his socalled "problems" at any of the many and various meetings of independents held previously for purposes of formulating tentative code drafts.

Mr. Hochreich's letter said that if an industry code regulates admission prices, 5,000 theatres will be added to the "8,000 houses already dark."

Erpi Will Continue Its Service Charges

Erpi intends to continue service charges and furnish replacement parts at current rates, the company announced in a letter sent to all licensees and signed by H. G. Knox, vice-president.

A court decision, referred to in the letter, is the temporary injunction issued by the federal court in Wilmington on July 26 in three suits. The injunction, according to the letter, applies only to those parts of the contract which require exhibitors to get their replacement parts from Erpi and limits distribution of Western Electric recorded pictures to Erpi reproducers.

Paramount Resumes Chevalier Film Without Sylvia Sidney

Paramount's case against Sylvia Sidney for walking out on Chevalier's "Way to Love" rested this week, temporarily, at least, with the borrowing of Ann Dvorak, from Warners, to succeed Miss Sidney, and the decision of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts, through its conciliation committee, to postpone the Sidney hearing for three weeks, on request of the producer.

Showmen to Write Warner Campaign

Warner's advertising department, under the direction of S. Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity, has inaugurated a new exploitation method, by which exhibitors themselves will prepare exploitation campaigns. The policy will be initiated with "Bureau of Missing Persons."

An Exploitation Advisory Board has been formed, including in its membership Earle Holden, manager of the Georgia theatre, Atlanta; Lou Metzger, Spreckels theatres, San Diego, and Harry Goldberg, in charge of Warner theatre advertising in Philadelphia.

Independent exhibitors as well as Warner theatre managers are represented on the advisory board, according to the announcement, and the board is expected to be enlarged later. Regular conferences will be held.

George O. Weeden, Noted Theatrical Agent, Dead

George Orlando Weeden, 64, president of the Weeden & Schultz Agency, Inc., vaudeville booking concern, and long a prominent figure on Broadway, died last week at his New York home of pneumonia. He had been ill for several weeks. His career embraced newspaper work, fight promotion, bicycle racing, theatrical production, racing stable ownership and management of actors.

Eastern Allied Units Will Meet September 5

All Allied units east of Pittsburgh will hold an annual convention at Atlantic City September 5-7. Leaders are being requested to forward statistics on the conditions in their respective territories.

Allied of New Jersey, which originally planned to hold its meeting on the designated days, will join the other units and, in addition, will elect officers for the new year. Sidney Samuelson is expected to be re-elected president of the unit.

26 from Universal for Seventh Avenue Roxy

Completion of negotiations Monday for the showing of at least 26 of Universal's new product at the Seventh Avenue Roxy in New York marks the signing of the first line of large company product into this theatre since the long-time Fox contract ran out months ago. For the current season Universal had sold to RKO for the metropolitan area a clause requiring that six Universals play either the Music Hall or the RKO Roxy.

Jason Joy, On Leave From Fox, Assisting Wingate

Jason S. Joy, former head of the studio relations committee on the Coast, until joining the Fox story department under contract, has returned temporarily to the MPPDA to assist Dr. James Wingate, who succeeded him, for a four-week period. Fox is said to have given Mr. Joy leave of absence.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

One hundred years ago last week, the Evening Post in New York reported that a project was under way to make a continuous railroad all the way from Philadelphia to the west shore of the Hudson river, at a point directly opposite New York. (Probably Hoboken). It was said at that time that "even now, 600 persons daily pass between New York and Newark over the toll bridges, besides those carried in steamboats."

"With all these new roads—and they must be made—New York will be but 15 hours' distance from Washington."

We have made a few advances since 1833. Colvin Brown now makes the Capital, from his desk in the Quigley offices at 1790 Broadway, to the front door of his governmental headquarters in the Treasury Building, in five hours and three minutes flat, flying down the shiny steel rails in an air-cooled compartment, enjoying a thick, medium-done Pennsy beefsteak, with home fried.

Which may be true. Ernst Lubitsch once told old Bob Wagner that in Georgia and Bessarabia, anybody with three cows and a rooster is a prince. Just as in Mexico any soldier with a pair of boots is a general. And in the film business any company with a good press agent has "the best" pictures.

The big flaw in such a system, as we see it, is that it might have serious results on the exhibitor's pocketbook, because, by the time the second reel ended, too many people will know that the butler did the killing.

Many would like to know what the last step in the real NRA will be.

Columns were written several months ago about the best frocked women of the land. Most of those mentioned impressed dress-critic O. O. McIntyre as flash dressers with nebulous taste. "They mistake a lot of clothes for style," he said.

"New York first nights and Hollywood premieres bring out the best dressed women," according to Mr. McIntyre. "The most flambuoyantly garbed get attention, but are far from being correctly gowned. In New York, for example, likely the most perfectly groomed ladies are Mrs. Robert Rubin (wife of the Metro executive), Peggy Hoyt, Mrs. Bryan Foy (wife of Foy, the film director), and Mrs. Will Hays." . . .

Mr. McIntyre is a warm friend of the Hays family. They spend a lot of time together.

Sammy Schneider, who is a better Warner worker than golfer, unconsciously made an impressive drive the other day down the fairways of the old Belleclaire golf club on the north shore of Long Island. Joe Hornstein and Harold Rodner, noted Warner kibitzers, looked on in amazement at the prowess of their co-worker, then quickly traveled on ahead of him in the general direction of the next tee.

Mr. Schneider was feeling equal to Sarazen when he finally got ready for the next shot. He could not see the cup, nor even the green, because of a steep mound ahead, so, carefully taking aim, he let 'er go, and—zowie—Joe and Harold shouted, "A hole-in-one!" Par is four.

Rapidly Sam's fame spread far and wide—Hornstein saw to that. The editors of The American Golfer called the Warner office—thanks to Harold Rodner—and requested Sam's best photograph, his life story and a few pointers on golf. But the new "champ" was not happy. With a bit of skepticism, despite his hope that the shot was true, Schneider felt that there was something rotten at Belleclaire.

Some day, when jokesters Hornstein and Rodner get around to it, they're going to tell Sam that they asked a caddie boy to plant one of the balls in the cup; that he never got within thirty yards of the green, and that the golf magazine wouldn't care if he had made six holes-in-one right in a row.

MONARCH SET ON QUALITY
AS RESULT OF SURVEY

There's nothing like trying something new.

From United Artists' headquarters on Seventh Avenue, at 49th, comes the long awaited announcement: Samuel Goldwyn has finally gotten around to the business of launching a public career for Anna Sten. Mr. Goldwyn has, for 15 months, been grooming Miss Sten for American stardom, ever since he brought her to our shores from Russia.

According to the official announcement, Mr. Goldwyn authorized 12 different kinds of stories prepared for the Hollywood debut of Miss Sten. Obviously, that was not complimentary to the literary circles out west. Anyway, Mr. Goldwyn finally selected "Nana"—whose "career on the grande boulevards of the gas lit Paris of 1870 can be traced in the elaborate wardrobe that Anna Sten wears, beginning with her rags as a gutter brat to her opulent attire as the reigning courtesan of the day."

The statement from the company boasts that "Every kind of test has been made . . . and a trial shot of modernized can-can that she dances in the picture."

Well, it had better be good (we mean the picture).

Dick Powell was being interviewed the other night over Station WABC. "How much money does an actor in Hollywood need in order to marry?" asked the interviewer.

"He must have at least $25,000 in the bank," replied Dick, "and a weekly salary of $500."

Will Mr. Powell pay us one German mark—only one—for every actor in Hollywood who is married and not only is without a job but hasn't 25 cents to boot?

But, then, maybe Hollywood has its own standards: If you make less than $500 a week and have under $25,000 in the bank, you're only an extra. Between both figures and the next ones, you're an actor. Anything above that makes you an artist.

For the second consecutive month Warner Brothers' second edition of the "Gold Diggers" extravaganza heads the list of productions most pleasing to the current humors of the nation's key box offices. Without revealing the figures, it may yet be confessed that it was the champion of champions in July. It will be noted that the leaders for that month continue in popularity the appeal represented by the June list. They lean heavily toward the lighter side of life. Each of the first July champions won exclusive title to its ranking, while the remaining productions were tied for fourth. "Be Mine Tonight" was also a June champion.

(4) Directed by Harry Beaumont. From the play by Rachel Crothers. Screen play by John Meehan and Leon Gordon. Photographed by Ray June. Cast: Robert Montgomery, Ann Harding, Myrna Loy, Alice Brady, Frank Morgan, Luis Alberni, Martin Burton, Stuart Holloway. Released June 23, 1933.

KENT AND SHUBERT ASK STAR "RAIDING" CEASE

Film Coordinator Proposes Legitimate Theatre Bar Invasions in Their Code; Stage Producer for "Split Season"

Sidney R. Kent, NRA coordinator of the motion pictude industry's code, and Lee Shubert, theatrical pioneer, have set about independently to put an end to the practices of "raiding" the legitimate theatre for stage players for motion picture production, and from the "stealing" of screen stars from studios by stage producers.

Late last week, at the hearing of the theatre code before Sol Rosenblatt, deputy NRA administrator, at Washington, Mr. Rosenblatt read a telegram from Mr. Kent in which he suggested that the theatre interests incorporate in their code a clause which would outlaw the stealing of film players for stage work. Activities along these lines have been quite pronounced in recent months, with dozens of well known players leaving Hollywood almost daily for appearances in stage shows. Mr. Kent said that he also would recommend for the film code that a clause be inserted against taking stage players for the screen.

At the same time, Mr. Shubert, who is about to return actively to stage production, following adjustment of the Shuberts' receivership, arrived in Hollywood in an attempt to sell to film producers the idea of effecting "split-seasons" for actors, whereby they would divide their time between making motion pictures and appearing in legitimate attractions.

It appeared that Mr. Shubert did make some progress in Hollywood, for, upon his return trip eastward, he indicated, on a stopover at Kansas City, that he believed the policy of players splitting the seasons between the stage and pictures will become firmly established.

In recent years, he said, the stage has suffered because films have attracted the more important talent. "The studios paid them to remain idle between pictures, but they are not disposed to do so under present conditions, and most of the actors are eager to return to the legitimate stage for at least part of the season."

Mr. Shubert believes the success of the "little theatre" is demonstrating a "hunger" on the part of the public for stage entertainment. "The screen and the radio are great entertainment mediums," he said. "But there is some vague thing lacking in mechanical entertainment. If there wasn't, crowds wouldn't 'mob' hotels and railroad stations for a glimpse of film stars in person."

The Shuberts have plans to produce nine new plays next season, including "The Man of Wax," "The Trip to Pressburg," "Amen," "Ten-Minute Alibi," "A Villa in Cannes," "The Green Bay Tree," "Poor Little Thing," "Hold Your Horses," with Joe Cook, and "A Night in Venice," with Jeritza. These will be seen on Broadway and on the road.

At the theatre code hearing, leaders in the legitimate field also discussed the possibility of effecting protection for U. S. players, against the competition of importations. This would have a bearing on new screen possibilities, in that foreign actors would be barred, by governmental decree, from remaining in this country any longer than three months, unless the run of the play lasts longer. They would be required to get permits from the U. S. Labor Department and would be required to contribute a percentage of their salaries to an unemployment fund.

Thalberg Returns To Metro Studio

Return of Irving Thalberg to the Culver City production staff of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer was confirmed officially Monday evening when Mr. Thalberg, accompanied by his wife, Norma Shearer, departed for the Coast. His exact status at the studio was not clarified, however.

Before returning to work, following a stay in New York and a recuperation trip through Europe, Mr. Thalberg said:

"I shall organize in our studios a production unit that will make as many pictures as I am capable of making. These pictures will be of the quality and type I have endeavored to make in the past 14 years. I have found the public more discriminating than ever in their desire for fine product. Any exhibitor will tell you that the difference today between a superior picture and an indifferent one represents a greater difference in box office receipts than ever before.

"I want to take this opportunity of congratulating Mr. Mayer and my old friends and associates on the splendid pictures that they have been making during my absence.

"I am looking forward with enthusiasm to the resumption of my work, with my associates and the stars, directors and writers with whom I have had so many happy years."

Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, said regarding Mr. Thalberg's plans at the studio:

"I am happy to announce that Mr. Thalberg will return to our studios at Culver City, with his health fully restored, and will develop a production unit at our studios which will concentrate its activities in the production of pictures of the quality and type which he has produced so successfully for us during the ten years of our association. I am confident that he will be equally successful as he has been in the past in developing and maintaining stars and other talent. I think that his pictures, in addition to the excellent product being produced under the guidance of Louis B. Mayer and associates, will make Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer product a great source of happiness to the exhibitors and to the public."

Mr. Thalberg's return to the MGM studio ends speculation as to his future in production. On returning from Europe, Mr. Thalberg said he would announce his plans shortly, but no word was forthcoming until it was learned unofficially last week that he had made new arrangements to resume at Culver City. Mr. Thalberg has been out of Metro production activities some seven months, nearly three of which were spent abroad in recuperation from a long illness.

Mayer Explains Status Of Irving Thalberg

The future status of Irving Thalberg at the Metro studio in Culver City was explained early in the week by Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in complete charge of production, who, at Kansas City en route to the Coast, said that Mr. Thalberg's authority under the new arrangement will be on a par with that of other studio executives. However, some of the most important of the 1933-34 Metro productions will be in charge of Mr. Thalberg, it was said.

Mr. Mayer was production executive "behind the scenes" while Mr. Thalberg was in charge of all actual filming until his nervous breakdown last winter, explained Mr. Mayer. With this emergency, "there was nothing left to do but jump in and get product out," Mr. Mayer said.

"I had been sitting back for six years, letting others do the work," he continued. "Thalberg was doing a good job. I have a lot of respect and admiration for his work. He conquered every barrier. I disliked getting back to active production and at the time wouldn't have taken five millions to be back in harness. Now I wouldn't take forty millions to withdraw, because I have proved to myself that my theories are correct.

"When Thalberg's health broke down and he had to quit, the news stunned the studio. Disorder was rampant. We had a hectic time convincing people that we could make pictures without Thalberg. We haven't done so badly in his absence, and our output is improving."

Regarding the status of David O. Selznick, his son-in-law, who was added several months ago to the MGM production staff, Mr. Mayer said: "Selznick has never been in charge of more than one producing unit on the lot, so that Thalberg's new status will be about equal to his. The only person charged with responsibility for the entire output is myself.

"Mr. Selznick," continued Mr. Mayer, "was added to round out the executive staff and because of the necessity of speeding up production, which became acture with Mr. Thalberg's illness. Other producers were added about the same time," he added.

Mr. Mayer said that of 17 or 20 pictures made by Mr. Thalberg last year, only three or four fell down, and that he considered this a good percentage. He also praised Selznick's "Dinner at Eight."

Says He May Make 20 of MGM's Leading Films

Another turn to the situation was given by Mr. Thalberg late Tuesday night, when, during a stopover at Kansas City, he said he may make as many as 20 MGM pictures for 1933-34, all comprising the more important productions on the schedule. He said he preferred supervising a smaller amount of the most important films rather than to be occupied with the entire MGM schedule.

Mr. Thalberg denied reports of a settlement of his contract or the signing of a new contract and indicated his present agreement runs to 1940. He said his status was unimpaired and that Mr. Mayer, Mr. Rubin and himself would remain in charge of the studio, with Mr. Mayer and himself dividing the responsibility for production as in the past.

Mr. Thalberg further denied that Mr. Mayer had taken over the studio reins. At this point he referred to the partnership arrangement held by him and Mr. Mayer.

"Mr. Mayer's political activities formerly kept him from the studio much of the time," Mr. Thalberg explained. "When Mayer was in Washington I assumed responsibility and when he was at the studio the responsibility was his."

Mr. Thalberg said that the same arrangement will hold in the future with respect to his status at the studio.

WILLIAM FOX LOSES SECOND ROUND IN FIGHT FOR SOUND ROYALTIES

Federal Judge Rules That Claims Are Groundless in Tri-Ergon Suit Against Paramount, Defended by Erpi

William Fox on Monday met with defeat in his first major attempt to collect from the motion picture industry at large, through the courts, millions of dollars in royalties under sound patents which he holds.

Federal Judge Campbell, sitting in United States district court, eastern district of New York, ruled that the claims in Mr. Fox's Tri-Ergon suit, against Paramount Publix Corporation, charging infringement of a patent for a process of producing combined sound and picture show no improvement "over the prior art." In summary, the court said:

"Plaintiff recites at length what it contends are the advantages of the alleged invention, but it seems to me that it does not point to any advantage which does not apply to the prior art which I have considered, and some of the advantages recited by the plaintiff are not mentioned in the patent in suit.

"The cases cited by plaintiff to show validity do not seem to me to be in point.

"No commercial success is shown by the plaintiff, and the patentees made no real contribution to art. The success of the defendant, its licensor and its licensees is due to the many inventions of the Western Electric Company, without which success would have been impossible.

"The claims in suit of the patent in suit are invalid by reason of anticipation and lack of invention over the prior art.

"The patent is invalid.

"A decree may be entered in favor of the defendant against the plaintiff dismissing the bill of complaint on the merits with costs."

The defense, assumed by Electrical Research Products for the defendant Paramount company, successfully dislodged Mr. Fox's claims for relief from alleged patent infringement through injunction and damages.

The Fox Tri-Ergon interests made 11 claims under the patent. Subsequently, Tri-Ergon filed two disclaimers in which it was admitted that certain of its claims were too broad. The defendant contended invalidity of the entire patent and non-infringement, which the court upheld.

Judge Campbell, in a 47-page decree, covered the history of the talking picture development, also the part that Western Electric played in its development, and the "technical necessity" of separate films for sight and sound as described in the application for the patent involved in the litigation.

The suit, upon which millions of dollars in license fees and profits hinged, and which, if upheld, subsequently would have involved both the electrics, all producer licensees, and probably all motion picture theatres, was heard last fall in federal court in Brooklyn.

Mr. Fox thereby received his second rebuff from the courts within a month, in his campaign to collect enormous royalties from the industry. The decision of Judge Campbell was seen as a weakening factor in Mr. Fox's attempts to contest the sound rights of practically every company in the business.

Late in July, Judge Cohn, of the supreme court of New York State, ruled that his court had no jurisdiction over the type of controversy represented by a motion sought against Leo Brecher, New York exhibitor, by the Tri-Ergon interests, in an alleged patent infringement.

Louis Nizer, attorney of the New York Film Board of Trade, defended the motion for judgment without trial, which was filed by Fox against Mr. Brecher and his corporation, including Protex Trading Corporation, Max Goldberg, and Associated Cinemas, Inc. Mr. Nizer's defense centered around his claim that a patent infringement action did not fall within the scope of any state court, but properly became part of the consideration of the federal courts.

The history of the Tri-Ergon patents dates back to the early 1900's, when three ambitious Germans went to work in a little experimental laboratory hidden in a corner of Berlin. Several years later, Hans Vogt, Joseph Massolle and Joseph Engl emerged with two inventions having to do with the mechanical processes of motion pictures. Both of the patents are now the basis of Tri-Ergon's claims for royalties and profits.

William Fox Buys Some Patents

Messrs. Vogt, Massolle and Engl applied for American rights in 1922, and in 1924 they assigned their rights to Tri-Ergon, Ltd., of St. Gall, Switzerland, which, in turn, sold the American rights to William Fox in 1928, although at that time U. S. patents had not been issued. These rights were then invested by Mr. Fox with the American Tri-Ergon Company, New York, which is headed by Fox and controlled by him.

U. S. Patent No. 1,825,598—which was the basis of the suit against Paramount—was issued Sept. 29, 1931, to Vogt, Massolle and Engl, and then immediately assigned by them to Fox and Tri-Ergon. This patent corresponds to German application No. V 16431 VL/57A2, filed at Berlin on April 14, 1921. The American application, although issued in 1931, was filed March 29, 1922, and this date has been held by the patents office to be the effective date under the international copyright agreement. According to Tri-Ergon, this patent "relates to the process for producing combined sound and picture film by photographing the sound and pictures on separate films so that they may be developed separately, and then printing both records side by side on a single film."

U. S. Patent No. 1,713,726, granted on May 21, 1929, also to Messrs. Vogt, Massolle and Engl, and likewise assigned by them to Fox and Tri-Ergon, corresponds to a similar German application filed in 1921. Popularly known as the "flywheel patent," Tri-Ergon says No. 1,713,726 "relates to certain methods and apparatus for uniformly moving the sound record film under the control of inertia, either in recording or reproducing machines utilizing sound controlled light in translating the sound to or from the film. This patent also relates to the photo-electric cell when used with such reproducing apparatus, as is now the general practice."

In November of 1931, Fox brought action on behalf of his American Tri-Ergon patent holding company, against Electrical Research Products, RCA Photophone, Paramount Publix and RKO Radio Pictures, charging infringement. Single complaints were filed against Erpi, RCA and RKO, at Wilmington, Del., by former Federal Judge Hugh M. Morris, as attorney for Fox, who played a prominent part in sound litigation at the beginning of the talker era. The Paramount suit was filed later in New York.

Tri-Ergon asked for an accounting of profits and permanent injunction against RCA and Erpi, and an accounting of profits and a temporary injunction against Radio Pictures. Fox followed up his first barrage with a suit filed in New York against Paramount Publix and ruled groundless this week by Judge Campbell in Brooklyn. The Paramount action was similar to that filed at Wilmington against RKO.

Court Holds Patent for Producing Combined Sound and Picture Is Invalid; Says "No Commercial Success Shown"

Subsequently, on Nov. 28, 1931, Mr. Fox caused to be inserted in the motion picture trade press certain advertisements for American Tri-Ergon, in which he confirmed reports existing at that time that Tri-Ergon had issued warnings of probable infringement to some hundred or more producers and distributors.

These companies were told to apply for Tri-Ergon licensing immediately or face legal action. Also, possibility of later action against exhibitors and producers employing sound equipment of foreign manufacture not covered by American Tri-Ergon licensing agreements was voiced at the offices of Hirsh, Newman, Reass and Becker, personal counsel to Fox in New York.

Enforcement Tried in 1929

Attempts to enforce the Tri-Ergon "flywheel" patents were made as early as 1929, it was said at the time of filing of the Erpi-RCA-RKO-Paramount actions. The Fox attorneys pointed out that in 1929, various equipment manufacturers and producers were asked to procure Tri-Ergon licenses, and conferences and negotiations pointing toward such agreements ensued which lasted more than a year, or until 1930.

When these reputed negotiations foundered, Fox's attorneys said that notice of infringement was served on all parties concerned. The De-Forest claims of interference were made at that time, however, and as a result, Tri-Ergon decided to await a ruling from the Patent Office.

The Tri-Ergon patent holdings played an important part in Upton Sinclair's book about the life of William Fox, published early this year. In the narrative, which was related by Mr. Fox to Mr. Sinclair, Fox charged the bankers and the electrics with wresting from him control of his motion picture companies. The Fox-Sinclair writing combination made much, too, of the importance of the Tri-Ergon patents as one of the basic reasons why reputed outside interests sought to gain control of his film corporations. Judge Campbell's decision in the Paramount case, on Monday, invalidating the most important of the two Tri-Ergon patents, lends a new note to the alleged factual chapter about Tri-Ergon in the book.

Tax Lien Filed Against William Fox in New York

John S. Shea, deputy collector of internal revenue, has filed tax liens totaling $1,980,939.46 against William Fox in New York federal court. This is an additional assessment in income claimed to have been received by Mr. Fox in 1929 and 1930. The assessment is $1,768.696, and the remainder, $212,243.46.

UNIVERSAL is up against a tough proposition in getting the proper drawing or illustration, for advertising purposes, of "the invisible man." Universal's production department has solved the problem of how to "show" an invisible man on the screen — but the same method won't work in silent pen and ink. What would YOU do?

Cameramen Beat Jails and Bullets To Film Rebellion

Havana correspondent for the New York Herald-Tribune, he was mobbed by hysterical revolutionists and thrown into prison. Robert Casey, of the Chicago Daily News, was bayoneted when he attempted to intervene. Oliver was released several hours later through the aid of the American consul.

"I went with Oliver, who is a stranger here, to point out some of the districts under military restriction," said Mr. Reisler in his Tribune dispatch. "We had our official permits to go to those points, and Oliver had one to take pictures wherever he desired.

"We had just set up the camera when we were attacked by four policemen, who pointed rifles at our heads.

"Oliver cried: 'Talk to them. I can't speak Spanish.'

"I showed them my pass, and so did Oliver," continued Reisler. "The police waved the passes aside and seized us both. With rifles poked in our backs, and with Oliver carrying a hundred pounds of camera equipment, we were herded into jail. There they read the riot act to us and confiscated the camera. The police were insulting, but did us no real bodily harm.

"Eventually, through the prompt aid of the American Embassy and the other foreign correspondents, we obtained our release. We were in prison about three hours and a half. The camera was returned to Oliver."

When Allyn Butterfield, editor of Universal newsreel, learned of the incident, he immediately lodged a protest with the State Department in Washington. The Department instructed Ambassador Welles to make an investigation.

Held in Jail All Day

It was Oliver who, still in his early thirties, scooped his rivals when the Graf Zeppelin made its first trip to this country. He accompanied Colonel Lindbergh as the only newsreel cameraman on the aviator's historic flight to South America. Revolutions are not new to him. He has been on hand for several of those Central American arguments.

Oliver placed his negative aboard a plane on Saturday afternoon at three o'clock. Another plane picked it up at Miami, and, although delayed eight hours in the air by fog, the film reached New York late Sunday afternoon.

Pathe had three men in Cuba on assignment for the climax to the republic's troubles. Another was sent from New York to Miami and Havana by airplanes.

W. C. Miller, Havana staff man, was arrested taking pictures near the Palace and remained in jail all day. Camera and film taken from him were later returned. The crew took many gruesome shots, which were deleted from the regular theatre releases, including the hacking to death of one of the secret police, whose body was torn apart and paraded through Havana's streets. James Pergola, of the Pathe staff, witnessed many of the executions of Machado's followers.

When the Pathe plane started back to the mainland with pictures, it was fired upon and had to descend. Another plane was obtained.

Including in the estimated $1,138,958,000 United States capital invested in Cuba, are investments of motion picture companies in exchanges, principally those of Universal, Columbia, Fox, MGM, Paramount and Warner. In addition, there are in Havana about eight independent distributing and importing offices, practically all Cuban-owned and operated.

SHIPS AND PLANES AID FILMS' SPEED

With ships of the sea and air cooperating in a race against time, newsreels have been able to place on theatre screens in New York, 5,000 miles from the base of operations, the maneuvers of the United States Naval Base in the Hawaiian Islands. On Wednesday of a certain week photos and sound picture shots were thrown aboard a fast Pacific steamer. Just in time were connections made with the eastbound Railway Express plane leaving Oakland, Cal., airport, with the aid of an amphibian plane chartered for the purpose. Newspapers of the following Wednesday published, theatres on the same day exhibited, in New York, pictures of the fleet maneuvers in the Hawaiian Islands.

Suit Filed Against Central Theatres

A petition in bankruptcy was filed this week in New York against Central New York Theatres Corporation, controlled by the Skouras interests and Charles Caballero. The company operates approximately 24 houses in Upper New York State.

Creditors who sponsored the petition were Electro-Ad Sign Corporation, with a claim of $235; Filkins the Printer, $798, and H. H. Sullivan, Inc., $249.

Baren Named JAFA Executive

Larry Baren, former Fox executive, has been named general manager of the newly organized JAFA Film Exchange, with headquarters at 630 Ninth avenue, New York. Herman Ross, president, made the appointment. The exchange will handle the distribution of Yiddish and English films of the Jewish American Film Art Company.

RKO's Managers Get Set for Drive

Divisional and theatre managers of RKO's eastern division met at the Waldorf-Astoria Tuesday in an all-day session to map plans for the circuit's "Greater Show Season Drive," opening August 26.

Phil Reisman and Ned Depinet, of RKO, and John Clark, of Fox, spoke at the morning session, followed by a screening of "Morning Glory" (Radio). After lunch Jack Cohn of Columbia and George Schaefer of Paramount were the speakers, the rest of the afternoon being given to screenings of "I'm No Angel" (Paramount) and "Lady for a Day" (Columbia).

The session concluded with a dinner addressed by President M. H. Aylesworth. Other speakers at the sessions and the dinner included S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel, Harold B. Franklin, J. L. McDonough, Robert F. Sisk, RKO director of advertising and publicity, who outlined the $3,000 prize campaign, and Terry Turner, RKO advertising and exploitation executive.

275,000 Entries In MGM Studio Train's Contests

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer this week completed the first leg of an international campaign for ballyhooing motion pictures by means of its "Traveling Studio Train." Since its participation at the Inaugural on March 4 the "Train" has visited 3,000 cities, towns and villages throughout all the east except New York, where a campaign will be conducted in the fall.

Supervised directly from the home office by Howard Dietz, Si Seadler and W. R. Ferguson, and managed on the road by Eddie Carrier and Russell Stewart, the "Studio Train" has staged some 26 voice and screen tests in as many key districts in the east, with simultaneous tests in hundreds of theatres in surrounding territory. To date, 275,000 contestants among the film fans of the east have had tests. The winner selected by various civic committees and the company to represent the east is Miss Dorothy Short, 19 year old copper-haired beauty of Atlantic City, who was awarded a three-months contract, as will be the winners for the Midwest, South and Pacific Coast

Following the official selection Saturday night at a reception and ball on Atlantic City's Steel Pier, Miss Short will depart for Culver City, where she will begin work immediately in Howard Dietz's musical, "The Hollywood Party."

The traveling studio is now centering its activities in the Midwest. The campaigns are staged in the key cities for and with exhibitor clients of the company. Between district tests, stopovers are made at theatres in the outlying towns. Emphasis is placed on current releases, exploitation on these being directly tied with specific runs.

Tests Screened on Train

Sales appeal is directed along general lines on behalf of the company, its trademark and product. As medium of advertising for the industry at large and a creator of goodwill for motion pictures, the traveling studio train also is intended by Metro as an educational factor, showing, as it does, how sound films are made and projected. A miniature studio, with complete recording and filming apparatus, takes tests of entrants in the various contests. These subsequently are screened in the traveling train by standard Western Electric sound equipment, and also shown on the screens of theatres where the tests were conducted.

Previous to the studio's arrival in town, special advance men, working with Metro's field staff, arrange a tieup with the Hearst newspaper, or another published locally, and a voice and screen opportunity test is arranged at the key Metro theatre account. Outlying houses likewise participate, sending candidates for the finals.

The typical program starts with a 30-minute screening of institutional shorts relative to the advancement of the motion picture in the past decade. Stars are shown at work and at play. A goodwill message from an industry leader, is reproduced, followed by an announcement, through the studio's amplification system, of forthcoming attractions at the various theatres tied in on the campaign.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

The Deluge

(RKO Radio-KBS)

Romantic Drama

Spectacular novelty is the predominant characteristic of this show. Highly imaginative, yet vividly realistic, the story first describes the destruction of the world, then goes on to picture the dramatic, romantic experiences that befall a few of the survivors. So much that is thrilling and different is packed into the first two reels that the remainder of the picture seemed to suffer by comparison. Yet here there is a novelty of story idea that should be fully as appealing.

Generating excitement immediately, radio and newspaper reports bring to New York stories of the destruction of the earth by earthquakes and tidal waves. Asia, Europe, then the Pacific Coast and finally the Mississippi Valley sink below the water. Panic-stricken Manhattan hopelessly besieges the forecaster's office but the episode is climaxed when a terrific earthquake levels the city and a tidal wave inundates it, with the Statue of Liberty last to fall. This amazing bit of screen mechanics and miniature effects, during its three minute run, brought from the preview audience tremendous applause.

After the catastrophe, the show turns differently dramatic and romantic. Claire is found by Jepson, who, believing her the only woman left, intends to keep her for himself and kills Norwood when he becomes amorous. Claire, escaping, is found again by Martin, who believes his wife and children victims of the disaster, and falls in love with her. His affections reciprocated, they marry in the eyes of God, only to have Jepson round up a gang and come after Claire. Another group of survivors, headed by Tom, has started to build a mountain top community only to be harassed by the Jepson gang. Determined to wipe them out, Tom's forces arrive at a tunnel where Claire and Martin are barricaded just as Claire kills Jepson.

Brought back to the embryo city, Martin discovers his wife alive. Dramatic woman-to-woman sequences ensue, Helen pleading for her husband and father of her children, Claire battling for her man. The story comes to its novel climax as Claire solves the riddle by swimming off to no one knows where to leave Martin and Helen to work out their destiny in a new world.

"The Deluge" calls for out-of-the-ordinary advertising and publicity. While the thrill fans will like the first factor, go after the others, women particularly, on the alluring angle of one woman left alone in a little world of men. Promise a new kind of thrill, create a big picture atmosphere, this in view of the fact that cast names are none too strong.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Cheating Blondes

(Majestic)

Drama

Thelma Todd, blond player, more or less recently graduated from comedies to featured parts, here undertakes the performance of a dual role.

Her name, and that of the comparatively little known Rolfe Harolde, are the only two salable names connected with the independent feature, produced by Equitable Pictures, and distributed by Majestic. Mae Busch, in a minor role, will be remembered, but her part is too unimportant to warrant any amount of attention.

The title, with an implication of heavily sophisticated story material, is not borne out by the story itself, and furthermore is of stereotyped flavor. The cheating lies, presumably, in the dual blonde fooling her manager and her public.

Anna Merrick is the poor working girl twin sister of Elaine Manners, night club favorite, both roles played by Miss Todd. After Harolde, unscrupulous newspaper reporter, is turned down by Miss Merrick, the drunken husband of the jealous Mae Busch, who lives on the same floor, is shot when he breaks into Miss Merrick's room, and Miss Merrick makes a quick escape from trouble. She seeks refuge with her sister, without telling her of the reason.

Miss Manners, at the moment her sister arrives, is about to leave on a vacation despite her manager's protest, and decides to have her sister substitute for her at the night club. It works, the public is fooled, until Harolde meets her at the night club, realizes there is something wrong somewhere, and uncovers the truth. He sets a trap, decoys Miss Merrick, and causes her to be arrested for murder. At the conclusion, it is revealed that the original Miss Manners vacated to have a child, and is willing to give up her night club place. Miss Busch confesses to the murder, thus freeing Miss Merrick, and Earl McCarthy, as a pursuing swain, meets the requirements and causes the developed romance between Miss Merrick and himself to draw the film to an expected conclusion, with Harolde out in the cold.

Under the necessity of selling the picture in a rather conventional manner, since there is nothing unusual in the picture, the exhibitors probably will derive best results from concentration on the dual role theme and the idea of the girl who cleared herself and made good despite the efforts of a man to force her conviction for murder. Small theatre material, the film is best set during the week, and is in no wise juvenile fare.—Aaronson, New York.

Tarzan the Fearless

(Principal)

Burroughs Story

Once more Tarzan, the ape man, returns to the screen, in this instance under the producing hand of Sol Lesser, and in the person of the rather attractive and physically wholly adequate Buster Crabbe, swimming champion. Taking as its theme one of the famous Edgar Rice Burroughs stories of the jungle and its curious champion and prize inhabitant, "Tarzan the Fearless" recounts the exploits of the ape man, his encounters with a young girl bound on a rescue trek to find her father and the something akin to romance which enters the being of Tarzan.

For the exhibitor this picture offers much, particularly in the smaller community, where a host of children can be depended upon to follow the adventures of the ape man with wild enthusiasm. Principal has planned well in making the film, intending, according to announcement, to follow this initial full-length feature with weekly episodes, probably each two-reels in length, which will carry on the adventures of Tarzan from the point where they somewhat abruptly terminated at the conclusion of this picture.

Going after the youngsters with all the fanfare and trumpets the exhibitor can awake, with all the attendant ballyhoo of a good Tarzan picture, should serve indirectly to bring the adults as well into the theatre. Buster Crabbe, fortunately, makes a most effective, pleasing ape man, beautifully proportioned, tremendously strong and agile.

Tarzan, swinging his carefree way through the jungle, conversing now and again with his monkey friends, becomes aware of the plight of Alyn Warren, elderly scientist, captured by a weird tribe headed by severe-looking Mischa Auer, and rescues the scientist. Warren gives him a letter to his daughter, Jacqueline Wells, approaching with a rescue party headed by Edward Woods, and with the unscrupulous pair, Philo McCullough and Mathew Betz as guides. Tarzan rescues Miss Wells from a crocodile-filled river where she is swimming, takes a liking to her, delivers his note and finally when the group goes to save the father, again captured by Auer, rescues them all and takes Miss Wells to his cave, where, as he grunts his approval of her, with a romantic stirring within his ape-like soul, the picture abruptly ends—to be continued.

It is splendid youngster material, and with the proper playing up of the person who plays Tarzan, in addition to the child draw, the adults should be brought around. Tell the adults to be young again for a moment and come to enjoy the adventures of Tarzan, the ape man.—Aaronson, New York.

Bitter Sweet

(United Artists-B. & D.)

Romantic Drama

No more successful piece than "Bitter Sweet" ever dripped from the versatile pen of Noel Coward. As a stage play it charmed a vast multitude: as a film it should multiply that multitude into millions. To America, which has shown understanding of Coward, it will come with less of the mystical quality which characterized his Hollywood-made "Cavalcade." It differs in emotional urge; is told in a universal tongue. "Bitter Sweet" is a simple story of a great love which not even death could end.

The characters, for all that most of the tale is told in bizarre Vienna, are American, English, Russian, Chinese or Esquimeaux as you may wish. They live, move and speak for those with ideals and those without them. Their actions and accents should be as clear in Nebraska as in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Exhibitor may consider, if they will, this writer's opinion that "Bitter Sweet" is as good a showman's film as ever came out of Hollywood, and a gosh-darn lot better than most which previously had come out of England.

The story opens on the poignant farewell between a struggling young musician and a lovely heiress. She has to marry the rich man in the morning. Their farewell is overheard by Sari Linden, a fine old lady with the face of a Madonna. She tells them her story.

As a wealthy young woman she had fallen desperately in love with her young music teacher, but the rich suitor was in the offing. They said their goodbyes. And then the boy decided upon one last chance. Would she face poverty and possibly starvation—for him? She would. And the rest tells of their life together; their hopes; their disappointments which only the mysticism of a perfect faith smoothed.

Then he got a job as orchestral leader in the Schlick Restaurant, gayest of all Vienna night rendezvous. Each night she watched him from her little alcove seat. There were the rollicking tunes—all a perfect pattern of loveliness—till Captain Auguste Lutte returned from abroad. His eye fell upon Sari. He must get her. Lutte must resort to strategy. Schlick must be called in to help. Sari begged her young husband to take her away. But later that night Lutte attacked Sari, and her young husband, defending her honor in duel, fell to the experienced soldier's thrust.

Down through the years Sari had carried in her heart the fine jewel which she exchanged for wealth and position. The fade-out finds her urging the two young people to obey their hearts.

Anna Neagle, who plays Sari Linden, is a lovely, lively creature, and Fernand Graavey, a European newcomer, as Carl Linden, her musician husband, is one of the strongest sensations in juvenile discovery. Pep is added by Ivy St. Helier, who as Manon la Grevette, contributes her original stage role.

Costumes and setting are exquisite, and as a directorial effort this picture ranks as Herbert Wilcox's masterpiece. This is no song and dance about nothing. It should make a box-office mark in all English-speaking territories. Watch it!—MOORING, London.

Cochran's original stage presentation at His Majesty's London. Dialogue and lyrics by Noel Coward. Additional dialogue by Monckton Hoffe. Photography by F. A. Young. Art direction by L. P. Williams. The Lone Avenger

(World Wide)

Western

Ken Maynard as an incognito son trapping the slayers of his father is the subject matter to place before the potential patrons. An abundance of action, in which a vigilante committee plays a part, may be promised, with bits of comedy relief offsetting the delays due to the overly explanatory dialogue.

Maynard returns to the home town to find that the president of the bank is dead, a pistol in his right hand. Niles Welch, with his crime crew, Al Bridge and William Norton Bailey, pronounced it a case of suicide to cover up bank defalcating. Maynard has a set-to with Bridge and Bailey and then informs James Marcus, partner of his father, that it was murder; that his father was lefthanded.

Bridge and Bailey, looting the slain man's rooms, bring valuable papers to Carter, and out of one of the envelopes drops a photo of Ken Maynard. In front of the townsfolk Bridge announces Maynard's identity and implies that he knows more about it all. A lynching party rides Maynard to the city's outskirts. As they wait for an oncoming train Maynard gives his horse, Tarzan, the word, and he races ahead of the train across a trestle, and escapes, Tarzan untying the knots.

The real bank examiner, shot by Bridge so that a fake examiner could declare the institution insolvent, stumbles into a cave, where Maynard also takes refuge. And then it develops that this is the rendezvous of the vigilantes.

Maynard plans eradication of the gang. Into the saloon where Welch, Bridge et al are gathered, the vigilantes drift, in pairs or singly. Maynard throws a note through the window that at 8 o'clock he is coming to get the murderer of his father. He enters by a ruse as the vigilantes cover the bandits. Bridge, at Maynard's pistol-pointed insistence, names Welch, who kills him and dashes out, to scoop up the bank money. A pistol battle winds it up, with Maynard and Muriel Gordon, daughter of the elder Maynard's partner, paying out the money that stops the run, and deciding that they can make a go of it as bride and groom as well.

Sell Maynard and sell Tarzan, though Tarzan's entrance into activities is delayed and not sustained. It's a Saturday picture with lots of clean action for the youngsters.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

The Shepherd of the Seven Hills

(Faith Pictures)

Pictorial Record

For those of the Catholic faith who are unable to make a pilgrimage to Rome and the Vatican, "The Shepherd of the Seven Hills" should be found of considerable interest.

In a foreword by the Reverend John B. Kelly, spiritual director of the Catholic Writers Guild of New York, which has sponsored the picture, is noted: "This picture brings the Holy Father to those whose circumstances prevent them from appearing before him in person at Rome."

The picture consists of a series of newsreel clips, well edited, which present pictorially the highlights of the occupancy of the Vatican by the present pope, Pius XI. Accompanying the film is explanatory dialogue well spoken and tracing the religious significance of the picture.

The picture opens with many scenes of the ruins of today which were the glory that was Rome, with much stressing of the degradation which brought about the ruin. Then develops the comparison between that day of the Christian martyrs and the present peace and goodwill symbolized by the popes and their home, the Vatican. From that point to the conclusion the film becomes a series of edited newsreel sequences. Pictured in a manner to emphasize the present occupancy, and in a definite sense becoming a eulogy of Pope Pius XI, are various pilgrimages to Rome, the installation of the Vatican radio station, with recorded words from Senator Marconi and the Pope; inauguration of the Holy Year, 1933; the Pope greeting a Boy Scout delegation from all over the world; the signing of the famed Lateran Treaty, which terminated the Papal voluntary imprisonment of some 59 years, followed by the visits to the Pope of King Victor Emmanuel III and the Queen, and of Premier Mussolini.

Of real interest are views in the various chambers of the palace, which follow exterior scenes of the Swiss Guards, the Vatican gardens and the crowds about Saint Peter's greeting the election of the new pope. Within are seen the famous art treasures of the palace, frescoes, tapestries and paintings by some of the greatest artists of all time. At the dedication of the Knights of Columbus Building in Rome are seen the important American cardinals, Hayes of New York, Daugherty of Philadelphia, O'Connell of Boston, and Mundelein of Chicago, as well as important personages of the Vatican. Seen are glimpses of the Dublin and Chicago Eucharistic Congresses.

The capable organ accompaniment is by Lew White, vocal selections are rendered by "The Mediaevalists," and the descriptive narration is by Basil Ruysdael.

Where the exhibitor can count on a substantial Catholic audience the picture should have an unquestioned draw.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced by David O'Malley. Distributed by Faith Pictures Corporation. Organ accompaniment by Lew White. Vocal rendition by "The Mediaevalists." Narration by Basil Ruysdael. Release date, August 7, 1933. Running time, 60 minutes.

Night Flight

(MGM)

Drama with Comedy

As far as names are concerned this picture should have plenty of pulling power. Yet its entertainment values are hardly up to the standard and class ordinarily expected of such an imposing cast. In entertainment quality, it is in the program class. Heavily dramatic to the point of being a tragedy, with romance or love interest confined to only one or two sympathy stimulating sequences, and comedy of the character variety, there is comparatively little in "Night Flight" to hold feminine interest. Its greatest appeal probably will be found among aviation enthusiasts, thrill devotees and the more mature youngsters.

The locale is South America. In the night flying airmail theme the real hero is Riviere, one of those iron-discipline superintendents whose creed is that no matter what the hazard, sacrifice or cost, the mail must go. Action is confined to a noon to midnight period. Pellerin comes through a dangerous flight safely and after a gay cafe epilogue passes out of the picture. In the same storm, with its thrill atmosphere and radio reports of the aviators' difficulties, the ship bucking headwinds, gas running low, Fabian and his radio operator bale out in parachutes to death in the sea. Gable is in the picture only while sitting in the plane and during the parachute drop.

In the meantime a touch of sympathetic human interest has been injected with Madame Fabian preparing a little birthday celebration. Fearful of her husband's fate, she pantomimes the party. This episode is dramatically climaxed when, after it is definitely known that the pilot is lost, Madame Fabian bitterly charges

Riviere with inhumanly sending her husband to his death.

From here on the picture concentrates more strongly on Riviere's ambitions to make the line a success, culminating in his sending the Brazilian pilot off during a thick fog—which doesn't seem to bother the pilot's wife very much—to wind up in a "spirit" finish as the ghosts of the martyred flyers' ships rise out of the ocean to lead him on.

Make a full appraisal of name values for marquee, lobby and advertising purposes and do not overlook the title tone which carries an interest alluring sound. Tieups with aviation clubs, aerial exhibitions, if the budget permits, should be part of every campaign. If camera art means anything to your patrons, there is some beautiful photography to talk about. Straight from the shoulder catchlines that convey the story idea are applicable. But as the picture may not be pleasant to many, there is no reason for becoming too enthusiastic and promising an air epic; rather let the patrons get that ticket-buying urge from the names. They alone should be worth satisfactory box offices.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. David O. Selznick, executive producer. Directed by Clarence Brown. From the story by Antoine de Saint Exupery. Screen play by Oliver H. P. Garrett. Photographed by Oliver T. Marsh. Aerial photography by Elmer Dwyer and Charles Marshall. Release date to be determined. Running time, 72 minutes.

Orders Is Orders

(Gaumont-British)

Comedy

For long enough we have had to say that British film producers had no sense of comedy; probably no sense of humor either. Now we get a rich scintilating screen affair in which Gaumount, with delightful ease, hands England a laugh or two at her own expense, sprinkled with a few comedy sallies at America, too.

The story concerns a go-getting American film producer and his trousered feminine assistant, who descend upon one of England's most austere military barracks and ask permission to make a film there. The Colonel nearly goes up in smoke, but the trousered assistant has her attractions. He gives his permission (under a misapprehension that Red Tape departments have okayed the idea) and goes away for a few days of golf.

When he gets back he finds the whole of his barracks and his troops enlisted in the cause of films. The director has decided to make an All-India picture with the soldiers in shorts. But then somebody mentions Guy Fawkes and the famous plot to blow up England's House of Parliament, and he decides to make it a Guy Fawkes reel instead.

His studio space and his extras are all free. And even the old Colonel consents to play a one-line part.

Then the Brigadier General has to jam up the works by paying a sudden visit of inspection. He orders the film to be destroyed. Just then two of the soldier boys experimenting with new cigaret lighters set the negative alight in the cutting room.

James Gleason is a natural, cast as the film producer, with Charlotte Greenwood as the betrousered assistant. Every flick of a finger is a laugh, and the strange play on contrasts between these delightful Yanks, and the old English Colonel as played by Cyril Maude, provides just an avalanche of fun.

We begin to see now that there is nothing inherent against the making of sound screen comedy in England. England can laugh at her silly pomposities; at her red tape and her double-dyed dignity. And America should laugh with her this time. It's such a lovely polished satire, without a single concession to the highbrows.—Mooring, London.

Produced by Gaumont British. Directed by Walter Forde. Play by Ian Hay and Anthony Armstrong. Screenstory by Sidney Gilliat and Leslie Arliss. Photography by Glen MacWilliams. Recorded by S. Jolly. Length, 7,968 feet.

Sing, Sinner, Sing

(Majestic)

Drama

With more than a touch of gangsterism, this independently produced feature offers something of a selling problem to the exhibitor in that there is much he may wish to avoid in his copy.

The title is not all that it might be from the standpoint of exhibition. It would perhaps be well, therefore, that the showman steer somewhat clear of the title in his campaign. The cast list is not replete with stellar lights, though there are several who are known—and liked. Heading the cast, and most suitable for the marquee, are the names of Paul Lukas and Leila Hyams, who work hard, if not altogether successfully, by reason of the story and their roles.

Miss Hyams is the placid singer of so-called torch songs aboard the floating gambling hall operated by Lukas, with whom she is in love. Lukas' earnest protestations of undying affection are occasionally tempered with the attentions of one of the younger chorus girls. Miss Hyams is being assiduously pursued by the ever-intoxicated Dilloway, with considerably more money than brains. When Miss Hyams catches Lukas once too often, and following a little shooting party when some friendly visitors come for the loose cash. Miss Hyams walks out, marries Dilloway. When Dilloway, fearing madness, commits suicide during a wild party staged by Dilloway in his home, and Miss Hyams faints beside him, Lukas walks in, planning vengeance. Miss Hyams, accused of murdering her husband, is about to be convicted when Lukas bursts into court, says he killed Dilloway, and is last seen in shadow, on his march to the death chamber, while Miss Hyams returns to torching.

The exhibitor perhaps will derive his best results from concentration upon the names of Miss Hyams and Lukas, upon the gambling ship, which lends itself fairly well to exploitation, and the idea of the man, Lukas, who though he swore vengeance, could not go through with it and in the end took the electric chair rather than have the girl he loved executed for a crime she did not commit. The picture is obviously not for the younger generation.—Aaronson, New York.

20,000 Cheers for the Chain Gang

(Vitaphone)

Good

A good combination of a comedy situation and music and dancing serves to make this an entertaining short subject. Four convicts escape from a chain gang, during which time the local inspectors visit the prison and the warden makes a few changes: full dress for the prisoners, breakfast in bed, a dancing and singing chorus of girls for entertainment plus the Pickens Sisters, radio singers, and the like. The four return, beg to be taken back to prison, but the warden refuses. Then one of the four wakes up, and they are still breaking rocks on the road. It was all a dream, but amusing and entertaining comedy, in a slight take-off on "I Am A Fugitive."—Running time, 19 minutes.

Screen Souvenirs

(Paramount)

Entertaining

The Screen Souvenirs, being scenes of a newsreel character as well as the heavy melodrama of a bygone day in the motion picture, invariably present a few minutes of genuine entertainment for the motion picture goer of today. In this instance, Number 13 of the series, are pictured a fashion parade down New York's Fifth Avenue of the Nineties, an interesting shot of Josephus Daniels and a group in Washington during Wilson's Administration, in which the then Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Franklin D. Roosevelt is pictured, and an ancient melodrama of the two-timing beau brummel, the triangle and the poisoned candy, which with amusing accompanying dialogue, is good for numerous laughs.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Following the Horses

(Fox)

Thrilling

Thrilling, and moving at a terrific pace, this short subject indicates the manner in which the cameraman of the newsreel "always gets his horse," at race, polo match or field maneuver. The short not only is crowded with unusual achievements of the man behind the camera, but is packed with some of the thrill which is present for the spectator of the polo match, the dangerous steeplechase and the close finish of a fast sprint. The audience is virtually certain to respond vigorously to the subject. —Running time, 10 minutes.

Curiosities

(Columbia)

Entertaining

There is a certain amount of entertainment as well as general interest in this number of the Walter Futter-produced Curiosities, in which strange things and people the world over are pictured. Highlighting this number are a miniature cathedral, built entirely of matches; the manner in which a date orchard is perpetuated artificially, and several other oddities. John Medbury contributes a running fire of occasionally amusing comment, though the intent for amusement is continuous.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Paramount Pictorial

(Paramount)

Interesting

Highlighting this interesting number of the series is a group of shots, speeded up to an unusual degree, picturing the manner in which large, petaled flowers open during the course of one day, the action on the screen taking but a few seconds. In color, the effect is beautiful, and the action extremely interesting.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 186.—(A) How could you protect a circuit at least reasonably well in case, through some accident, you got caught short of fuses, only one fuse of the circuit having blown? Name two methods. (B) What emergency substitutes are there for fuses, and are they reasonably reliable? (C) Tell us how the projectionist may construct a substitute fuse of any desired capacity from material always available. (D) Suppose you were compelled to make an emergency substitute 40-ampere fuse. Tell us how you would do it.

Answer to Question No. 179

Bluebook School Question No. 179 was: (A) If the collector lens of a condenser be four and a half inches from the light source, and this distance be reduced to four inches, what diameter of the collector lens would pick up the same amount of light that was picked up by the four-and-a-half-inch lens? (B) What percentage of light would be lost by reducing the distance of the light source to the lens as set forth? (C) Exactly what factors limit the distance of the light source to the collector lens when a straight arc lamp is used? When a reflector type lamp is used?

The list of those who made at least reasonably satisfactory answers is the shortest within memory. Some pretty weird answers to all but Section C lie before me. The substitution of the word "loss" for gain was intentional, and the result was a bit surprising. Don't assume that what I may say is necessarily correct, especially when your own reason tells you it is not. By examining your Bluebook you might have secured absolute proof that light would be gained, not lost by reducing the distance of the light source to the collector lens. It is much better to express an honest opinion and be wrong than to try to fit something in that just won't fit. Not infrequently I have marked a man as answering correctly when he was entirely wrong on some one point. I did this for the reason that he set his views forth fully, and I knew he would recognize his error when the right answer was printed. I knew he would appreciate the courtesy and be encouraged, with no harm done to anyone. The following answered fairly correctly:

T. Wentworth, S. Evans and C. Rau, G. E. Doe, L. Van Buskirk and E. Kroll; D. Danielson (except B), L. F. Evans, E. W. Warner, W. Ostrum (except Section B), M. Simms and O. L. Daris, D. U. Grainger, H. Edwards, B. Giglah and P. Jackson, J. H. Rathburn and D. Little, C. D. Carmody, G. Johnson and N. T. Kane, H. True and S. True, D. R. Peters and D. Holler, W. and S. F. Love, R. S. Allen and T. N. Williams, H. Rogers, E. Harlor and G. Harrison.

(A) We will listen to brother G. E. Doe on this one. He says: "It is purely a matter of angles. Assuming a light source three-eighths of an inch in diameter, facing same layout or paper face of collector lens of any given diameter at four inches distance, from top edge of light source draw a line to and beyond top edge of lens. From lower edge of light source to and beyond lower edge of lens draw a second line—both of them straight, of course. If you then measure the distance between diverging lines thus established at four and a half inches distance from light source, such measurement will be the diameter of the lens necessary to equal light collection results of a lens of four-and-a-quarter-inch at four inches. The whole matter is well illuserated in Figure 36H, page 162, vol. 1 of the Bluebook.

"There is one question arises, however, namely, should not the two lines be from upper crater rim to lower edge of lens, and from lower edge of rim to upper edge of lens?"

I would answer that by saying this surmise is correct in theory, but for practical purposes I believe Figure 36H is best.

(B) Evans and Rau answer thus: "If the distance be reduced between light source and collector lens, as set forth, there would be no light loss. There would instead be a gain. See the Bluebook, vol. 1, 5th edition, pages 161 to 163.

(C) Allen, Williams and Rogers say: "Several elements are involved. First, if the collector lens be too close to the light source, breakage through too sudden expansion and (or) contraction of the superheated lens would be largely increased. Second, the surface of the collector lens will pit very rapidly, especially if copper coated carbons be used. Third, the lens will heat unevenly and inordinately at its top, by reason of the flame. Fourth, the light source distance must be such as will 'fit' or match the required light beam condition on the other side of the condenser.

"If it be a mirror, then the curvature and character of the same will be one determining condition. The element of heat also enters, of course, though not so much as in the case of the glass condenser."

D. Danielson answered Section C as follows: (A) Excessive heat on the lens. (B) Excessive pitting of the lens. (C) Mechanical construction. (D) Available free diameter of projection lens. (E) Extreme angle with which rays strike outer edges of collector lens. (F) Distance condenser to aperture. (G) Focal length of lens.

"With regard to reflector arc lamps, you surely mean distance of light source to reflector, for the fact remains that some reflector arc lamps do not have a condenser lens. The factors that would limit this distance are: (a) excessive heat, (b) size of reflector, (c) angle cone necessary to pick-up, (d) distance reflector to spot, (e) excessive pitting, (f) mechanical construction, and (g) focal length of reflector.

Heywood-Wakefield Shows $386,696 Six Months Loss

Heywood-Wakefield Company, manufacturers of theatre seats, among other products, reports for six months ended June 30, 1933, net loss of $386,696 after depreciation.

Current assets as of June 30, 1933, amounted to $3,488,070, and current liabilities were $243,568, comparing with $4,616,-895 and $190,380 respectively, on June 30 a year ago.

Buys Producers Laboratories

E. J. Rosenberg, for many years manager and director of publicity for Leo Brecher's Little Carnegie Playhouse, New York, has resigned. With Harry Glickman, laboratory technician, Mr. Rosenberg has bought the Producers Laboratories, at 630 Ninth Avenue, New York, where an innovation will be a special superimposed title department.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Chadron, Neb.

Dear Herald:

We had a very delightful visit with Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Pace of the Pace theatre at Gordon. The Pace is a beautiful theatre, much finer than is usually found in towns of that size. If the potato crop matures around Gordon it will certainly bring prosperity to that locality, as this town is located in the heart of the famous potato country of the Northwest.

At Hay Springs we met our old friends, Horn & Morgan of the Star theatre. Hay Springs is also in the potato country, and they have five large potato cellars, one of which holds 110 carloads of potatoes, and that's some potatoes, if you ask us. These potatoes are rigidly inspected by the Government and the most of them are sold for seed under a certificate from the Government and they bring an exceptionally high price on that account. Potatoes are King in this locality and when that crop clicks Horn & Morgan are right in clover at the Star theatre. These boys are regular contributors to "What The Picture Did For Me" and that's what helps to make the HERALD of such extreme importance to theatremen. They are swell fellows, you ought to meet 'em.

Jim Pace of the Pace theatre here in Chadron was playing "I Loved You Wednesday" with Warner Baxter and Elissa Landi the night we called. We stayed for five reels trying to figure out why he loved her Wednesday instead of Sunday, then we gave it up. We always had better luck on Sunday. We could get closer to 'em after a good Sunday dinner. They seem to warm up better on a full stomach. We understand that Liberty gave this one three stars, but then Liberty generally has plenty of stars, the most of which don't mean anything to theatremen. Warner played like he was pretty thoroughly disgusted with his part and Elissa overplayed her part trying to get something out of nothing. It's just another picture. Farther than that we are so dumb that it is painful.

Hot Springs, S. D.

There are four things that make this town world famous. The Evans plunge bath, the Hot Springs theatre and Mr. and Mrs. Rodell, who preside over the destinies of that beautiful playhouse. And when we say beautiful, that's what we mean. When you come here during the hot season and take a plunge in this famous bath, then visit the theatre and meet Mr. and Mrs. Rodell, you don't care if you never leave. We are going to make a tour of the northern Black Hills and then come back. We pity people who go east for a vacation. There's no sense in it.

The "Century of Progress" at Chicago is drawing many of the tourists now, which makes business rather slow here, but they'll come back, they always do. Mr. and Mrs. Rodell say that they are lost without the HERALD. There has been many a theatreman sunk for that same reason.

Rapid City, S. D.

Leo Petersen, manager of the Elks theatre, is a pretty swell guy, and his wife is a pretty swell guy too. Last night they had us up to their home to a trout dinner, and a trout dinner at Mrs. Petersen's house is something to write home about. Seven nice, big trout fried brown, and with all the trimmings that go with them, makes a man glad he's alive and sorry he didn't get here sooner.

Yesterday Leo drove us up in the mountains to Rushmore. Rushmore is where the famous Gutzon Borglum is chiseling the profiles of George Washington, Abe Lincoln, Thomas Jefferson and Teddy Roosevelt out of the rocks hundreds of feet high. He has the head of Washington pretty well completed and you can see it for miles before you get there.

Washington's nose is said to be sixteen feet long, which makes one wonder if Gutzon might not have had Schnozzle Durante in mind instead of George. The mouth is twelve feet across, which might suggest our friend, Joe E. Brown, but you will know it's George as soon as you see him.

We met Mr. Borglum and had a very nice visit with him. We had our picture taken together by Leo, and that ought to help both of us.

Today Leo is going to drive us up to Lead, Deadwood, Spear Fish, Belle Fourche and Sturgis to visit the boys up there, and that's what we call service. These Black Hills folks are chock full of service. There isn't much they wouldn't do for you. All of these Black Hills towns have fine theatres to entertain you of nights after you have feasted on the beauties of the Hills.

Deadwood, S. D.

Deadwood of today isn't like the Deadwood of "'76." It's somewhat larger but a whole lot tamer. Back in the old days Deadwood settled everything with a six shooter but now she don't have much to settle. Charlie Klein of the Deadwood theatre looks after all the social activities and is a universal favorite with the ladies. He is strong for carp. When he talks to film salesmen he talks in six different languages, none of which they understand. He buys film for the Black Hills Amusement Company consisting of four theatres, Hot Springs, Rapid City, Deadwood and Belle Fourche. Charlie loves the exchange managers, all of whom want to shoot him on sight.

At Lead we met our old friend, M. C. Kellogg. M. C. has a job that would just suit us. He manages the Homestake theatre for the Homestake Mining Company and they don't care if the theatre don't make a cent. It isn't run for profit, although they don't aim for it to run in the red. It is operated mainly for the employees of the Homestake company consisting of about three thousand men and their families. There is no show too big for the Homestake theatre, and there is no theatre better managed than the Homestake. That's what makes Lead the most important spot in the Black Hills. If you have never become acquainted with M. C. Kellogg you have missed the best part of your life. When you come to know him he will be one of the main attractions of the Black Hills. We'd love to spend a week with him.

James O'Neill operates the Vita theatre at Spearfish. When you meet him don't call him a Swede, he's a Dutchman from Cork. When we called on him he told us he thought we were about the ornariest pusillanimousest whelp he ever knew of because we hadn't called on him before. We told him we were rather choice of our company and he said, "Yes, it looks like it when you will be travelling with Leo Petersen." If it wasn't for his name we'd take him to be Irish. He wants us to come back sometime and go trout fishing with him. That's the most sensible remark he made. We may do it sometime.

Teddy Bryan operates the theatre at Belle Fourche for the Black Hills Amusement Company. Teddy is an old trouper. He played our house in Neligh many a time with the Clint and Bessie Robbins company. He was not only the "heavy" in character but he was the heavy in person. The Belle Fourche theatre is the finest in the entire circuit, and it would make some of the theatres in the large cities look like dog houses.

Al Brown says he is going to remodel his State theatre in Rapid City. Al is another old-time showman who knows what it's all about.

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

CHILD OF MANHATTAN: Nancy Carroll, John Boles—Another picture I wish I had left in the can. One of those pictures where the man has to marry the girl to save her reputation. Such pictures are getting so numerous they are disgusting. Fair business.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

END OF THE TRAIL, THE: Tim McCoy—A good western picture, combining the Indians and the Government troops on the western plains. McCoy is very good and with such a good story, this is an excellent western. Columbia wins all honors for the best western pictures and you can count on them to do business where westerns are wanted. Running time, 60 minutes. Played July 29.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

MAN AGAINST WOMAN: Jack Holt—Just another program picture from Columbia. A rather good love story and a little touch of action. Jack Holt gives a good performance (as usual) and Lillian Miles makes a very good entrance in talking pictures. Only a one day picture and business about average. This type of picture (gangster) does not go over here. Too many of them. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 22.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

NIGHT OF TERROR: Bela Lugosi, Sally Blane—Columbia could have failed to make this one and hurt no one. It's just another cheap horror picture. The only thing that helps it is that there are a few good laughs in it. If they are tired of this type better watch this one. We lost money on it. Running time, 65 minutes. Played August 1.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

NO MORE ORCHIDS: Carole Lombard, Lyle Talbot—A dandy picture. The popularity of the story helped out grand. Better play it. It's sure fire at the box office.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

NO MORE ORCHIDS: Carole Lombard—Fine picture but no drawing power. Didn't make our film rental. Played July 23-25.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SO THIS IS AFRICA: Wheeler and Woolsey—A picture full of dirt and suggestiveness from start to finish. Drew a good business but disgusted all the better class of people and the others didn't praise it at all.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SOLDIERS OF THE STORM: Regis Toomey, Anita Page—Nice little program picture which should please. Story is pretty weak but that's nothing new. Toomey and Page deserve some good breaks after all these years. Average business. Running time, 67 minutes. Played July 19-20.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

SOUTH OF THE RIO GRANDE: Buck Jones—One of the best westerns we have played. Story different. Scenes laid in Mexico.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

First National

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—Just another program picture that First National calls a "special." Joe E. Brown may be good in some places but in our town he is one grand flop. Story very good and full of laughs, but our patrons do not care for that. Business below average and here's hoping that the next Joe E. Brown picture will do a better business than the last three. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 20-21.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—It's a typical Joe E. Brown picture with none of the nonsense left out. Silly, impossible. Laughs from them who came to see it, but he don't mean much here in the city. Even the kids didn't fly in as they should, but then again, perhaps we expected too much. Running time, 73 minutes. Played July 24-25.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

LITTLE GIANT, THE: Edward G. Robinson—In my opinion, this is the best picture that Robinson ever made. It is a show for young and old and will hold interest from beginning to end. Plenty of laughs and action. Advertise this heavily and if you can get them in to see it you can rest assured that they will enjoy it. Played only one day, but wish we had it two days. Business better than average. Running time, 76 minutes. Played August 2.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SHE HAD TO SAY YES: Loretta Young, Lyle Talbot—A very pleasing little picture, well acted, good story, fairly clean and was well received by our Sunday and Monday patrons, and it drew better than average business. Not big but will get by in most towns as a good show. Runing time, 62 minutes. Played July 30-31.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

Fox

ADORABLE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Garat—Poorest one she ever made and if somebody don't get rid of this Henry Garat as a leading man, who is a pain in the neck, I'm ready to quit. Why do they have to import them from Europe? What's he got that Lyle Talbot or Clark Gable hasn't? Nevertheless it drew extra business. Business is picking up after a seven inch rain last night. Crops never looked better. Played August 1-2.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson Neb. General patronage.

BONDAGE: Dorothy Jordan, Alexander Kirkland—This film drew very poor for us and pleased about fifty per cent of those who saw it. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 21.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—Hard picture to report on. Great picture, certainly. Not for small town America. Aimed, apparently for the United Kingdom, yet still a marvelous screen achievement. If an "American" version had been made, leaving out about three reels of Cockney servant dialogue, the picture would undoubtedly register more strongly in your town and mine. I would say that it was the best foreign picture to be yet made in talking picture—but we are catering to Americans. Reports have already told the story on this one. Running time, 12 reels. Played July 30-August 1.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—The prize flop of the year and the highest priced. When you have a house acoustically perfect with W. E. sound and the audience say that they could only get about 80 per cent of the dialogue, there is something screwy with the English dialogue. What a nose dive it took; no business Sunday to speak of and every day of the run less. With the way they walked out on it, I thought we had the back door open, because it seemed that more walked out than came in. Why, they can't record the dialect so that it can be understood I can not understand, but there is one thing sure, that after the experience with "Cavalcade" and "Rome Express" the market for foreign pictures will be restricted in this house. I am off them for all time because the reaction is bad. Many more like the pair above and the sheriff's sign will be on the door. I lost my shirt on this one and also "Rome Express." The London correspondent of the Herald lays it to prejudice against all things English, but it is not; it is just that they can not get the dialogue as it is spoken and they go out and broadcast that fact.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—Only played this about a year old but it did business and pleased all. Just another example that a picture that will please your crowd is good no matter when it was made or how late you play it. They're all new till you've seen 'em. I've seen some poor reports on this show, but they liked it here. Running time, 9 reels. Played July 28-29.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. General patronage.

HELLO, SISTER: James Dunn, Boots Mallory—Not so good, and plenty raw spots. Did not please or draw average business. Play it on off night. Running time, 90 minutes. Played July 25.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg Ill. Small city patronage.

HOLD ME TIGHT: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Fair show, business a trifle above par, but a hacked up print. Snappy dialogue, if that's what your people want. Running time, 73 minutes. Played August 4-5.—Waler H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa.

HUMANITY: Boots Mallory, Alexander Kirkland—Just another picture, very weak at the box office and failed to please our crowd that comes on the night we charge fifteen cents. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 18.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

I LOVED YOU WEDNESDAY: Warner Baxter, Elissa Landi—More complaints on this than any for some time. Very poor recording and Miss Landi was exceptionally hard to understand. She seemed to be trying to act, and at beginning very silly. Not the real Miss Landi. Our second night proved it was below par entertainment. Played July 27-28.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy, Joan Bennett Good. Spencer Tracy as the hardboiled detective is fine, while Joan Bennett gives her usual fine performance. Plenty of comedy which is what the average patron wants, "believe it or not." Running time, 78 minutes. Played August 2-3.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy, Joan Bennett—Good picture except two rotten lines in last part of picture, when Tracy says I'll turn out the light and give her the works. All uncalled for. Screen last half before showing. Running time, 80 minutes. Played July 14-15.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. General patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien—This picture clicked for me. Best house on this one in three years. Reason: story ran serially in Capper's Weekly and they have a large following in this territory. Producers would do well to advertise in this paper.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien—Very good western. Zane Grey's name helps attendance. Running time, 64 minutes. Played July 28-29.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—About as good a Friday and Saturday program picture as we could want. More like it Mr. Producer. Running time, 78 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Very good audience reaction. Rough and tumble "girl and gob" romance that kept them laughing and sent them home happy. We are pleased to note Dunn-Eilers teamed again for next year. They have never done as good work separately as they do teamed. Let Fox continue giving this sweetheart team good human down-to-earth stories and they will mean Box Office. Running time, 78 minutes. Played July 21-22.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—This one pleased and drew a little better than average business. It has a good story and plenty of comedy. Go after business on this one. Running time, 78 minutes. Played July 26-27.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

SECOND HAND WIFE: Sally Eilers, Ralph Bellamy—A very entertaining picture that everyone liked. Sally Eilers is popular with my patrons, while Ralph Bellamy and Helen Vinson are fine in their roles. Little Karol Kay as Patsy almost steals the show. No complaints about this show. Running time, 64 minutes. Played July 26-27.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTNING: George O'Brien—We can always count on these Zane Grey-Fox-George O'Brien combinations. Pleased our Friday-Saturday patrons in every way. Betsy King Ross a youngster new to us, almost steals the show. The kids will go for this little tomboy in a great big way. Running time, 58 minutes. Played July 28-29.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTNING: George O'Brien—Fair western. Poor print. Operator reported holes on the sound track; you can imagine the rest. Running time, 64 minutes. Played August 5.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

TRICK FOR TRICK: Ralph Morgan, Victory Jory—Average Fox picture. Much below program classification.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TRICK FOR TRICK: Ralph Morgan, Victor Jory—Fox should be ashamed to release this as a feature picture; it might make a good single reel expose of magic tricks, but when you ask people to pay admission and sit for over an hour and see nothing but this mess you are asking too much. The kids liked it. Others walked out. No business. It must have cost Fox a few hundred dollars to make this one, in the cavalcade of hits. Running time, 68 minutes. Played August 4.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST: Loretta Young, Gene Raymond—The people who like the better type pictures thought this one a great show; the ones who like them hot and spicy walked out before it was over. If you can get the right people in to see this you will be okay; it's plenty good and plenty exciting during the last reel, but we could not sell it and it lost plenty for us. Running time, 85 minutes. Played July 23-24.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

Freuler

GAMBLING SEX: Ruth Hall, Grant Withers—Why they borrowed Hall to make this is sure a puzzle. Anyone could have done as badly. No story, poor direction and poor business. Played July 21-22. —Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MGM

FLESH: Wallace Beery—Fair, hot weather, no business. Played July 30-August 1.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HELL BELOW: Robert Montgomery, Walter Huston—MGM hit their stride again on this one. Not as good as "Hell Divers" but close to it. OK anytime. —Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LOOKING FORWARD: Lewis Stone, Benita Hume, Lionel Barrymore—Perhaps you notice that I placed Lewis Stone as the star of "Looking Forward," as he certainly deserves to be advertised as such. A high-class production that deals with something that we're all forgetting, the depression. The picture brings back memories of how you suffered (perhaps still are) during the depression. Lionel Barrymore gives, in my opinion, the poorest characterization in his long, splendid record. In the first place, he does not play at least one-half of the show. Strictly English dialect somewhat handicaps the show, and a host of unknown names don't help any. Complete cast, outside of Barrymore and Stone, aren't worth the film they waste. But only you know whether or not this will go over. I'd advise you to see it before playing. If Barrymore is a big favorite and you want to play it on your best nights, don't. Your audience will be disappointed completely, unless they are English; then you'll clean up; or if they like high class stuff. Running time, 74 minutes. Played July 28-29.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

MADE ON BROADWAY: Robert Montgomery, Sally Eilers—Our customers seemed to think it was just about OK and business was up a little, so that makes it "pleasing entertainment."—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT MARY: Loretta Young, Ricardo Cortez—Not a bad picture, but no power. Second night very poor.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneaoplis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT MARY: Loretta Young, Ricardo Cortez—Pretty fair satisfaction in this one. Nothing to write home about but still gave good satisfaction. However, the draw was not so good.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

NUISANCE, THE: Lee Tracy, Madge Evans—For the people that like talking pictures, this will be mighty fittin'. It talks long and hard. Business light.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

REUNION IN VIENNA: John Barrymore Diana Wynyard—A very good picture from Metro, but for some unknown reason it failed to please our patrons and business was about average. Both Miss Wynyard and Barrymore did some excellent acting and with Frank Morgan at his best, it was a great picture. We had only seven children to see this one and would advise you not to play this on a Family or Bargain day on account of the kids. Running time, 100 minutes. Played July 31.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

STRANGER'S RETURN, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Miriam Hopkins—Another Lionel (notice it's Lionel) Barrymore performance that clicks . . . this time a departure to the home-spun character, that pleased all classes. Running time, 88 minutes. Played August 6-7.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

TODAY WE LIVE: Joan Crawford, Gary Cooper—They certainly gave us enough of this. 115 minutes of what have you? Business light.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Monogram

JUNGLE BRIDE: Anita Page, Charles Starrett—Terrible. Page and Starrett acted as if they were jerked by strings. No good reason for wasting time making this trash. Played July 26-27.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Paramount

BEDTIME STORY, A: Maurice Chevalier, Baby LeRoy—Personally, I thought it just fair. Not as good as his previous pictures. It drew good business but not many comments.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

BEDTIME STORY, A.: Maurice Chevalier, Baby LeRoy—One of the best pictures in quite a while. This is Chevalier's best picture and, although Baby LeRoy stole the picture, Chevalier was very good. This is the type of entertainment that we need more of. You can play this and feel sure that the entire family will enjoy it. Come on, Paramount, give us more good pictures like this one. Running time, 89 minutes. Played July 24-25.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BEDTIME STORY, A: Maurice Chevalier, Baby LeRoy—This fellow very much over estimated. Certainly don't get to first base here. Picture very good the best, we believe, that this star is capable of making. Not a special. It's just another picture.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

GAMBLING SHIP: Cary Grant, Benita Hume—Patrons seemed to like this. It's of the program variety. Played August 1-2.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

EAGLE AND THE HAWK, THE: Fredric March, Jack Oakie, Cary Grant—A good picture with a bad ending. Why do they do it?—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

I LOVE THAT MAN: Nancy Carroll, Edmund Lowe—I can't understand why producers think they have to bring suggestiveness and dirt into otherwise perfectly good pictures. I have about had my fill of dirt lately and am going to ban this type of picture from my house. If producers want to make these types of shows they will have to hunt other houses to put them in; they won't get mine.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: Gary Cooper, Richard Bennett, Wynne Gibson, May Robson—An interesting story with an exceptional cast, pleased 90 per cent. Running time, 86 minutes. Played July 18-19.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: Peggy Hopkins Joyce, W. C. Fields, Stuart Erwin, Sari Maritza—A great comedy that pleases and gets money.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: Peggy Hopkins Joyce, W. C. Fields, Stuart Erwin—A very good picture from Paramount. The acting was excellent and the singing and dancing marvelous. If this picture had a better plot, it would have been one of the best pictures of the year. Personally, I would prefer this to any love story, but the demand is for love stories. Our patrons thought it only fair and business was about average. If your patrons like music and dancing, they are sure to like this. All of the Radio and film stars are excellent and by all means feature the girls in cellophane. Peggy Hopkins Joyce and W. C. Fields do some splendid acting and it is very hard to say who contributed the best acting to this one. However, if you play this one, I think you will do a good business and the majority will enjoy it. Running time, 65 minutes. Played August 3-4.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

JENNIE GERHARDT: Sylvia Sidney, Donald Cook—Very well liked but no drawing power—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Frances Dee, Buster Crabbe—Played on Community Day to much better than average business; comments all good; kid business doubled. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 27.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

MAMA LOVES PAPA: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—Just another program picture. Charlie Ruggles as funny as usual, but picture has no appeal to majority of people. This would go well on Family Day as it is good clean entertainment, with plenty of laughs. Paramount has made quite a few of these pictures this season and we hope that they will try to find better stories for the new season's product. Running time, 72 minutes. Played August 1.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MURDERS IN THE ZOO: Lionel Atwill, Charles Ruggles—This picture did very good business for me. However, if Charles Ruggles had not been in it the picture would have failed to click. He always saves a picture from flopping and people always enjoy seeing him.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

MYSTERIOUS RIDER THE: Kent Taylor—An excellent Zane Grey that will get real money on Saturday.—Chales Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PICK UP: George Raft, Sylvia Sidney—Fine picture. Above average business. Raft is getting a good following, and if his pictures continue to be good I believe he will be a fine bet for any exhibitor.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

PICK UP: George Raft, Sylvia Sidney—A very pleasing picture. Sure to register well. A clever team that should be together more often.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—Don't let 'em kid you. This is OK for Sunday and will get some money.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

STORY OF TEMPLE DRAKE, THE: Miriam Hopkins, Jack LaRue—Just another fair program picture from Paramount. The story was rather rotten and although the acting was fine the box office receipts were rather low. We would like to see the producers get away from the gangster type of pictures and maybe the exhibitors could do a little business. If you must play this one make it only one day and not on family day, then. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 26.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

STRICTLY PERSONAL: Marjorie Rambeau—Very nice picture. Did average business.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SUNSET PASS: Randoplph Scott—This is a business getter in the western line and don't mistake it. Did a big business here and pleased.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SUNSET PASS: Randolph Scott, Tom Keene—A box office natural. Business way above average with a tent show as opposition. Picture will please all the western fans and Zane Grey followers.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

TERROR ABOARD: Charles Ruggles, Neil Hamilton, Verree Teasdale—This Ruggles boy always seems to get the laughs. Can't say too much for the picture. The idea of freezing people to death in weather like this might be all right at that.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TERROR ABOARD: Charles Ruggles, Neil Hamilton—If your customers go in for wholesale murder, they are sure to like this one. In the entire picture about 20 people are murdered, and this is the type of picture that has never been popular. If you have to play it, put it on Saturday and you will get by. Absolutely the worst picture I have seen in many months. The entire world must be fed up on this type of entertainment. Running time, 65 minutes. Played August 5.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TONIGHT IS OURS: Fredric March, Claudette Colbert—Like a long crossword puzzle. Story one of those foreign affairs. Royalty, Queens, Dukes, Counts and no accounts. Much to do about nothing. If you can manage to stay until the finish, it has a pleasing ending. Much the best part of the picture is where it says the end. There may be spots where this picture will make a hit, but I can't think of the spot. If I had it to do over again, I would say no, not me. Played July 23-24.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

RKO

ANIMAL KINGDOM: Leslie Howard, Ann Harding—Just the kind to kill your business. And Liberty Magazine gave it four stars! And Radio City had to open with this! Don't play it at any price. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 24-25.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

COME ON DANGER: Tom Keene—Very good show. Drew Average mid-week business.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

DIPLOMANIACS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Plenty of unfavorable comment on this. Not up to some of their previous efforts.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DIPLOMANIACS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Just another picture from RKO. A little music, singing and dancing, but even this failed to make it good. This team has never meant anything at our box office and this is the worst business we have had in many months. Here's hoping that RKO will get a better break in the coming season. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 27-28.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

DIPLOMANIACS: Wheeler and Woolsey—This is up to Wheeler and Woolsey standard. Good entertainment. You know how they go in your town. Did not run "So This Is Africa" here. Heard it was vulgar. This one is clean for a Wheeler and Woolsey and seemed to please our patrons. Played July 29.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

GOLDIE GETS ALONG: Lili Damita, Charles Morton—Fair. You won't find them rushing in to see this. Slightly better than some of the independents. No cast and poor story. Played July 26-27.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

GREAT JASPER, THE: Richard Dix—If anyone wants to really know what is the matter with our business, both as to the theatre and the production end as well—make them look at this. It is a perfect example of the idiocy of this business. Why anybody should want to waste time, money and a good star on making it is almost beyond belief. I'm sorry to have to write the above about any picture that Richard Dix is in. He has to earn his living but Hollywood must be hard up for something to do to make Jaspers. Running time, 9 reels. Played July 19-20.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot, Robert Armstrong—This picture is a mechanical wonder and will draw people that seldom come into your theatre. I played it right after a tent show and business was not as big as it could have been, but it will make money for anyone if properly exploited.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

LUCKY DEVILS: William Boyd—Good little action picture with enough variations to make it interesting. Fair business. Played July 21-22.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SWEETHEART: Ginger Rogers, Norman Foster—Did a nice business. People seemed to enjoy themselves and came back to the next picture, so what?—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SWEETHEART: Ginger Rogers, Norman Foster—A sweet show that pleased all—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SWEEPINGS: Lionel Barrymore—A mighty fine clean story, well acted and presented. Pleased some of the older people. The younger generation thought it very silly. And it drew very poor two days' business. Running time 78 minutes. Played July 16-17.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

TOMORROW AT SEVEN: Chester Morris, Vivienne Osborne—A simple story but a great small town picture. They got a great kick out of the two dumb detectives.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

TOPAZE: John Barrymore—To paraphrase Will Rogers, "just the death of another faun." Production is well done, acting superb and casting perfect but our patrons (those few that came) did not go for it. Our personal opinion is that the picture is too slow in movement, too much dialogue, no action and the expected humor almost non-existent. Barrymore fans should like it because that is all there is to it. Running time, 78 minutes. Played July 23-25.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

DON'T BET ON LOVE: Lew Ayres, Ginger Rogers—Cute little picture that has been done about a jillion times, both silent and talking. A good family entertainment, but why they wasted a good cast on this trivial yarn in this merry year of 1933 is just another Movie Mystery. Ayres is fine, he always it; Rogers is good, too, but why not make pictures when we all know we need pictures. An Ayres date with the good recording and cast that they had in this one should be worth while—but that old story ruined it. Running time 7 reels. Played July 23-25.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. General patronage.

DON'T BET ON LOVE: Lew Ayres, Ginger Rogers—Good little program picture. Played July 30-31.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FLAMING GUNS: Tom Mix—Fine. Different type of western. Pleased majority. Played July 28-29.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

FOURTH HORSEMAN, THE: Tox Mix—Good Mix picture. Seems like his pictures lack the punch they used to have. He still has a good following and seems to please them. Drew good business against a tent show.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

LAUGHTER IN HELL: Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart—Universal sure slipped on this one, which we hope is the last of the chain gang pictures. It's so bad in spots that many women walked out on it. When the scene showing the hanging of the four niggers comes on you would have thought the show was over the way the women came out. Watch your step. It's brutal and raw meat. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 28.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville Zasu Pitts—Just what our crowd likes, judging by the way they laughed and turned out both nights. Spicy, but not smutty or vulgar. Wish even the so-called specials gave such satisfaction. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 26-27.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

Too Bad! Bylsma Going Poetic

There's nothing else to do now, Jaysee. I doubt whether even a visit from you would get Pete Bylsma organized again. Look what he's doing now, spilling poetry all over his town, Napoleonville, Fla., and the Victory Theatre. Well—

When the silver dust from life's pathways you've trod
Has powdered your golden hair
When the roses that now bloom on your blushing cheek
Are replaced by deep lines of care
When your fleetness of limb denoting vigor of youth
With that vanished youth hath flown
When those bright eyes, driven back by the hammer of time,
No longer resemble your own
Then, fixed as the sun, the moon and twinkling stars
In their heavenly home of blue
With unabated ardor, will the love I now pledge
Be burning as brightly for you
And when life's book is closed, forever sealed are its pages,
Side by side shall our spirits walk down thru the ages
Where perhaps some new sun in its magnificent splendor
Will smile its approval on our love true and tender.

Warner Bros.

42ND STREET: Warner Baxter, Bebe Daniels, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—It has all been said, there isn't any more. Running time, 89 minutes. Played July 30-31-August 1.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

GIRL MISSING: Ben Lyon, Glenda Farrell—Pleased very well. Good mystery story and fortunately only one murder in the whole eight reels. That's some kind of a record. Our audience greatly enjoyed Glenda Farrell's work. That gal is good. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 26-27.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

HAUNTED GOLD: John Wayne—Exceptionally good picture of the western type. Did fine mid-week business.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

KING'S VACATION, THE: George Arliss—Excellent picture and pleased those who saw it but they were few.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PICTURE SNATCHER: James Cagney—Fast, breezy stuff, that's hard to sell here. Supporting cast wasn't much. Ralph Bellamy was punk in this and Alice White wasn't much better. Cagney works hard, and carries the show by himself, but my crowd just don't want him, and that's that. Played July 31-August 1.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

PRIVATE DETECTIVE 62: William Powell—A very pleasing pictpure and where Powell is popular this one will do business and please. We did less than average as he is very much disliked here, but those who saw the show praised the picture. Running time, 67 minutes. Played August 2-3.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

SILK EXPRESS: Neil Hamilton, Sheila Terry—Just another picture. No compliments—no complaints. Neil Hamilton and Sheila Terry do not mean anything to my patrons. Guy Kibbee is the whole show. Running time, 63 minutes. Played July 29-30.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SILK EXPRESS: Neil Hamilton, Sheila Terry—A fairly good mystery picture, but not up to the Warner standard of releases. Pleased all those who like mystery murder plays. Others were disappointed. Did not draw average business. Running time, 61 minutes. Played July 19-20.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

WORKING MAN, THE: George Arliss—Played this right after "Elmer" and what a pleasure. Anyone who don't play this is nuts. Here's a picture, class, comedy, everything to make it give the business it did. Everyone pleased. Why not? Business was K. O. The best Arliss has done in a long, long time. Satisfactory. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 26-27.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

World Wide

DYNAMITE RANCH: Ken Maynard — Doubled with "Looking Forward" for a Saturday matinee kids' show and it proved to be the poorest combination in a long, long time. Although matinee business was above par, unfavorable comments are bound to hurt. But an excellent combination next Saturday matinee will bring me 'way above par, "Hold Me Tight" and "Smoke Lightning" with George O'Brien. Back to good ole "Dynamite," it's not worth the electricity. Let it ride, pass. Running time, 56 minutes. Played July 29.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

FALSE FACES: Lowell Sherman, Lila Lee—Poor. No business. Sherman's acting and directing are both poor. Played July 23-25.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

FALSE ALARM: Scrappy Cartoon—Fair.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LAUGHING WITH MEDBURY AMONG DANCING NATIONS: Medbury Series—This is only fair entertainment and if you do not have this series bought, you are a lucky exhibitor. If we did not have this poor short to run, we would consider ourselves very lucky. Columbia, let's have some good shorts. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MEDICINE SHOW: Krazy Kat—Good— Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PAPERHANGER: Krazy Kat—An excellent cartoon.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PROSPERITY BLUES: Krazy Kat—When it comes to cartoons, we believe that Columbia has just as good as any producers. This is very good and has plenty of music with it. These Krazy Kat cartoons are all good and here's hoping they continue. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PARTNERS TWO: Sunrise Comedy—A Jewish monologue. Just fair.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS: Just another one-reeler from Columbia that is poor entertainment. We will be glad when these shorts from Columbia have been used up. Columbia has poor shorts this season (except the cartoons). Better luck next season. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

THROWING THE BULL: World of Sport—And what bull. Phooey. Recording was like an old style phonograph. Photography not much better. Let it ride. Running time, 8 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

Educational

DESERT DEMONS: Battle for Life Series—An A No. 1 single reel. Will please them all.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

FEELING ROSY: Andy Clyde—Andy Clyde always pleasing and this no exception.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

KRAKATOA: Of vital interest. Had many fine comments on this. Shows the eruption of a volcano. —Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

TORCHY'S LOUD SPOOKER: Ray Cooke—Torchy in a very funny spook comedy. Your audience will roar at this, and clean as a hound's tooth.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Fox

HAVANA HO! Magic Carpet Series—One of the best of this series. Would have been extra good had it had an announcer.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TAKING THE CURE: Magic Carpet Series—In my eyes these and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's FitzPatrick Traveltalks are the only two travelogues worth running. Fox's has beautiful music and no silly, boresome narrative to put you asleep. Both are always worth the time. Running time, 8 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

MGM

BIG DITCH OF PANAMA, THE: FitzPatrick Traveltalk—Started with pictures taken over 20 years ago, when Canal was started, and ended after it was finished. Is interesting.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town paronage.

BULLONEY: Flip the Frog—Nothing to rave about. On a par with others.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

CHILI AND CHILLS: Oddity—Good.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

CUCKOO THE MAGICIAN: Flip the Frog—Just another sorry cartoon from Metro. We are certainly glad that we have only a few of these not played. People even walk out of these, where a year ago they would ask when Flip would be on again. Metro has certainly gone milking this season. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

DESERT REGATTA: Sport Champion—Good, some very interesting shots.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

FALLEN ARCHES: Charlie Chase—A better comedy than the last two of Charley Chase. I hope they will continue to improve, for they certainly have plenty of room for it. Metro has been down on comedies this season or they are holding the good ones back. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford. Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

FITZPATRICK TRAVELTALKS: In my eyes, these and Fox's Magic Carpet Series are the only two travelogues worth running. Metro's has good narrative, well spoken. Both are always worth the time. Running time, 8 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

GIRL GRIEF: Charlie Chase—Fair. The cats save the show.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ICELAND: Fitzpatrick Traveltalks—A very interesting and educational one-reeler, showing the customs and industries of Iceland. We believe that Metro has the best traveltalks of all the companies and they go over good here. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

KID FROM BORNEO, THE: Our Gang—Got lots of laughs. Is as good as any previous. Would appreciate a report from someone that has run "Inflation." —D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MOTORCYCLE MANIA: Sport Champion—A very good one-reeler, showing the art of motorcycle riding and quite a few good stunts. This series is very interesting but our patrons do not seem to care for this type of entertainment. Running time, 9 minutes. —J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

NERTSERY RHYMES: Ted Healy—Not up to the previous comedies of this series. The story is slow and there is very little singing and practically no dancing. The scenes are beautiful, but it takes more than scenes to make good shorts. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SHOW BUSINESS: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—Fair.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

THROTTLE PUSHERS: Sport Champion Series—Automobile races at Indianapolis in thrills and spills. Was enjoyed by all.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WRECKETY WRECKS: Taxi Boys—Just another poor two-reel comedy. Metro has made some very good comedies (not this year) but it seems that they have lost control. We have played only two or three good comedies from Metro this season and will be glad when the rest are over. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Paramount

ALOHA OE: Royal Samoans—Not as good as some of the others, but it'll pass bye-bye.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

ALOHA OE: Royal Samoans (Screen Song)—This is absolutely one of the best one-reelers we have had in our house in the last two years. Plenty of dancing, singing and music along with a very clever cartoon. It pleased our entire audience and many commented on it. Give us more like this one. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BETTY BOOP'S BIG BOSS: Talkartoon—Pass this one. Just some more of Hollywood's dirty ideas. —Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

BETTY BOOP'S CRAZY INVENTIONS: Talkartoon—A better than average Boop cartoon.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LET'S DANCE: Burns and Allen—Burns and Allen in a typical skit. Nothing extra but will get by.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MIDNIGHT FROLICS: Eddie Cantor—Will please any class of patrons. Eddie Cantor can be used in billing. Print OK.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MOONLIGHT FANTASY: Vincent Lopez and Orchestra—One of the best one-reelers we have ever had on our screen. Why don't the producers make more of these? Plenty of music and some of the best numbers of popular music. Please let us have more like this. These orchestra selections are very popular. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

OVER THE JUMPS: Sports Eye View—A good sport reel.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SING, BING, SING: Bing Crosby—A slapstick comedy built around Crosby, who sings several numbers satisfactory. Running time, 18 minutes.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N.D. Small town and rural patronage.

SING, SISTERS, SING: Three X Sisters—A very fine musical single.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

YOUR HAT: Burns and Allen—Good. Running time, 10 minutes.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO

BULLY'S END, THE: Fable—Good.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

GOLF CHUMP, THE: Edgar (Average Man) Kennedy—Kennedy gets mad at everyone in general. Wife, mother-in-law, wife's brother, etc., all get him in a swell humor to play golf on a phoney guest card. You can imagine the rest. Audience liked it. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

SO THIS IS HARRIS: Phil Harris, Walter Catlett—Easily worth extra billing. A three-reel musical which is unique and different. Music good, girls not bad, Walter Catlett okay, Phil (Coconut Grove) Harris—one of the few radio band leaders who acts and looks like a man, even though he is tagged as a crooner. Running time, three reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

State Rights

DUAL CONTROL: Mollisons—Picked this up as a scoop for my news immediately on the arrival of Mollisons here. It must have been made some time ago in England, mostly stunt flying, and shows the way they're accustomed to flying. If played while the Mollinsons are "hot," this might mean something. But the reel itself is poor in most everything. Running time, 7 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

United Artists

BABES IN THE WOOD: Silly Symphony—Great, the best short subjects we have had this year. Music and color are 100%.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MICKEY'S GALA PREMIERE: Mickey Mouse—In our opinion the best Mickey Mouse of them all and that is going some.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

FINISHING TOUCH: Skeets Gallagher, June Clyde—A little above average for a two-reel comedy. Domestic wrangle with mother-in-law as the usual cause of the trouble. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

HOLDUP, THE: Radio Series featuring Morton Downey—Light story with Downey singing a couple of tunes. There was a tall man in this, don't know who he was, that sings a few lines. Has a better voice than Downey. Running time, two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MERRY DOG, THE: Pooch the Pup—Excellent cartoon for anybody's program. "Night Before Christmas" theme with snow storm and blizzard effects which almost made us forget that it was the hottest day of the summer. (106 and no shade.) Running time, 8 minutes.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

WILD AND WOOLLY: Oswald Cartoon—Perfectly satisfactory. Running time, 8 minutes.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BOSKO THE DRAWBACK: Looney Tune—Just a cartoon.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

C'EST PARIS: An excellent color musical. Give it your best playing time.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

CURIOUS CUSTOMS OF THE WORLD: E. M. Newman Traveltalks—Only fair entertainment. We think that these may please patrons in the large cities but in the small towns they are flops. Here's hoping that Vitaphone will discontinue these. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

DOUBLE-CROSSING OF COLUMBUS, THE: Charles Judels—As good a two-reel musical as we have ever played. Good comedy and fine singing and an excellent chorus and dancer.—Charles Niles, Nile Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

FIFI: Vivienne Segal—This was enjoyed more than "Elmer the Great," as it was on the same bill. Beautiful singing, it's the usual Warner short. Excellent! Running time, 18 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

KING SALMON, Pepper Pot—Just another one-reeler from Vitaphone, fairly entertaining and educational. Showing the Alaska Salmon, with dialogue by Lowell Thomas. We ran this once and then shipped it back to the exchange. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

NORTHERN EXPOSURE: Color musical—After two good shorts from Warners this spoils it. Dancing ensembles poor, nothing to the songs. In fact, color wasted on this one. It'll get by, and that's just so-so. Running time, 19 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

CUT OF THE PAST: Pepper Pot Series—This is just another poor one-reeler from Vitaphone. This entire series should be discontinued or improved. If Vitaphone continues to make such shorts as this they will certainly lose their reputation for making good shorts. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PIE A LA MODE: Broadway Brevity—A rather entertaining comedy of the slapstick variety. There were a few laughs in it and some dancing numbers. Not as good as the usual Broadway Brevity comedies. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TIP-TAP-TOE: Hal LeRoy, Mitzi Mayfair—Another good two-reel musical. Mostly dancing, but can these youngsters dance or can they dance? Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

WAY OF ALL FRESHMEN, THE: Hal LeRoy, Mitzi Mayfair—Excellent, wonderful. We cannot find sufficient words to describe this short. It is positively the best two-reeler we have played in our theatre in many months and we are considering a second run. Dancing, singing and full of interest. This should have been in color by all means. If so, there would have been no question as to its being the best short of the season. Play this and then you will agree with me that it is one of the best you have eyer played. Come on, Warner, give us some more. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WAY OF ALL FRESHMEN, THE: Hal LeRoy, Mitzi Mayfair—Just another excellent two-reeler. How that couple can tap is nobody's business. By all means play it! Running time, 17 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

WRONGORILLA: Jack Haley—Just another comedy with lots of laughs and silly enough to be funny. Haley is fairly good, but could do better. Come on, Vitaphone, give us some more good ones. You have done it, so don't stop now. Running time, 18 minutes. —J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Serials

Universal

LOST SPECIAL, THE: Frank Albertson—First installment starts with a bang. We know what became of the train but we can see right now that it will keep the hero and the heroine busy for the next eleven weeks finding out what the audience learns in the first reel. More about this one next week. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

LOST SPECIAL, THE: Frank Albertson—Chapter two and getting better. To be continued. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THE "WINN-AHS"

Turn to page 58 for the names and campaigns of the major award winners in the Round Table-Producers July Exploitation Contest. Look them over, folks, the seven who came through from big city and small town, from first runs and second in one of the toughest trials ever put on to test showmanship. Yes, tough it was, for frankly there was not too much to choose between the winning campaigns and many of the others, the final selections made only after the most careful elimination and exhaustive analysis by the judges.

The thrill obtained from the unprecedented number of entries is heightened by the quality of showmanship they disclose, and although there are but seven major awards, the sterling efforts of the majority shall not go unrewarded. For with the endorsement of the various judges, the Round Table awards the Certificate of Honorable Mention, and this recognition will go forward to those selected as deserving of this tribute, the names of whom are gratefully inscribed on page —.

The numerous campaigns, their comprehensiveness, the high degree of box office exploitation attest to the sincerity and enthusiasm of their senders. These lead us to believe the desire to win was not the big reason for this spontaneous outpouring, but those who entered did so for the love of it, and for no other reason. And that the winners are located in small town as well as big city, operating subsequents as well as first runs, further indicates that gifted showmanship is a matter of native ability rather than of location.

On behalf of the judges and the members of the Round Table Club, we extend our heartiest congratulations to the winners of the main prizes and the Certificates of Honorable Mention. Plus an extra bow to the many other contestants who made this winning possible, and deepfelt appreciation to every contributor who helped put over the greatest contest in the history of motion picture trade paper publication.

THE GLAD HAND

To the many helpful ways of bringing in extra business, add that of going out into the surrounding country and mixing with the rural trade. Of course, it's an old political standby of election candidates, but Tom Edwards emphasized this smart idea in his practical article on rural business in the August 5 issue.

The good old personal ccntact, the "hello Bill" stuff is just as effective today as it was when Columbus mitted his first Indian, and long-headed showmen never pass up an opportunity to become better acquainted with their patrons, whether it be in the lobby of the theatre or going out among them.

Tom's idea presents many possibilities for outside contacts, as besides visiting with the folks, managers might arrange to address the various lunch, civic and women's clubs in nearby communities on the different phases of theatre operation and exhibition. It all makes for valuable good will.

"HANDS ACROSS THE SEA"

Though the majority of the exploitation received by this department comes from theatres in the United States and Canada, we note with appreciation the increase of campaigns from members in many foreign countries.

Lately, we have reported activities from showmen in England, South America, India, and on our desk this morning, the mailman has deposited well executed campaigns from Havana, and more distant, from Budapest.

Recent campaigns from these members indicate an originality and a flair for "sock selling" that compares favorably with the efforts of managers in this country. To the 4,000 Round Table members here and abroad, "hands across the sea" becomes more than just a polite phrase.

WE REPEAT

In last week's issue, your chairman pledged himself to act as spokesman to Washington in behalf of those managers who labor under sweatshop conditions in return for utterly ridiculous salaries. With this in mind, we repeat: if yours is a situation that needs attention, or if you know of a case where adjustments are necessary—then write immediately to the Round Table. Names will not be divulged. Furnish the facts that we may go before the Administration well armed.

This is the managers' Independence Day. Never before has there been so unexcelled an opportunity to shake off the shackles of this civilized serfdom. Here is the path through the jungles that leads to decent working conditions, shorter hours and better pay.

Will you take it?

ROUND TABLE ANNOUNCES AWARDS FOR JULY EXPLOITATION CONTEST

Outstanding Exploitation Exhibited by Many Contestants To Be Rewarded With Certificates of Honorable Mention

Appreciating the high degree of showmanship merit displayed in the great majority of entries in the Round Table Club Producers' World's Fair July Exploitation contest, in addition to the seven major prize winners, the judges announce the special award of a Certificate of Honorable Mention to the numerous contestants, who, in the opinion of the judges, warrant such consideration.

This indicates the tightness of the race and the closeness of the judging. The seven mentioned in the next column were selected only after the most careful consideration, but there were so many who turned in excellent campaigns that "Honorable Mentions" were determined upon.

These major prize winners may well be proud of their efforts, for they were in a large size battle and won in the face of the keenest kind of a "ding-dong" fight, the hardest ever waged in the history of motion picture theatre exploitation. None of them won by a very wide margin, but they had that extra something that decided the judges.

Cities and small towns, de luxers and limited capacity houses, first runs and subsequents were represented in the final awards, proving that ace showmanship is not limited to the size of a community or the capacity of a theatre. We now give you the highlights of the winning campaigns. We hope you get as much kick out of them as we did.

"Picture Snatcher"

Local photographer appointed official "picture snatcher" and took free pictures of patrons in lobby in return for expected business. These shots shown on the screen. Photographer also supplied free programs on the back of which there was a blank space in which folks were asked to write in the title as many times as possible, for free photos, tickets and other prizes.

Newspaper dug up unusual news shots for lobby display, and also put on "snatcher" contest, by having staff photographer snap photos on street and offering free tickets for those who discovered themselves in newspaper cuts. sandwiches and other "Hollywood" dishes.

Photo at bottom of page shows eight boys in novel street bally. Each carried dummy cameras, and lining up at busy corners ostensibly to take pictures, were placed so that title was flashed. After the pitch the boys would jumble the letters and proceed to another corner. Sid promoted plane to fly above city dropping programs and free tickets, ship plentifully bannered with picture ads. Flyer paid off in lobby ad and theatre supplied gas.

The "deaf man" street car bally was also put on, having boy in street car ask "deaf" father to take him to see picture, the old man not hearing, and boy repeating title and theatre. Two girls worked house to house getting signatures to a Cagney testimonial, and two operators were planted in prominent window phoning everyone in town about picture. Everything else was done in proportion, and Sid says he only spent $20 more than his regular budget. Great work, boy, and did the judges think so?

"Kid from Spain"

Put on the "this is no bull" cow gag and followed it up with a man in Spanish costume playing guitar on main street and surrounding towns. Promoted the local paper for free front page boxes for three days in advance announcing the coming of the "big picture." Newspaper also came across with 150 inches of free display space.

Advance radio time for various periods amounting to two and one-half hours was promoted over local station, also during run of picture. Regular heralds and window cards distributed and posted, cost of which was held down by selling space to local merchant.

Special front illustrated at bottom of column was more pretentious than usual, decorations being mostly home made with flags, banners, etc., borrowed for the occasion without cost. Regular newspaper ad budget was upped for a few extra dollars, which Hutchins says always means more business. This campaign is a fine example of small town, small house exploitation where the advertising budget is held down to a minimum, for big returns.

Blue and white sailor costumes on ushers, door man and cashier one week in advance, with title sash, all promoted without cost. Inside lobby, spotted, advance placard repsenting book labeled "Passenger List" with space below for patron signatures. Card attached explained that 50 signers would be taken for free ride and given courtesy tickets. Awards at preview of picture.

Most popular girl contest for free ocean trip put on, traveling outfit for winner also supplied gratis. Ballots given with every paid admission. Tied in local paper, which ran stories also coupon good only with admission.

Submarine cutout used on "Hell Below" was repainted and renovated, made into float on truck promoted without cost, on streets for three days in advance. Sea scout and boy scout buglers in uniform worked on the float for passes. After street ballly, cutout was removed and used as theatre front without extra cost, including buglers in lobby as atmosphere.

Photo, head of column, shows Hart's advance lobby set piece. Compo lighthouse with twinkling lights, and model sailboats, with hidden fans to simulate ocean breezes were used, and changing amber and green lights heightened the effect.

Ed got a lot out of his pop. contest, tieing it in appropriately with the free ocean trip. His street bally and newspaper hookups were put on with a minimum expense, the entire campaign being very well rounded.

The Heat Wave Arrived

Mitchell Conery

"College Humor"

Newspapers went heavily for this campaign. Breaks included cartoon strips on "Humor" dances, nickname contest for football teams, vote contest for most popular college coop ad page with scene shot cut up into jig with piece in each ad, stories calling for oldest "dizziest lizzie" for street bally, classified ad tieup, and newspaper search for Gracie Allen's brother.

Other click gags included presentation of "Fraternity Stomp" from the picture at popular dance hall, distribution of no cost, heralds by leading grocery stores, and a good lobby gag was a girl phoning on a dummy instrument with buzzer and bell to people about the picture.

Dummy on ladder, was used above marquee with tieup copy, as shown in shot at top of column three, and Jack Oakie's slicker was displayed in prominent store with invitation for locals to also autograph it. Slicker also used in display ad. Skating rink borrowed slicker and broke big free ads to announce it could be seen there. Special plane flight in which pilot tossed out parachuted footballs crowded the streets. Lobby inside and out had college background with banners and pennants of universities.

Not only did Conery slam this over big, but the picture was a subsequent run, indicating that he sure managed to extract a lot of box office nourishment with what is undoubtedly a sock campaign.

"Hold Your Man"

Mayor allowed banners on city sprinklers which read, "Look out for the heat wave," etc., and this line was used throughout, an instance of which is indicated in shot below. Hizzoner also helped by making radio plugs. County clerk gave invitations to every newly married couple week prior and during run with advice around title.

Ordinary oil lamps in window displays with copy to effect that parents should not show lamp for wandering children as they would be at picture. Cook books in store room for some time were cover printed with tie-up copy and given away by radio station to those sending in favorite "hold your man" recipe. Shipping tags had pieces of rope and safety pins with "how to hold your man" copy.

A "hold your man" register in lobby used in contest to determine longest time woman had held on to hubby, and 1888 was the winning date. Tough newspaper came in on a gag to guess how hot it would be the following day, copy leading off with "The heat wave is coming." Fifteen hundred answers came in, for five free ticket awards.

Radio, newspapers, telephone announcements, posters, special windows and a host of other selling ideas distinguished this campaign. For a two-day date, a barrel of work was put in on it, and that the entire cost was but a few dollars over the regular small budget speaks well for Larson, "F. P." says every one in town helped his campaign, which proves that he is putting his popularity over to practical use. Everyone who was asked put a shoulder to the wheel and many volunteered their aid to help this hard hitter put over his box office "sockos." Well done, big boy.

Dummy on Ladder

"State Fair"

Roy has no paper in his town, but he is a printer, so he got on the job and turned out a smart campaign that he says got him the biggest business he has played to in three years. Figuring this as a farmer's picture, Adams went after that trade heavy.

His Fox exchange not having the mats he wanted on hand, he drove 15 miles to a neighboring printer and borrowed a stock cut of a pig using this for the center of a tack card which was distributed all around the county, tacking them on fence posts and mail boxes in front of every farm house. You can see "Blue Boy's" brother in the shot below. We clipped Roy's card in the cut to give you a close up of the porker. Roy also printed handbills with Roger's picture and these were put out among the rural trade, in addition to a better than average posting of regular accessories.

Adam's work in the face of many obstacles is noteworthy. With but a short time to advertise after the confirmation of his date, and the picture having played three runs in Lansing, just 12 miles away, this exhibitor is to be praised for his ingenuity. Though his entire campaign was home-made, so to speak, and the cost a few dollars, nevertheless it served its purpose in bringing in the bucks, and that's what counts.

NRA TIEUP FINE GOODWILL BUILDUP FOR SMART SHOWMAN

Manager George Sobel, Stanley-Warner Park Theatre, neighborhood house at 31st and Diamond streets, Philadelphia (Pa.), has just put over in cooperation with the local workings of the NRA, a most practical community build-up idea by tieing in with his local Chamber of Commerce for a free employment agency in the theatre lobby.

Sobel, being one of the directors, convinced his Chamber officials of the plan's merits and with them called upon William Goldman, Warner district general manager, who not only endorsed the idea but agreed to institute it at other theatres should the reaction be favorable at the Park.

The service was made absolutely free to all, no admission ticket being necessary, and the booth was placed within a few steps of the street, easily available to those who wished to register. A trailer on the screen, heralds and lobby posters were used to publicize the service, and for the first time in years, the local papers gave the theatre a break with stories and three column cuts.

Sixteen jobs were obtained and over 1,000 applications were filed the first day, and committees called upon nearby plants to urge cooperation and to ascertain future employment needs. Screen mention and an honor roll for those taking on unemployed are anticipated slants to be developed. Commerce Chamber expects to draw up plan and forward to General Hugh Johnson for his consideration in other theatres.

We recommend this smart idea to managers everywhere, for as Sobel says, the sooner your unemployed get back on a payroll, that soon will the box office fatten. And the opportunities for good will build up are tremendous. No doubt George will be glad to send detailed information to any members interested in putting this on in their communities.

YOU LIKE THIS?

World's Fair Campaigns

moted an engine if he had some place in the lobby to put it.

A feature of the campaign was a "Casey Jones" contest, held on the stage, in which six local groups competed for the best rendition of the old favorite. This gag not only filled the house, but Hammond says he had to turn them away. To back up the railroad front and stage show, an old Ford was made up into a locomotive and used on the main streets and in surrounding territory.

Anderson being a big textile center, the mills were covered with heralds to all employees, and Sam was also allowed to post the bulletin boards with window cards and other advertising, and the newspapers came across with nice breaks on the show, with cuts and stories on the front and "Jones" stage contests.

Hammond states that in his 17 years in show business this was one of his most profitable campaigns, and that folks came from all over to see his railroad front and the show. Being in an industrial town, Sam evidently hit upon the ideal way to sell this railroad picture and he sure sold it to the skies, spending very little above his regular budget to do so.

All in all, a fine, well rounded group of campaigns, effectively put over at small cost, and which produced at the box office. They reflect plenty of hard work, ingenuity, and novel showmanship, and we know that all the brothers join us in congratulating the winners and wishing them a fine time at the World's Fair.

The other entries will all be as thoroughly publicised in the regular columns of the Round Table. They are highly interesting, and have proven their worth at the cashier's window. We will try to have the Certificates of Honorable Mention in the mails in the next few days. Good night, and many thanks for your swell work.

FIELD'S TEN DOLLAR STAGE SET RECEIVES FAVORABLE COMMENT

Milton O. Field, of the Parker Theatre, Darby (Pa.), can be counted in among those keen showmen who are continually striving for and effecting inexpensive audience attractors. He rings the bell with his description of a summer stage set that went over well enough to net him a front page story in his local paper.

Milt's idea is a garden and fountain stage set, shown between pictures. With the last fadeout, the stage lights come up, disclosing a white cottage surrounded by stately trees. In the foreground is a whitewashed fence surrounding an old fashioned garden containing a practical fountain. Clever lighting creates a moonlight effect that with the running water sells plenty of coolness.

Fields is kind enough to say that he will be happy to send specifications and complete plan of the set to any members who are interested, and from the way it sounds, he should have many requests, especially since Milt states the entire cost was only $10.

Fred, in Person!

You all know the old one about what a postman does when he gets his vacation; well, the above photo shows what an aggressive showman does when he gets his. Here's Fred L. Bixby of the Strand Theatre in Lawrence, Mass., as caught by your chronicler on board the S. S. Morro Castle, Havana bound. A pleasant time was had by all, eh what, Fred?

GET BUSY WITH THIS DANDY SCHOOL GAG SENT US BY EBINGER

When it comes to up and doing showmen, Waldo Ebinger, manager at the Strand out in Ft. Madison, Iowa, gets the hand-painted leather medal.

Waldo is about as busy as the proverbial one-armed paperhanger with the et cetera, if you know what we mean. His Golden Glove Contest he tells us is very popular and is open to all boys under fifteen. All they have to do is sell a book of eight tickets and they are entitled to free boxing lessons and the right to participate in the contest at the close of the lessons. Here's a hot one that ought to be worth a lot to you boys.

And with school opening approaching, here's a good one to bear in mind. He has little two-by-four cards printed which he issues to school teachers. The card, after it has been presented to the theatre, is filled in with the teacher's name and school and signed by the management. The wording on the card is:

> "Realizing that it is impossible for you to take advantage of the Strand's week-day bargain matinee prices, we have arranged that upon presentation of this card at our box-office, you will be extended the courtesy of matinee prices at any week night showing."

Step on this one while it's ripe, boys, and you might also bear in mind his "lady matinee tickets." He gives a green ticket to each lady attending the matinees and when they have saved 10 they are entitled to a free admission. Waldo tells us "the women practically fight for these tickets."

Incidentally, in our last story we listed him as being at Ft. Madison, Wis. N. B.: It should have been Iowa.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

. . . "But the Manager Promised There'd Be None of That Stuff!"

BERT LEIGHTON'S HIT CAMPAIGN FOR "GOLD DIGGERS" OPENING

Judging by the reams we have here of the account of Bert Leighton's activities at the Stanley in Utica, if the theatre goers in that town didn't know "Gold Diggers" was playing there, it was just too bad.

Four weeks before opening he mounted three life size cut outs with spot attachments and placed them in the lobby with eight more placed at each door leading into the theatre. He secured Jack Little's orchestra to broadcast nightly and announce that the picture was opening shortly at his house.

Gold stickers were used in a tie-up with all beauty parlors sticking them on mirrors, music shops on each package of music bought, boys sticking them on automobile shields around town and in parking spaces, he even plastered them on telephone booths all over town.

The photo shown here gives you an idea of how startling an effect he got at night with his special transparent marquee sides. The sign could be seen for blocks away and was spoken of highly by all who saw.

Pick axes and shovels made out of compo board and painted gold with flitter all over them were handed to girls who rode trucks day before the opening and who stopped at all busy corners and gave out gold candy coins to the onlookers.

Well, Bert, we're getting a little breathless relating your stunts, so we'll sign off and be a seein' yuh.

MANAGER HAMILTON SURE HAS EXCELLENT IDEAS UP IN NORWICH

Our old friend B. B. Hamilton of the Palace Theatre, Norwich, Conn., comes to the fore with his stunt pulled on "Hold Your Man."

"B. B." had ten banners made for the kids to carry in a parade which he engineered; on six of them the copy read, "You Bet We'll See Hold Your Man," and on the other four, "We're On Our Way To The Palace."

His parade consisted of 2,000 playground children marching on their way to the "free" movie that Hamilton had announced. The show was held on Saturday morning and in addition to the playground kiddies the children of the county home saw the show. They were brought to and from the home by the Elks Lodge members. At the end of the performance Senator Fitzgerald on behalf of the recreation commission expressed appreciation for the co-operation of the theatre management.

Pretty good to keep in with the kiddies organizations, "B. B.," and we're sure it went over with a bang. Are you coming down for the midnight lunch?

GILMAN MAKES NICE LOBBY FLASH WITH MGM HERALD INSERT

With the star photos from the Metro Goldwyn Mayer trade ad insert in the HERALD of a few weeks ago, Manager Gilman of Loew's Parkway, Baltimore (Md.) made up a lobby frame that attracted lots of attention, according to Jack Foxe, assistant manager, who sends along the information.

The frame reached the ceiling of the inner lobby, and the photos were mounted, and backed on red velour. The photo frames were made in the theatre workshop, and Jack says they are different from anything seen around town.

Gilman used a candy giveaway on "The Nuisance" by distributing envelopes containing the confectionery with copy headed with the tieup line—"a lifesaver for your cares and troubles." The envelope idea was also used on "Hold Your Man," the copy for which read—"we dare you to give this to your man unopened," and passed out to the girls. Card inside with copy read—"will you please take me to see," etc.

Smart Local Idea

Amateur nights are still profitable. It all depends on how they are handled and with what judgment they are put over.

Frank Sargent, manager, Bay Shore, Bay Shore (L. I.) used this gag to bring him extra business over a six-week period by calling it a "Future Stars' Contest," putting it on one night a week and confining it to local talent. Six acts were on display each week in addition to the picture, and the one selected as the best by audience applause appeared in the finals with the winners chosen from each week's performance.

FIRST THEATRE AD ON NRA CODE SENT BY MGR. MAJETTE

Fast work in Portsmouth (Va.), where at the Gates Theatre, Manager Mark Majette went for a 60-inch newspaper display thanking Messrs. Sidney J. Gates and Wm. S. Wilder, the theatre owners, for being among the first in Virginia to sign up for the NRA code, and to live up to its terms.

The sentiment of the ad was subscribed to by the house personnel, a picture of whom with the NRA banner is shown above, and which also occupied a prominent spot in the ad. Second from the left, standing, is Mark himself, and on his right is charming Julia Majette (Mrs. Mark?). The rest of the group comprise projectionists, ushers, doormen and porters.

This is corking good will stuff, and certainly gives the theatre a nice build up. No doubt, other managers are planning similar announcements, and we are waiting for them to appear. However, Mark's is first in, and he gets an extra bow for his quick thinking.

NICHOLS GETS BIG RETURNS ON SMASH "INNOCENCE" STUNTS

Covering every possible angle of advertising and exploitation, Don Nichols, Broadway Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., shoots along a honey of a broadside on "What Price Innocence" that carries a real money smell.

Don hooked up with his paper on a classified tie-in that netted plenty of free inches, and also persuaded every movie editor to run a review of the picture, which the theatres there do not receive very often. A special preview was put on, after which comments were requested and these were used during the campaign.

Five thousand lucky number booklets were distributed through chain stores, 20 of which daily entitled holders to a 10-cent admission to the theatre. These numbers were posted in the stores and ads called attention to the giveaway. The shot below explains a snapshot gag, in which pictures were taken through the window of a prominently located store, and those whose snaps were pasted on the poster to left, received free tickets.

Soda stores, restaurants and lunch rooms carried theatre ads on the bottom of their menus; threes and sixes were sniped all over town; five 24 stands were secured without cost, street car cards and newsstand posters were some of the other advertising that Don used to stand the town on its ear for this engagement.

"INNOCENCE" SCORES HIGH FOR SKIRBOLL IN OHIO CAMPAIGN

Skirboll, during this engagement, doubled his ordinary receipts for the usual program picture, because of his carefully thought out sales plan. He had them standing on the fourth day of the run despite the fact that Ringling Brothers Circus had opened against him.

Realizing that "What Price Innocence" could very easily have been sold purely as a sex picture, he came to the conclusion that reviewers and his patrons would not respond as readily to such a campaign. Instead of running the risk of antagonizing them, he played down the sex angle, and avoided labelling the picture as an adult attraction. Instead he featured the line "Not Recommended for Children." By following this idea closely in his ad lay-outs, 24 sheets, and other copy, he gave his campaign a "class" tone which put the reviewers and patrons in the same frame of mind.

The results of this careful planning, thorough knowledge of his community, and analytical study of the picture's possibilities, gave him maximum results at the box-office. He reported that his theatre, a 2,400-seat house, had hold-outs and standees every night of the engagement. It is a concrete example of careful exploitation.

GET SET FOR THE NEW SCHOOL TERM

Although schools do not reopen for a few weeks, it's not too early to plan your forms of exploitation in this direction. During the past year this department has published many valuable suggestions for the building of good will among school executives, department heads and students and has touched extensively on different methods of cooperation between school and theatre. Comb through your Club files and set aside those to your liking. Following are a few ideas that come to our mind offhand:

Perhaps the foremost thought in the minds of students starting a new term is the accumulation of supplies necessary to pursue their studies. Text books, of course, are more or less out of the question for reason that these are obtained from a source designated by school boards, etc. However, there remains the all-important accessories such as brief cases, book covers, pencil sets, book straps, note books, etc. Most of these articles can be purchased every inexpensively in quantity lots and arrangements may be made for any of them to carry a theatre imprint. An article such as a brief case may appear a costly item, but there are firms that manufacture a durable case at remarkably low cost. Considering the fact that a student takes one of these around several months out of the year, a courtesy imprint on the case is bound to receive wide circulation.

Then there is the matter of tying up with the principal for awards of passes to the theatre to students who make high or outstanding marks in their studies over certain periods. We recall the weekly pass to those who excel in study and deportment, and the award of a month's pass to the honor student for the Quarter.

We have also observed that coaches are interested in most any reasonable stunt that will stimulate athletes to better results. It is our recollection that many Round Tablers tied up with the heads of school athletic associations for the granting of theatre passes to those who best qualified in both department and athletic pursuit.

A number of pictures on your schedule will be particularly adaptable to exploitation among students. List these and discuss them with the principal, with the thought in mind that he will grant permission to post appropriate notices on the bulletin board. This has been accomplished by a host of Club members.

The above is just a brief resume and only covers a few ideas that were uppermost in the writer's mind at the time. Many other good slants will be suggested to the enterprising manager and we hope to hear what our members are doing in this direction to exploit their theatre and attractions. We'll pass the ideas along as fast as they reach us.

THE "DEER" THING

M. Garfin, manager Chaba Theatre, Jasper, Alberta, Canada, sends us a shot of himself feeding a deer, or it may be that Garfin is awarding the animal a pass to see the show. You'll have to decide for yourself from the photo above. Incidentally, Mike invites all you managers to visit if you are up that way this summer. Say hello for us, boys.

VACATIONING!

Our old pal, Bunny Bryan of the Belmont Theatre, Chicago, Ill., postcards us from Winter, Wis., which he says is 440 miles north of Chi. and in the heart of the Wisconsin lake, and fishing is good. Oke, Bunny, you ought to come back with some swell fish gags, and if we remember you aright, you're pretty good at them. Pass a few along, willya?

VIC ACES SEATTLE ON WORLD PREMIERE OF "TUGBOAT ANNIE"

The latest starring vehicle of Marie Dressler and Wallace Beery, many scenes of which were taken around Puget Sound, very fittingly had its world premiere in Seattle (Wash.) at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, and Vic Gauntlett, ad chief, appreciative of this honor, put an a blazing campaign that will be remembered in the Northwest for many a moon.

As soon as the date was set, Vic arranged flash announcements over the eight Seattle radio stations well in advance, the announcements being changed every few days. Specially designed 24's were posted two weeks in advance, covering a radius of 75 miles around the city.

The operators of the ferries to the various communities on Puget Sound, for the first time, allowed picture advertising cards in waiting rooms; 700 special 11 x 14's, obtained through the cooperation of the weekly magazine which had serialized the story, were posted in prominent locations all over town, and thousands of Marie Dressler autographed photos were distributed by news dealers carriers.

For a week in advance, an illuminated compo tugboat with figures of stars was mounted on the stage orchestra pit, being raised and lowered at every performance preceding the trailers, the latter specially made up for the local showing. A feature of the advance lobby included cutouts of the stars, 12 feet in height, and how they stood out can be judged from the photo above.

On opening day, airplanes carrying banners (see above) flew over the city, and at noon, to herald the opening, every tugboat and steamer in port together with a compressed air whistle on the theatre marquee, blew for five minutes. At the same time bombs were set off from the top of theatre which brought many phone calls to the newspapers, the explanation of which further helped publicize the picture.

A Chamber of Commerce luncheon, attended by 2,000 guests, was further enlivened by a showing of the special trailer in sound, and the Mayor of Seattle, J. F. Dore, spoke as the guest of honor, in addition to releasing a proclamation extolling the picture's virtues and urging every resident to see it. A blow up of the proclamation was placed in the lobby and was also carried by every paper.

The night of the opening was "hollywooded" with powerful street lights and broadcast from the lobby, with a continuation of the airplane, whistles and bomb bags, and added police were needed to move traffic and keep patrons in line. The entire block was decorated with shields and banners, thousands of balloons were set free. Newspaper breaks and Gauntlett's ad campaign were outstanding, and Vic is entitled to a big bow for his work in which he was aided by Hal Elias, M-G-M exploiteer, sent out especially from New York by Billy Ferguson for the opening.

DEERING PUTS OVER ACE STUNTS WHILE BRIENT VACATIONS

Determining that exploitation would not mark time while his manager was away on vacation, Francis R. Deering, assistant to Elmer Brient, Loew's Theatre, Richmond (Va.), worked out a few tasty ideas that got him some nice newspaper breaks.

On "I Cover the Waterfront," Francis hooked up with one of his leading apparel stores on a "find the girl" stunt, by having a personable young lady working the main streets wearing a Claudette Colbert raincoat, and giving passes to those who identified her. The store came in with a series of ads that gave all the dope and plugged Colbert, the picture, and the theatre.

Deering followed this up with a classified tieup with another paper on "Gold Diggers" in which the theatre copped off three four-column ads amounting to over 100 inches. Very good, Francis, and we think you've done good work in Elmer's absence.

PERIPATETIC LOUIE KAYOS TEXAS HEAT WITH ACE EXPLOITS

Before taking off to skipper the Capitol, Dallas, Louie Charninsky, who wileyposts all over the South, stopped off at the Queen, Austin (Tex.), and stood the town on its ear with his heavy barrage on "Be Mine Tonight."

A special calling card containing only the title and phone number of theatre was distributed from house to house by two girls, two weeks in advance, and this gag kept Louie's phone ringing constantly. Another girl with a sweet voice made personal phone calls, saying, "Be Mine Tonight—You Must—see it at the Queen. (The dashes represent pauses.)

Bannered street car with automatic xylophone traveled over every line in the city the day before opening, and newsboys yelled the latest news, adding the title of the picture to each yell. Louis also used the personal endorsement ad and a raft of other snappy clickers that helped to do business in spite of a temperature of 102 degrees.

The above shot will give you an idea of the lobby flash, and the distinguished bird at the right is none other than Galloping Charninsky in person. Incidentally, on "Face on the Barroom Floor" he put out a business card advertising the opening of a new speak with himself and a lad by the name of Schnozzoli as the proprietors. No theatre ad, but the house phone number on the bottom. Wait until Durante sees that one.

THE NEW DEAL ON WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Here's real news—of the best kind. There will be thirty or more jobs open in various exchanges along Film Row within the next six to eight weeks. It's all due to the Administration's recovery program. In the case of one exchange—Fox—six jobs have been filled within the past 10 days that did not formerly exist. They are in the shipping and inspection departments. And from one exchange to another the various branch managers had something of the same cheery report to make of their anticipated requirements. Each exchange estimated that at least three additional persons will be needed on its force when theatres start absorbing the new season product. Most of the jobs are in the shipping and inspection departments, with jobs for an additional porter in one or two places. This early estimate of three or four additional jobs per exchange may be increased—it all depends on how fast business gets going, but in each case it's the minimum estimated requirement at this time that is reported.

All of which is in line with the new lease on life taken by various branches of the business here the past six weeks. Barney Balaban said that loop business is up 25 to 30 per cent, which is easily accredited in the face of holdout lines at the Chicago and State-Lake.

The optimism that is prevalent along Film Row and among exhiibtors is so general and so pronounced that it deserves more space than can be allotted here.

Consider, for example, the take at the Chicago theatre during Sally Rand's first week. When it ended Thursday night the till showed something like $64,000. And the same week the Oriental and Roosevelt did about the best business of the year.

Another encouraging sign—supply dealers along the Row are smiling for the first time in months. Exhibitors are buying equipment and redecorating and recarpeting their houses.

From out-of-town spots and from neighborhood houses, especially north and south, come reports that business is better this summer than it has been in years.

There are very few houses closed, something less than 3 per cent. Other summers the figure has been around 10 per cent.

Thus we herald the returning better times under the New Deal—with the fervent hope conditions will continue to improve as they have in local film and theatre circles the past six weeks.

Percy Barr has joined Exhibitors Screen Service and is covering the city territory.

Saul Goldman, booker for Ben Judell, is sponsoring a contest among exhiibtors for the best exploitation angles on "Fighting With Kit Carson." Cash prizes are to be awarded.

Charles Powell, formerly with National Screen Service, is covering Wisconsin for Johnny Mednikow's Master Art Products.

Aaron Saperstein hied himself to New York in a hurry to sit in with other Allied officers on the code hearing before Administrator Sol Rosenblatt.

Irving Mandel of Security Pictures is in New York on business.

Harold Wirthwein, formerly in the ad sales department, is now a member of the local Paramount sales staff.

John Clark has been added to the RKO sales staff, succeeding Herbert Greenblatt, who was promoted to manager of the Cleveland exchange.

O. W. Rosenthal, head of the Hollywood concession at the World's Fair, gave a dinner to members of the film board of trade at the Hollywood layout last week.

Warner Brothers will open the Shakespeare theatre on September 3. The Avalon opens August 26.

Three other Warner houses, the Stratford and Symphony and the Parthenon in Hammond, will begin a vaudeville policy on September 3.

George West reports that he has closed with the Saxe and La Crosse Amusement companies for Exhiibtors Screen trailers.

Barney Pearlman of National Theatre Supply Company says that the summer business this year far eclipses business for the same period last year.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

THE

"Smilin' Through" Wins!

The PHOTOPLAY Magazine Gold Medal as the best picture of the year 1932

AGAIN the public has spoken – and with a landslide vote it has named Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Smilin' Through" as 1932's best picture

So the thirteenth annual award of the supreme distinction in cinemaland—the Tiffany-designed Gold Medal given by PHOTOPLAY Magazine each year in accordance with public vote—goes to this poignant tale of love triumphant through suffering

No choice could have been happier. Only one film in scores manages to attain a touch of completely absorbing appeal, the kind that gets right down to the heart roots "Smilin' Through" was brimming over with it, and deserved to win on that one count alone

But its right to this honor does not rest on this, important though that quality may be "Smilin' Through" was notable for superb casting, and inspired performances by everyone concerned, while Sidney Franklin's direction was splendid in its fine taste, its excellent tempo, and its complete absorption in the spirit of the story "Smilin' Through" was, in short, perfect on every count by which excellence in the cinema is tested, and its selection is ample vindication for all who have faith that the American public has discerning taste and fine judgment when it comes to recognizing merit in films.

The leading acting honors go naturally to Norma Shearer, because she had the central spot in the story

Whoopee!
"DINNER AT 8"
opened last night at the $2 Astor. The Biggest M-G-M Hit of all time!

THE CAST: MARIE DRESSLER, JOHN BARRYMORE, WALLACE BEERY, JEAN HARLOW, LIONEL BARRYMORE, LEE TRACY, EDMUND LOWE, BILLIE BURKE, Madge Evans, Jean Hersholt, Karen Morley, Phillips Holmes.

THE CREDIT: Screen play by Frances Marion and Herman J. Mankiewicz. From the Sam H. Harris Stage Play by GEORGE S. KAUFMAN and EDNA FERBER. Additional Dialogue by Donald Ogden Stewart. Produced by DAVID O. SELZNICK. Directed by GEORGE CUKOR.

THE EAGLE'S SHADOW

THE industry's weeks of hectic fabrication, heated and hectic, tedious and controversial, will likely be looked back upon as the lightsome pastime of a summer's holiday when measured in the light of some of the excitements to come with its application and enforcements.

However valuable the code may prove to be, it can and will prove no panacea for the ills with which it treats. It is being made, all so humanly, of provisions that somebody thought of concerning what the other fellow should or should not do. Its existence will not revise the impulses against which it strives.

The machinery and personnel of enforcement, yet to be set up, will be of rather more importance than the very code itself.

The real job will be to make it work.

PICTURE SALTS

POPULAR scientific discussions of photography and the chemistry of the motion picture commonly make much of the use of silver and its important function as the light sensitive material of the film. The screen uses only a little less silver than the United States mint. But only in the dustiest of technical papers and manuals are there references to bromine, a relatively rare and costly element which is quite as important to the actinic reactions of the photographic processes. The sensitizing salt of film is a combination of silver and bromine, commonly silver bromate.

Bromine, usually administered as potassium bromide, is a sedative good for the jitters and an anaphrodisiac. Neither of these effects is discernible from administration through the screen. Bromine takes its name from the Greek word meaning stink.

Now bromine is to be made abundant, and possibly cheap, by a process of extraction from sea water, in which it is found at the rate of about a pound in each two thousand gallons. Previously it has come chiefly from the bitter waters of Saxony and the salt well region of Michigan. The first plant for the sea water process is being erected at Kure Beach near Wilmington, N. C. Until the seas run dry there will be no shortage.

SAYS Mr. Kirk Russell to Mr. Frank Wilstach, and says Mr. Wilstach to us: "They blamed the gangster films for the crime wave of 1931, but they can't blame kidnapping on the films because there are no such pictures." This appears to be a production opportunity.

A METHOD OF TELLING

CONSIDERED quite apart from the emotional impact, the story telling expedients which Mr. Jesse Lasky calls "narratage" in his "The Power and the Glory" are of agreeable and stimulating interest.

For more than a reasonable length of time now there has been a scattering of conversation about the importance of the motion picture setting about a real adjustment to and assimilation of sound. Mr. Charles Chaplin had a fling at it with a whistle, and Miss Pickford is knitting a very smooth brow over the matter. Mr. Douglas Fairbanks took a running jump at the problem and came up with a travelogue. The newsreels have tried a lot of this and that and have usually delivered the other. And, aside from that, nothing much has happened in the only real laboratory, experience.

"Narratage" as exemplified in "The Power and the Glory" is not precisely the discovery or the founding of a new technology, but it is a daring application of methods previously but slightly explored. While the hand of Mr. Preston Sturges is strong as a stage playwright upon it, the picture does contrive to contain a lot of picture and motion. In this happy instance the spoken word has not, in the cramped fashion of the stage, been used as a substitute for location and narrative action.

Many sequences in "The Power and the Glory" show how well the talking picture can do without so infernally much talk. Life is not all conversation, and drama should not be.

AT LAST "THE MORAL LESSON"

FROM the Detroit Free Press comes a rare film story. In this illuminating instance a boy went bad on his own and confessed by force of the moral pressure of a motion picture. For the sake of the record we reproduce the item:

> "The sordidness of prison life depicted in a movie prompted Wallace Richardson, 17 years old, 2047 Twenty-second St., to surrender to police, give up a pistol and confess part in two holdups.
> "That was two months ago. Tuesday he found that it pays to have a conscience and to obey it. After pleading guilty before Recorder's Judge Thomas M. Cotter to holding up Andrew Martin, in his grocery at 7629 W. Vernor Highway April 14, he was placed on probation for three and a half years.
> "The youth's mother told police that he saw the movie the night before he surrendered, three days after the holdup."

Some cynics will observe that an even smarter boy would have reformed and kept his mouth shut.

BURNED BONDS

Quietly to a table one day this week in the conference room of the Chemical Bank and Trust Company in downtown New York, stepped W. C. Michel, executive vice-president of Fox Film Corporation. On the table lay stacked 300 pounds of bonds, once valued at $29,614,845. Stooping, Mr. Michel withdrew one bond, ignited a match, applied the flame to the bond. A moment later he dropped the charred bits of paper, stepped back that photographers, reporters might see, shoot. Thus in that small ceremony was symbolized the release of the company from obligations totaling $37,917,754.75, thereby retired and cancelled, following the acceptance by stockholders of the Sidney Kent reorganization plan, the exchange of these bonds for equivalent, newly issued common stock. To the cellar, bank guards carried the 300 pounds of bonds, there dumped them into the furnace, saw them flare, fall in ashes, marking a notable victory in the Kent Fox rehabilitation campaign. . . .

SUED GOVERNOR

No minor defendants did one Earl W. Taylor, California ex-convict, name in a damage suit last week for $300,000. No less than these were named in the action: David Wark Griffith, famed director; Governor James Rolph, Jr., members of the California State Prison Board, wardens of Folsom and San Quentin prisons. Claimed Taylor: Director Griffith plotted his "exile" to state's prison to prevent fiancee Fern Setril from prosecuting a $601,000 damage, betrayal suit against Griffith. Alleging he was held 39 days as a parole violator, Taylor, presumably, charges state officers with complicity. Difficult would seem Taylor's suit, to say the least. . . .

COUNCIL'S LOWELL

Impressed "very much" by the report of the Motion Picture Research Council, organization founded in 1928 to study the social value of the cinema, retiring president Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard, last week accepted the Council's chairmanship, succeeding the late Dr. John Grier Hibben of Princeton, automobile victim last May. Dr. Lowell: "The matter is most important; the investigation has been thoroughly scientific. I do not see how I could decline. . . ." Rather in the nature of an honorary position is the chairmanship. . . .

MAD MATADOR

In the mind of the average Spaniard, Mexican is no room for jokes, quips where the art of the bull fighter is concerned. Similarly does Sidney Franklin, famed Brooklyn boy, one of the world's greatest matadors, idol of Madrid, feel toward his life work. Upholding the sanctity of his art, Matador Franklin last week filed suit, asked $100,000 damages in New York, an injunction restraining Columbia Pictures from showing a short, "Throwing the Bull," in which, says the complaint, he displayed his remarkable skill, only to have the off-screen narrator refer to him as a "bull-thrower," in a "jeering, jocular and undignified manner." Much of a last straw was the introduction of shots of bulls on roller skates, to complete the humiliation of Matador Franklin, rouse his ire to the suing point. . . .

DREAM SHATTERED

Something of a theatrical dream of grandeur gone aglimmering, shattered, lies behind the sale, at public auction last week, of the Casino theatre and office building property on New York's Seventh avenue. Formerly the Earl Carroll theatre, the result of a grand vision of a magnificent modern playhouse of the legitimate, the Earl Carroll was built but a scant two years ago. Modern of the moderns, it was definitely outstanding, but depression took its toll. For a mere $1,000,000, at first mortgage foreclosure sale, was the Casino sold to unnamed interests. Action was brought by the Mutual Life Insurance Company, with mortgage and interest due totaling $1,616,343.57. Yet may the screen find its way to the Casino's mammoth stage. . . .

PRESS HYSTERICS

Rare indeed it is for England's naturally conservative daily press to become editorially excited. Last week they broke into something resembling a mild form of hysterics, waved the banners on high and proclaimed England, and Elstree, its film center, as the new hub of world motion picture production, heralded with ill-concealed glee the decline of Hollywood. The why of the hysterics lay in the announcement that Douglas Fairbanks, recently maritally disturbed, and his son, Douglas, Jr., similarly situated, planned a producing company, the annual expenditure of some $5,000,000. Mentioned are imposing screen personalities as about to work for the Fairbanks duo, but beyond the stage of rumor and invitation these negotiations have not gone. First came reports of a Zorro series with both Fairbanks playing, then reports of three pictures to be made, in conjunction with Alexander Korda, to be released by United Artists. Now a large producing venture, with reports of Senior's intention of becoming a subject of the king. To the Fairbanks project is said to have come impetus after a sight of "The Private Life of Henry VIII," featuring Charles Laughton, directed by Mr. Korda. No visible sign is there of the imminent collapse of Hollywood. . . .

FEMININE GIGGLE

Odd but not lacking in good sense is the criterion of value in the two-reel comedy production of Universal's producer, Warren Doane: a feminine giggle. Women laugh more easily than men, runs his theory, laughter is contagious, the exhibitor is sold on the film by his audience laughter. Toward the feminine contingent, then, Producer Doane directs his shots. Not too optimistic is Doane concerning the two-reeler's future. Not too quickly will the double bill, bane of the short, be banished from the theatre. To the butcher, his wrapping paper, his meat, Doane likens the exhibitor, his short, his feature; the wrapper important, but not vital. Too seriously have comedy producers been taking themselves, he thinks, there being no time for subtleties, obscure humor. . . .

WIRED MUSIC

Yet may it be possible for circuits, owning, controlling large orchestras, to wire their music into numerous theatres at the same time. With the problem of perfect electrical reproduction from the technical standpoint regarded already as solved, the future of the field is out of the technician's hands, in those of the entertainment purveyor. To a large extent will the future use of orchestral music transmitted by telephone wires to be left to the musician, opines W. B. Snow, in a recent "Bell Telephone Quarterly." . . .

INDUSTRY SENDS CODES TO CAPITAL; NRA SETS PUBLIC HEARING SEPT. 12

Kent Submits Tentative Code, Citing Disputed Clauses; O'Reilly Presents Exhibition Proposals, Minority Report

The motion picture industry's tentative code of fair competition and trade practices finally got to Washington on Wednesday—in two sections, and with distributors and exhibitors still deadlocked over certain important clauses. At the same time, some 43 of the industry's leading executives in production, distribution and exhibition returned to their regular business of motion picture merchandising and management, which they had virtually abandoned on the night of August 8, when the three groups plunged into the drafting of codes for their respective groups, working night and day ever since.

The code also establishes minimum wages and maximum hours for the crafts of the trade.

At five o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, in his official quarters near the roof of the Department of Commerce Building, Sol A. Rosenblatt, deputy NRA administrator, formally received, on behalf of the federal government, a motion picture code governing production, distribution and exhibition, and an application for its approval by the President. Sidney R. Kent, coordinator in charge of the production and distribution drafts, presented the code and application to Mr. Rosenblatt. Both were signed by Mr. Kent and by the 11 members of the production code committee and the 12 distribution drafters. The 18 members of the exhibitors' committee were not signatories.

Immediately, Charles L. O'Reilly, coordinator on exhibition, stepped forward and presented to the deputy administrator a separate code governing the exhibition division, and written by his committee of representative theatre owners, of all interests. Appended to Mr. O'Reilly's version of what an exhibitor code should contain, was a document noting exceptions and counter proposals made in connection with the exhibitors' code by its minority committee members.

Demands Early Adoption

Mr. Rosenblatt then told Messrs. Kent and O'Reilly that it was the Administration's desire that there be but one code for the motion picture industry, like all other industries, the provisions of which should meet the approval of all factions, and that he hoped that the several code differences now existing may be eliminated before a public hearing is held.

Officials of the National Recovery Administration late Wednesday night formally acknowledged that there were a number of points in the Kent and O'Reilly codes on which they believed an agreement could be reached by the differing factions. On the other hand, while the government representatives had not as yet had an opportunity for extended study of the two codes, they frankly admitted that on some questions agreement would be difficult.

According to the officials a comparison of the two drafts as submitted by Kent and O'Reilly shows that many of the questions which have kept the industry in a state of turmoil for many years will be revised publicly on the floor when the industry has its public hearing.

From all indications Washington expected that the settlement of the various controversies of the motion picture industries will offer difficulties almost as great as those encountered in the steel and coal codes, and carry with them the same danger as was experienced in the consideration of the oil code when, despairing of bringing the warring groups to peaceful agreement, General Hugh S. Johnson, NRA Administrator, wrote a code for them and submitted it with the announcement that it was the code which he would recommend to the President.

Emphasis was placed on the President's demand that codes be adopted by the major industries without delay and that negotiations will not be prolonged.

Mr. Rosenblatt set September 12th as the date for the public hearing on the code in Washington, and unless the unforeseen happens, the exhibitors and distributors will appear at the hearing prepared to continue before Administrator Rosenblatt their vigorous battle of the past two weeks over certain highly important trade practices which either one or the other group proposes be included in the final draft, or eliminated from the present one.

Regardless of the dual presentation of tentative code drafts for exhibition by the different branches headed by Mr. Kent and Mr. O'Reilly, it appears that the industry has made quite some progress during the month in adjusting its differences in the competitive merchandising and manufacturing of motion pictures. However, the trade no longer has control over problems which its code committee could not adjust. The federal government will now decide the fate of such matters.

It is expected that between now and the public hearing in September, Mr. Rosenblatt will attempt to work out with Coordinators Kent and O'Reilly and continuing committees, the major differences between the distributors and exhibitors, also objections of minority groups in each division. Failing this, he may elect to hold informal hearings, behind closed doors. If this method is selected, Mr. Rosenblatt will not permit the divulgence of any information about the hearing's progress, the intent being the desire to clear as many disputed points as possible and to effect as united an industry front as may be arranged before the public hearings are held. Washington reported on Wednesday that there have been instances in handling codes for other industries where more than one form was submitted, as in the case of the film business, and informal hearings held.

However, the National Recovery Administration formally considers only one code. Therefore, early reports on Wednesday from Capitol Hill had it that the O'Reilly-exhibitor version for an exhibition draft, which differs considerably with the exhibitor section of the major code, will probably go in as an amendment to the code which Mr. Kent presented, thereby, to all intents and purposes making the socalled "Kent draft" the tentative master code for the industry.

Kuykendall Marshals Exhibitors

Mr. Rosenblatt had hardly started the code and its accompanying exhibitor recommendations on their way through official government channels when Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, and one of the active exhibitor code drafters, departed hurriedly on Wednesday from New York, for Chicago, to marshal exhibitor forces of the country for their appearance at the public hearing in defense of their platform.

The exhibitors' committee itself, however, was not without dissension. The climax in the struggle between affiliated and unaffiliated interests in drafting a code was a long

STRIKE SETTLEMENT REACHED AT STUDIOS

Recommendations for settlement of the Hollywood technicians' strike were announced late Wednesday in Washington by Leo Wolman, acting chairman of the National Labor Board, who said that the board has been assured "that all parties will cooperate in carrying out this agreement."

The recommendations of the board, on which the agreement was based, were: That the strike be called off; that employees be taken back without prejudice and that the strikers be given preference before new employees are taken on; that strikers may retain membership in their organizations with the understanding that this involves no change in the industrial relations policy of the motion picture industry; that there be no discrimination against membership in any union; that jurisdictional questions be settled by the American Federation of Labor; that pending settlement of the jurisdictional disputes no strikes shall be called; that disputes as to the interpretation of the agreement shall be decided by the national board, and that both parties agree to accept the decision of the board as final and binding.

Vigorous Battle Expected at Public Hearing; Kuykendall Hurries to Chicago to Rally Exhibitor Support for Fight

EXHIBITOR MINORITY ASKS CHANGES

list of minority objections to the majority recommendations. Mr. O'Reilly turned these over to Mr. Rosenblatt at the presentation of the committee's exhibition draft.

The exhibitors' committee got their draft in under the deadline by a few minutes. Administrator Rosenblatt had issued an ultimatum to the effect that all code efforts must be crystallized between midnight Tuesday and late Wednesday. At five o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, the exhibitors' committee went into a huddle at the TOCC headquarters in the Times Building, New York, for final drafting. Came three a. m. and no code. The group then retired to the print shop, where, between arguments, typewritten sheets were turned over to linotypers. The printed draft was not ready until mid-morning Wednesday, and Mr. O'Reilly left hurriedly for Washington, just in time to meet Mr. Rosenblatt's deadline.

Requirements for Objectors

Objectors to any phase of the tentative drafts who contemplate airing their viewpoints at the public hearing next month before Administrator Rosenblatt must comply with the following official NRA requirements:

(1) A written or telegraphic request for an opportunity to be heard must be filed before noon on September 11 (the day before the hearing), with Administrator Rosenblatt, in his office in the Department of Commerce Building, in Washington, D. C.

(2) Such a request shall contain a statement setting forth without argument, a proposal: (1) For the elimination of a specific provision of the Code; or (2) a modification of the specific provisions, in language proposed by the witness; or (3) a provision to be added to the code, in language proposed by the witness. The request shall also contain a statement of the name of any person seeking to testify in the hearing and a designation of the persons or groups whom he represents.

(3) All persons appearing at the public hearing are regarded as witnesses and shall present orally only facts and not argument. Written briefs or arguments may be filed but oral presentations will be confined to factual statements only and no legal arguments will be heard.

(4) Persons not appearing may file before the close of the hearing written statements containing proposals for eliminations, modifications, or additions to the code supported by pertinent information. These written statements should be condensed as much as possible.

(5) Public hearings are solely for the purpose of obtaining in the most direct manner the facts useful to the administrator, and no arguments will be heard or considered at this time. Representation of interested parties by attorneys or specialists is permissible, but it is not to be regarded as necessary. Industry, workers and the consuming public will be represented by special advisers employed by the government.

Continuing committees were appointed late last week to represent each of the three industry divisions at further hearings as follows: For production: Sidney R. Kent, Fox; J. Robert Rubin, MGM; Jacob Schecter, Federation of Motion Picture Industry of America, Inc. For distribution: Mr. Kent, Eddie Golden and Felix F. Feist, MGM. For exhibition: Charles L. O'Reilly, Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA; A. H. Schwartz, Century Circuit; Abram F. Myers, counsel to Allied States Association, and Harold B. Franklin, RKO.

"HONEST CODE OR NONE": LAEMMLE

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures, came forward this week with a fiery message to code makers. "No code for the motion picture industry is worth a tinker's dam unless it affords equal protection to producers, distributors and exhibitors," he declared.

These continuing committees will be the official representatives for their respective divisions at any informal hearings which might be called by Mr. Rosenblatt prior to the public hearing, in order to try to bring conflicting proposals together. They will also take the floor at the public hearing, arguing such discordant points as double features, open buying, designated playdates, rejection privileges, score charges, premiums and other practices of vital concern to the exhibitor and distributor.

In the code submitted by Mr. Kent there were 27 subjects of disagreement; two on which producers could not agree among themselves, and 25 over which there was complete or nearly complete divergence of opinion between exhibitor and distributor representatives.

The two clauses on which the producers could not agree among themselves involved the clauses concerning the lending of talent and star raiding.

The remaining 25 subjects of difference were confined entirely to the exhibition and distribution committees. As regards Article XV of the code, the exhibition committee proposed a provision that it is an unfair method of competition to deny any theatre owner the right to bid in fair and open competition for whatever run of pictures he desires; provided, however, that the seller shall have the right of selection based upon bona fide consideration of the character, responsibility, prior performance, prestige of theatre or theatres and potentiality of income. This question of the "right to buy" long has been a bone of contention to small exhibitors, a problem which has become particularly troublesome since the growth of the producer-owned theatre circuits.

Other subjects of disagreement between distribution and exhibition which will be ironed out by government follow:

Article XVI: Threats or intimidation by distributors toward any exhibitor to enter into contracts, or to pay higher rentals by commission of any overt act evidencing an intention to build a theatre for operation in competition with said exhibitor: objection to this being made by a minority of the distribution committee;

Article XXII: exclusion of newsreels from the category of short subjects: exception made by entire exhibition committee;

Article XXIV: exhibitors shall not demand and distributors shall not grant clearance of unreasonable length;

Article XXXIII: double features: the distribution committee was divided, seven in favor and five against the first proposed article, and the exhibition committee agreed by a majority to the first proposed article, which forbids the practice where exhibitors operating 60 per cent of theatres in any community have declared in writing that double features shall not be exhibited in any theatre in any such community. The second proposed article on this subject recognizes that the double feature policy is an individual problem;

Article XXXV, XXXVI and XXXVII: bicycling, use of advertising accessories other than supplied by distributor and rental thereof, and operation of Film Boards of Trade: all three not agreed to by the exhibition committee;

Article XXXVIII: local distributor exchanges regulated by Film Boards of Trade: not submitted to exhibitors because it does not affect them;

Article XLVI: principle of arbitration proposed under the code by the exhibition committee, to which principle the distributors agreed, but not with respect to the language of the article.

Exceptions with Exhibition Code

The exhibition code, as presented Wednesday by Mr. O'Reilly to Mr. Rosenblatt, was accompanied by a listing of exceptions to the code by a majority of the exhibitors' committee, together with counter proposals of those taking such exceptions. Altogether, 28 exceptions were taken, but in only six instances were counter proposals made.

The exception to the clause on the right to buy in free and open competition was that every exhibitor shall have the right, with an additional exception that there be incorporated a provision branding as unfair competition the denial to any exhibitor of the right to buy whatever run of pictures he desires; also that buying power in other situations resulting from the fact that a particular theatre may be operated by a circuit shall not be a factor in determining its prestige or potentiality of income.

As to contracts for exhibition of groups of 10 or more pictures the counter proposal was made that the exhibitor shall have a rejection privilege of at least 15 per cent without payment. An additional exception was that block booking and blind buying are unfair and that no distributor shall offer for rental any feature which has not been produced at the time of offering.

The subject of double features was met with the counter proposal that as the practice is uneconomic and unfair competitive practice it should be barred, but that, owing to "peculiar" local conditions, it shall not be deemed unfair in communities where 75 per cent of exhibitors so declare. In the distribution code the limit was determined at 60 per cent.

On minimum admissions clause, recommendation was made that no film leasing contract shall provide either minimum or maximum admission price.

Word was received from Hollywood late Tuesday that members of the Writers' Guild intend to demand a separate code at Washington. J. H. Lawson is on his way East with a nine-point statement of the writers' requirements, and will confer in New York with William Hamilton Osborne and later with Mr. Rosenblatt. Mr. Lawson will represent the Guild officially at the public hearings on the code at Washington next month.

16 MM. SOUND SHOWS PLANNED TO REOPEN SMALL TOWN HOUSES

Form Two Organizations; Barry, Scollard, Delehanty in One; Other, Headed by Jack Corbett, Named Town Theatres

Two organizations this week announced plans for extensive use of 16 millimeter film to bring motion picture entertainment regularly to villages which became filmless with the advent of sound. One of these organizations is Town Theatres of America, Inc., headed by Jack Corbett, and the other, just organized and as yet without a name, is being sponsored by Jack Barry, who had charge of the Publix theatre managers school when it was in operation. Associated with Mr. Barry are C. J. Scollard, former executive vice-president of Pathe, and Tom Delehanty, former Pathe foreign sales manager.

The two organizations will operate under similar franchise plans, and will use the same kind of equipment with similar terms.

Mr. Corbett's company, in existence for several months, was formed to sell complete programs and sound equipment to operators in small localities. Development of the Town Theatres plan has been underway for some weeks and, although these plans are not yet fully completed, Mr. Corbett this week announced that contracts already have been made for a year's supply of Pathe, K-B-S, and Tiffany product to be distributed by the new corporation.

Mr. Barry until the last two weeks was affiliated with Mr. Corbett in the new venture, resigning to enter the 16 mm. field under his own banner.

Approximately 6,000 theatres in small towns have been closed since the inception of talking pictures, most of them because the thinly populated districts were unable to support the outlay for sound equipment and programs, despite the fact that they wanted talking pictures, analyses by both companies pointed out.

Programs Sold Intact

Mr. Corbett's Town Theatres, with offices at 35 West 45th St., New York, is, in addition to those producers and distributors already contracted, seeking deals with several national distributors for a year's supply of motion pictures to be reduced from 35 mm. to 16 mm., programs to be sold intact to theatre operators. Pathe will handle all laboratory work involved in reducing the film and developing prints.

"In spite of the fact that we have not yet completed our program and have not begun a definite selling campaign, we have received almost 500 letters from former theatre operators throughout the country, whom we notified of our plans, requesting equipment," Mr. Corbett said Monday. "These men are situated in localities ranging in population from 50 in Texas and Montana towns to four and five thousand in other sections. These small towns have money to be spent for talking picture entertainment. Why, then, are town theatres not open?"

According to the specifications of Town Theatres of America, RCA-Victor's Photophone division has perfected a projector for 16 mm. film. This will reduce the cost below all former prices of sound equipment for theatres, Mr. Corbett said.

"Town Theatres has theatre sales rights to this RCA equipment and with the cooperation of leading motion picture concerns has completed a town theatre franchise plan," Mr. Corbett said.

Jack Corbett started in the film industry back in the Triangle days and was connected with that company for some time. Since then, he has been in turn district manager in Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma for Paramount, First National and the original Metro company. Later he was in the theatre promotion department of Saenger, and film buyer for Publix in western territories.

The new RCA sound-on-film Town Theatre projector, with standard amplification unit, carries specially designed film equipment and screen for the purpose of insuring a screen image of required clarity and size for the small theatre. This equipment—talking picture projector, amplification unit and screen—complete and ready for use, sells for $495 to the first group of franchise holders; thereafter, $750. Terms: $25 with order, $100 on delivery and $7.50 weekly.

Bookers will select and arrange and book each program. Each franchise holder of Town Theatres will be rented a minimum of two complete programs each week. Complete programs—feature and three short subjects—will rent for $10.

The special equipment and program will be sold and rented only to Town Theatres franchise holders, and only one in each town. The equipment cannot be used elsewhere, nor can the programs be shown elsewhere. There is no charge for the franchise itself.

Mr. Corbett said Town Theatres will provide everything but the theatre; if no theatre is available, the church or school hall or town auditorium may be used. The equipment provided with the plan requires no building or wiring alterations, he said. The equipment operates from a single 110-volt alternating current outlet.

The corporation will mail each month to franchise holders a service bulletin. It is exclusively a sales and service company, according to Mr. Corbett, with no sale of stock or securities involved.

"I think there is a very good field for 16 millimeter exhibition," said Arthur Poole, vice-president and treasurer of Pathe, this week. "Where it lies at the present moment is, however, a matter of conjecture. A considerable amount of experimentation will have to be carried out before the best field is ascertained. Pathe, however, thinks enough of Mr. Corbett's plans to give him distribution rights of its prints. It appears that the plan should be a success."

Victor M. Shapiro has been appointed manager of the Hollywood Bureau of Quigley Publications, effective Thursday, August 24. He will in this capacity coordinate and expand the activities of Motion Picture Herald, Motion Picture Daily and Motion Picture Almanac in the production colony, to the end of improving the services of these publications to the industry nationally, as well as to Hollywood.

Mr. Shapiro was recently associated with Fox Film Corporation as director of advertising and publicity, acting both in Hollywood and in New York. Previously he was director of advertising and publicity of United Artists Corporation and also was associated with the interests of Samuel Goldwyn and Pathe Exchange, Inc.

MGM'S Net for 12 Weeks $330,362

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for 12 weeks ended June 8 reported a gross profit of $1,438,176, compared with $2,767,762 for the same period in 1932 ended June 4. Net profit after taxes for the current period amounted to $330,362, compared with $1,351,823 for the same period last year. Operating profit amounted to $370,633.

For 40 weeks ended June 8, the company reported $1,296,535 profit after expenses, federal taxes and other charges, equal to $8.21 a share on 157,913 $27 par 7 per cent preferred shares outstanding at the close of the last fiscal year. This compares with $3,262,630, or $20.66 a preferred share for the 40 weeks ended June 4, 1932.

Spoor's World's Fair Third Dimension Theatre Is Closed

Spoor's theatre at the Chicago World's Fair, called "The Spectaculum," and which introduced the latest developments in third dimensional film, has closed. The house is being remodeled and will be used for an exhibit on crime prevention and an 18-minute reel on newsreel thrill shots.

George K. Spoor originally built the theatre to show his improved third dimensional film, picturing a scenic of Niagara Falls.

CONTACT, "HYPOS" AND BOX-OFFICE

The Picture Still Is the Thing, B. F. McCormick Believes, So He Proceeds to Sell Exactly That

A four-page newspaper, paralleling the local daily publications in makeup and page size, and playing up the picture and not the frills, is one of the many media with which B. F. McCormick is winning through at his theatres in Colorado and New Mexico.

"These papers are not gotten out in competition with any local papers," Mr. McCormick explained. "It happens that we have livewire dailies in both towns (Canon City and Florence, Colorado) and I advertise in each paper every day. I get along fine with the editors and they are always ready to cooperate with me.

"I had a different paper for each town and they were printed by the local publishers of the daily papers. I could have gotten out one edition to cover both towns at a much less cost, but believed it would be a wiser policy to have a separate paper for each theatre as it would secure better cooperation from the editor.

"Then too, the rivalry that exists between merchants in towns that are close makes it necessary for a theatre owner to be careful when operating houses in towns or cities that compete with each other for business, as any apparent favoritism for one place would cause a loss in the other."

Cooperative advertising by local merchants is noted in Mr. McCormick's theatre newspapers, one for the Jones theatre in Canon City, the other for the Rialto at Florence.

"As for the returns on this kind of publicity, I certainly believe that it pays well," Mr. McCormick wrote. "It is something different and as it is gotten up in the same manner and size as the local daily paper, it commands extra attention in any and every home, and I believe that every word of it is read by every member of the family.

Every House Visited

"Several hundred copies are mailed out from each town to rural districts, and locally we take two cars, and four boys on each car, and work each street. Not a single house is omitted and we know that the paper is delivered (inside the door if not locked).

"I believe that this kind of publicity creates a greater respect and appreciation for the home town theatre, as it is human nature for people to want to point with pride to any and all local institutions and industries that help to make a city look as though it is keeping step with the rest of the country, that it is a progressive city."

It is thirteen years ago that Mr. McCormick got out his first newspaper and he finds it as successful a patronage-builder today as then. He continued the practice intermittently until 1926 when he leased out his theatres. Now, back in the saddle, he finds his communities responding to the same personal appeal in type, with such names for his newspaper editions as "McCormick's Movie News Special." Heralds he does not use often, "because the ordinary herald is just another piece of paper to join the multitudes of circulars that clutter up the front yards," because in some places the residents object, and indeed in a few towns the practice of distributing heralds is prohibited by ordinance. However circus heralds, "large and flashy," do find a place in his publicizing campaigns.

Mr. McCormick has definite ideas regarding several lines of policy that have been in the foreground of exhibitor discussion the last few months. He took over operation of his houses April 15 and "changed many of the things that had been done by the circuit operators," to return to the principle that the picture itself is the thing.

"They had been giving a double program once a week (sometimes more often) for the past many months," he said. "Gold Night was another weekly stimulator, Merchants' Night was another. There were premiums of various kinds from time to time, and Country Store Nights.

"All of this probably got business but I did not believe that it was the thing that could build a healthy theatre patronage," Mr. McCormick declared. "It appears that nationally this kind of promotion has made the showing of pictures a secondary consideration. The public has been educated to look for and expect some stunt to attract them to the theatre, other than the picture.

"These stimulators as a regular thing bear the same relation to the theatre as a 'shot in the arm' two or three times in the day to a patient in a hospital, to make him appear vigorous and on the way to recovery. The first time he is denied 'a shot' you find out his true condition. He can never expect to be a healthy man until cured of his drug habit.

"I took all of these 'hypos' away from my theatres, and they were mighty sick patients for many weeks and I was just about as sick in trying to establish a new policy and persuading people to come to the theatre for the sake of seeing a good picture. The process has been slow, but I am glad to say that I believe I have now turned the trick and business is gradually improving.

"I will probably put out another paper the coming month, and each following month this year, as in so doing I believe that I can create a renewed interest in pictures and that by culling out some of the undesirable 'tripe' that has been murdering family patronage, this trade can be gotten back again.

"I am not unmindful of the fact that there are many worthwhile methods of promotion and stunts to stimulate business at certain periods, when the picture alone will not make a fair draw, or when an extraordinary subject is suited for outside tieup. But—always—the picture comes first and should be the main attraction, if we are to build and create more patronage, to hold that which we now have and not lose sight of the fact that we expect to continue in the motion picture business, instead of premiums, prizes, gold nights and even up to giving away automobiles."

Opposed to any indiscriminate increase in admission prices, Mr. McCormick wrote:

"I see in the HERALD that Warner expects to insist on advancing admission prices, with nothing below 15 cents. Speaking for myself, I do not intend to advance prices until there is evidence that the laboring man has a job and that the mass patronage in general is in a position to meet an advance in prices.

Mass Patronage Vital Factor

"Low prices for moving picture entertainment created millions of movie fans and gave this industry its start. That mass patronage is still a vital factor to consider if this business is to grow. I for one am going to play for a volume business at a fair price."

In his advertising in the daily newspapers Mr. McCormick has insisted upon outside position in the upper lefthand corner of the last page. He obtained that position more than a dozen years ago, he said, "by selling the editor on the idea (in both towns) that he did not have a daily news item or a paid feature that was of greater daily interest than the daily theatre program."

That the producer is ignoring a ready-to-hand aid in making pictures that the public wants unless he establishes close contact with the exhibitor, is Mr. McCormick's firm conviction. "It looks to me as though the producers could profit by trying to get in closer touch with the people that sell their product to the consumer," he said. "I have never known of a case where this information was sought from the average exhibitor, and I was on the road three years selling theatre equipment.

"It is not likely that many of us exhibitors could tell the producer what to make that would be surefire box-office, but I feel certain that they would glean a lot of ideas of what not to put in pictures, that would please more of the cash customers and possibly get a few more cash customers back in line at the box-office."

PHILOSOPHY THAT BUILDS PATRONAGE

Strengthening of the box office for B. F. McCormick, owner of theatres in Colorado and New Mexico is building upon a philosophy of exhibition reflected in the following excerpts from his comment:

"These stimulators (Merchant Nights, Gold Nights, Country Store Nights, and the like) bear the same relation to the theatre as a 'shot in the arm' to a patient in a hospital. He can never be expected to be a healthy man until cured of his drug habit."

"I believe that I can create a renewed interest in pictures and that by culling out some of the undesirable 'tripe' that has been murdering family patronage this trade can be gotten back again." . . .

"Always the picture comes first and should be the main attraction, if we are to build and create more patronage, to hold that which we now have." . . .

160 N. Y. Closings Laid to Protection

One hundred and sixty theatres in the metropolitan district of New York have closed as a result of "burdensome protection," according to figures prepared by the Motion Picture Theatre Industry of the Metropolitan Division. These theatres have a total seating capacity of 117,375. The organization is a fact-finding bureau, formed jointly by the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, the Independent Theatre Owners Association, and Allied of New Jersey.

The report, designated to play a part in formulating whatever final clause in the film industry's code is framed on protection, states the closed theatres represent 13.5 per cent of all houses in the metropolitan area, "many of which were formerly profitably operated houses."

Some of those now closed were darkened after being acquired by circuits and others by obsolescence. Fifty-five additional theatres have closed since January, but the report does not specifically link these shutdowns with protection.

Ohio Legislature Passes Tax on All Admissions

The Ohio State Senate on Friday passed the admission tax measure calling for a tax of one cent on each ten cents, or fraction, of all admissions. The bill went back to the House this week for final action.

If this tax is passed it will amount to a tax of approximately 12 1-2 per cent of the industry's gross receipts in Ohio. The MPTO of Ohio is endeavoring to stay action on the proposed taxation, arguing that all admissions of less than 41 cents be exempt.

SMPE To Hold Chicago Meeting September 7

The Chicago section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers will convene in Chicago September 7, when plans for the autumn convention will be discussed. Dates are October 16, 17 and 18.

Election of officers for the new term is now underway. Those whose terms expire October 31 are R. Fawn Mitchell, chairman; Burton W. Depue, secretary-treasurer, and Oscar B. Depue, manager.

Consolidated Buys Half Interest in Ochs Circuit

Consolidated Amusement Enterprises, operated by Lawrence Bolognino, has closed a deal for a half interest in the Lee A. Ochs circuit, operating theatres in New York City and Upper New York State.

The circuit operates the Kingsbridge, Tuxedo; the Costello, Mosholu Parkway and new Midtown, New York and the Bronx, and the Peekskill in Peekskill, N. Y.

Ticket Taxes Total $972,627 for July

Theatre admission taxes collected by the federal government for July totaled $972,627, as compared with $343,692 for July of last year, according to figures released this week by the Internal Revenue Bureau.

ACADEMY APPROVES NEW PLAN BY ELECTING REED

Creative Workers To Shape Program Devoid of Producer Influence; New Board, Members of Branches' Executive Units

The membership of the Academy of Motio Picture Arts and Sciences on Tuesday placed its stamp of approval on the Academy's plan to place its future in the hands of creative workers, a plan which the executives and committee representatives launched last month when it presented a new set of by-laws, by reelecting J. T. Reed president. Other officers are Howard Green, first vice-president; Frank Capra, secretary; William Sistrom, treasurer.

The election of officers and of a board of governors and a new executive committee was the second phase of the organization's reconstruction program under which the creative workers in Hollywood expetc to shape an Academy entirely devoid of producer influence.

The officers were elected by the new board of governors, which was selected on Monday by the Academy membership at large from among some forty candidates. The governing board comprises: Representing the actors branch: Dudley Digges, Adolphe Menjou, Lewis Stone; representing directors: Frank Capra, John Cromwell, W. K. Howard; producers: B. B. Kahane, Irving Thalberg, Darryl Zanuck; writers: Bartlett Cormack, John Goodrich, Waldemar Young; technicians: Carl Dreher, John Nickolaus, Max Parker. Term of office, one year.

In addition, the Academy membership elected on Monday seven members for executive committees of the organization's principal branches. Successful candidates are: Actors' branch: Helen Hayes, Warner Baxter, Dudley Digges, Walter Huston, DeWitt Jennings, Robert Montgomery, Edward G. Robinson; directors: Lloyd Bacon, C. B. DeMille, Henry King, Robert Z. Leonard, Ernst Lubitsch, Fred Niblo, King Vidor; writers: Edwin Burke, Bartlett Cormack, Edward Kaufman, Josephine Lovett, Robert Riskin, Edgar Allan Woolf, Waldemar Young; producers: Samuel Briskin, Merian C. Cooper, Henry Herzbrun, B. B. Kahane, Jesse Lasky, Irving Thalberg, Darryl Zanuck; technicians: John Arnold, Hans Dreier, Harris Ensign, C. Roy Hunter, Nathan Levinson, Wesley Miller, Van Nest Polglase.

Parker Takes Over Kennedy Productions

T. C. Parker, Jr., financial backer for the Aubrey Kennedy studio in St. Petersburg, has bought Mr. Kennedy's interests and will take over the entire project.

According to reports, Mr. Parker has advanced a total of $100,000 thus far, including $30,000 for the new studio, which just has been completed on Weedon Island. The company is now shooting its third production.

Nathanson Obtains Poli, Arthur to Quit

N. L. Nathanson, president of Famous Players-Canadian, and A. C. Blumenthal assume operation this week of the former Poli theatres in New England, and, at the same time Harry Arthur, the circuit's operating head, withdraws. Although Col. E. A. Schiller, of Loew's, would not comment on the situation, it is believed that Loew's will operate the houses for 50 per cent of the profits. Nicholas M. Schenck denied the report Tuesday.

Harry Arthur has been operating the former Poli houses for the receivers of New England Theatres, Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary organized by Fox Theatres when it purchased the Poli holdings in 1928.

Reports are that Mr. Arthur plans to develop his own circuit. He now operates 16 theatres in various parts of the country in partnership with Mike Marco of Stageshows, Inc., of which Mr. Arthur is vice-president. Louis M. Sagal, formerly with Poli, will assume Mr. Arthur's duties temporarily.

"Kontingent" Law Being Considered in Australia

A "Kontingent" to be placed on American pictures is now reported under consideration by the Commonwealth of Australia. Under this law Americans would be required to export and release a stipulated number of Australian films on a proportionate basis with American films marketed in Australia.

The chief reason behind the proposed move is the protection and aid of local production, although in film circles it was said that the move would be more of a hindrance to established Australian companies.

Charles Goetz Starts Independent Film Company

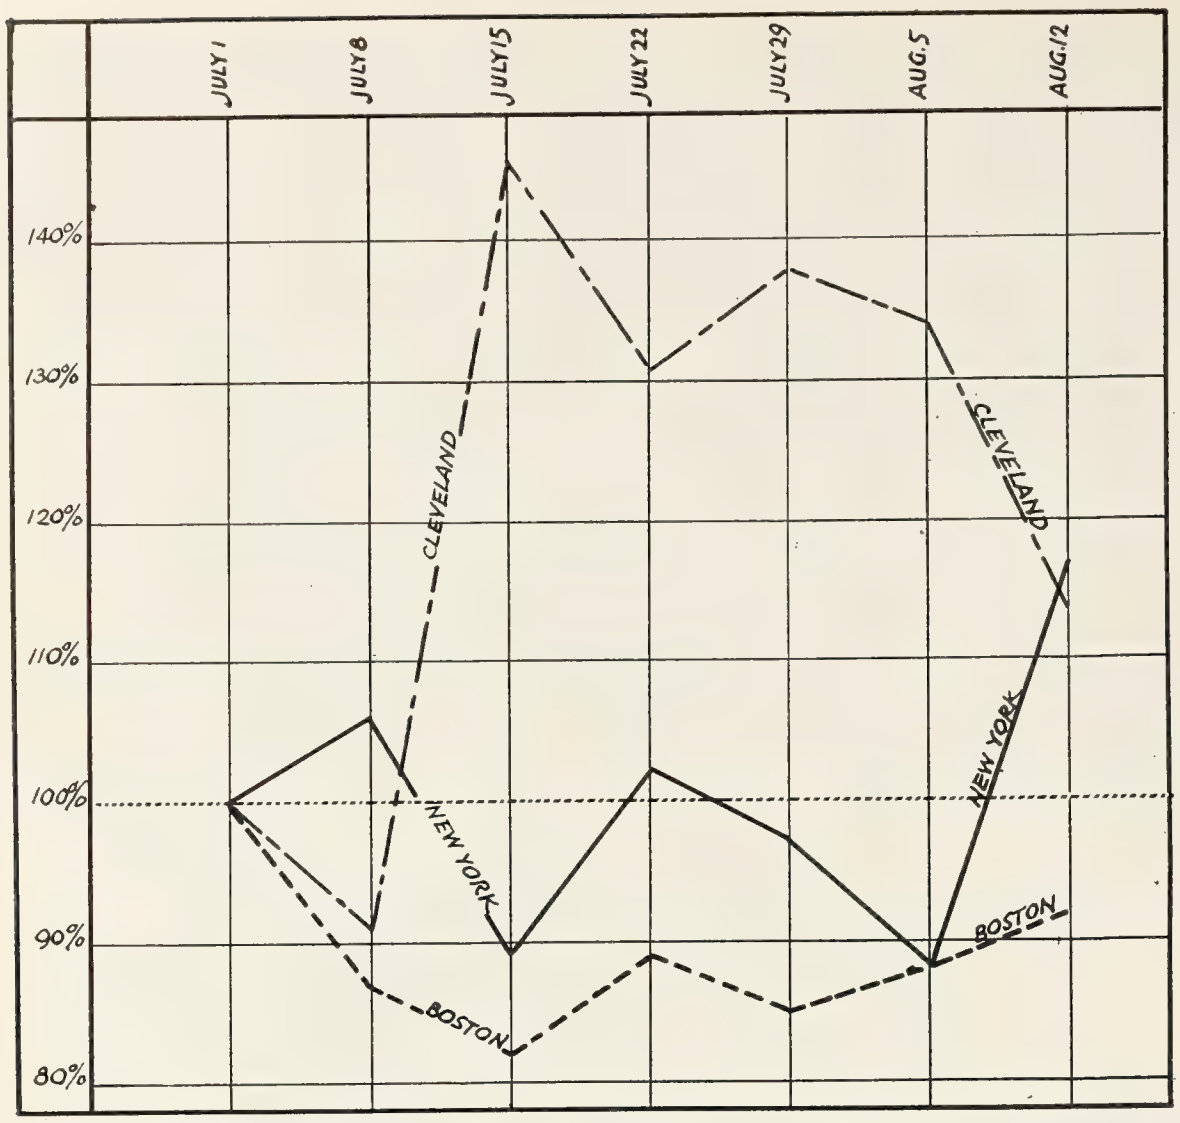
Charles S. Goetz has resigned from Exhibitors Screen Service to go into business for himself as an independent producer and distributor. His first releases will be the old Harold Lloyd features synchronized with sound and music.

Turner Resigns from RKO; Joins Stuart in Detroit

Terry Turner, exploitation director for the RKO theatre circuit, resigned Monday to join Herschel Stuart, who is operating the Publix theatres in Detroit. No successor has been named to Mr. Turner's post.

Whitman in New Offices

Ray Belmont Whitman, patent and trademark attorney, has moved his offices from 277 Park Avenue, to 2 Rector street.



The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's compilation of box office grosses, indicates the fluctuations in receipts of three eastern cities—Boston, Cleveland and New York—during the seven-weeks period from July 1st to August 12th. The 100 per cent line represents the business done in each city during the first week of this period.

ERPI OFFERS BLANKET CONTRACT FOR PARTS

Company Will Assume Obligation of Making Repairs and Providing Replacements at Fixed Weekly User Charge

Savings are being offered by Electrical Research Products to 6,000 motion picture theatre users of Western Electric reproducers, in the purchase of spare, repair and replacement parts. Erpi will assume the obligation of making repairs and providing replacement parts at a fixed weekly sum for the normal, continuous maintenance and operation of the equipment. The arrangement has been in the experimental stage for weeks, during which time the company has signed such agreements with some 600 theatres, according to C. W. Bunn, general sales manager. The contracts are for one year.

While the company said that the savings on parts expenditures to exhibitors will reach an appreciable amount, it could not provide figures because there is no fixed scale of weekly charges under the new agreement. Charges will be rated according to the number of hours of daily operation, this factor controlling the life of tubes and parts, also on the average wear and tear of parts and on the average weekly expenditures on parts for a year preceding the signing of the contract.

As in the past, the company does not assume responsibility in any manner for any interruption in operation of the theatre or its equipment. However, it was said that complete breakdowns are very few and are usually the result of fire or sabotage. Repairs and replacements will be made in the routine manner during regular servicing inspection, or in answer to emergency calls. Equipment parts which are the principal sources of power, such as batteries, are not included.

The recent decision of the federal court at Wilmington which restrained Erpi from forcing its theatre clients to abide by the clause in Erpi contracts which required the exhibitor to obtain from Erpi all renewal and assembly parts, does not involve the new one-year agreement. In this connection, H. G. Knox, vice-president of Electrical Research Products, recently dispatched to all Western Electric equipped theatres a letter which said in part:

"The order of the court provides that, upon the plaintiffs (Stanley, General Talking Pictures and Duovac) giving bond in amounts to be fixed by the court hereafter, preliminary injunctions will be issued against the enforcement of one provision contained in most of the theatre equipment contracts . . .

"The provision in the theatre equipment contract, enforcement of which is enjoined by the court, is that which obligates the exhibitor to obtain from Electrical Research Products, all additional and renewal parts and assembly parts required for the operation of the equipment.

" . . . The court denied the request of the plaintiffs for temporary injunctions against other parts of the exhibitors' . . . contracts, including the service charges which were attacked in the suit.

"It has been the practice of the company to furnish exhibitors spare and replacement parts upon their voluntary written order. The company will continue to offer to its exhibitors licensees spare and replacement parts to be furnished on orders signed by the exhibitor and at the company's current charges.

"Many exhibitors have entered into a separate agreement with us covering our furnishing spare and replacement parts as required for the normal maintenance and operation of our equipment and the payment of a weekly sum in consideration of the furnishing of such parts. These maintenance agreements are in no way involved in the above decree. . . . "

Under Erpi Supervision

Under the agreement by which Erpi relieves the exhibitors of the detail of ordering individual replacement parts, the theatre owner agrees that installation of the necessary parts be made exclusively under Erpi's supervision, but in accordance with the exhibitor's directions.

"The plan will assure better equipment maintenance and operation for exhibitors," according to Mr. Bunn, who said Wednesday at Erpi headquarters in the Fisk Building, New York, that the company has received "gratifying assurances of the results to date from exhibitors who have been operating under this agreement during its experimental stages."

Erpi agrees to provide repair and replacement parts, including vacuum tubes, photo-electric cells, exciting lamps and Tungar bulbs for the sound heads, faders, amplifiers, loudspeakers, motors, control cabinets and drives of the various type Erpi reproducers.

Erpi said that it assumes the obligation of providing such repair and replacement parts as from time to time shall be required for the normal maintenance and operation of the exhibitor's equipment, but it shall not be obligated to provide parts which may be required by reason of misuse, abuse or negligence in the operation of the reproducer.

All used parts removed from the equipment shall be delivered to Erpi by the exhibitor, and Erpi shall not be required to replace any parts unless the theatre owner delivers the equivalent used part. Tubes or parts not of standard make are not included in the deal and Erpi will not be required to repair or replace any parts other than those which the exhibitor furnishes to Erpi.

Parts furnished by Erpi under the deal, supplied from Chicago, which is the headquarters for Western Electric manufacturing, shall be used only as spare and replacement parts of Western Electric equipment and shall be deemed a part of the said equipment, subject to all the terms of the original Erpi contract, with the same effect as if the parts had been incorporated in the equipment originally furnished.

The weekly payment covering the agreement, payable weekly in advance, will be temporarily discontinued if the operation of the theatre ceases, and until such time as the house resumes operation. A cancellation clause permits termination of the deal by either party giving four weeks notice.

This is the third important Erpi move involving exhibitors since the company started to market its reproducers some six years ago, and follows "noiseless" recording-reproduction and wide range improvements.

Leases Independent Film Again

Marcel Mekelburg, head of Century Film Corporation, Boston, has leased "Her Re-Sale Value" for exhibition in that territory. The film's first showing under the new leasing was booked into the Paramount.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

OUR Hollywood correspondent passes along the story from Jimmie Reynolds—"contact man in one of the better west coast night dispensaries"—about the big kidnapping wave which swept New York many years before the current crop of snatchers got busy.

It seems that an old Bowery character used to be kidnaped regularly about twice a month. The "victim," who was associated with the late "Big Tim" Sullivan, was wont to stage a party for himself—always in the same saloon, and always "on the cuff." When his bill got to $20, the paunchy bartender called a halt, put the celebrant in the custody of a porter and sent him to a nearby pawn shop. There the porter would "hock" him for $20, leave him in camphor balls, and send the ticket to "Big Tim." Sullivan always bailed him out.

A troupe of Shakespearian actors, strangely of extremely uncertain financial standing, was lounging about the lobby of a small-town hotel. The manager entered and addressed the leading man thusly: "Don't forget, we're playing 'Hamlet' tonight."

"'Hamlet,' eh?" replied Handsome Harry. "All right with me, but I can't play 'Hamlet' with this three-day beard. Gimme a quarter for a shave."

The manager reeled.

"Twenty-five cents! Harry, I think we'll play 'Macbeth.'"

For a moment there was silence . . . and then the friend shot back—"yeah, but you forget the three hours difference in time. You're all through out here."

SKIRTING THE BORDER WITH A BLIND PROOFREADER

Blushingly we refer Mr. Joseph I. Breen, Hollywood's "eagle-eyes" on matters of production, to the following passage from the pages of the well-known Los Angeles Examiner:

"The film is said to have been evolved with a delicate handling of the situations, which, in the navel, made it border on the censorable lines."

A forlornly shuttered "movie palace," under the dark shadows of the Third Avenue elevated railroad, explains its fate with this scrawled card thumb-tacked on one of the doors:

This week's quotation by Mr. O. O. McIntyre—the "Park Avenue naturalist"—concerns his own sentimental idea about the life of a reporter, which differs somewhat from the cold Hollywood conception. McIntyre's version runs something like this:

"The reporter's life begins every day from scratch" (not literally). "He lights his feeble little candle and hopes, but doubts very much, that it will blaze around the world. In comparison to the real abilities of a forthright reporter, rewards are slim. His bulge on humanity is that no two days are alike." And ask any bloated capitalist if that isn't pretty largely his idea of paradise.

In connection with the stupendous goings on in Chicago, there is a hundred-million-dollar, or thereabouts, art exhibit at the Chicago world's fair. One of the New Yorker's "spies," n search of something "hot" for the editors, and not prompted by any sense of the aesthetic, visited the building of art. In Gallery G-58, he found No. 738, a painting called "The Rivals," by one Diego Rivera, who has a reputation for being pink. The lender of 738 is catalogued as "Anonymous," and the painting itself bears the legend: "Lent by a private collection, New York."

"In case," reported the spy, in code, "you want to know to whom it belongs, it belongs to Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr."

A year or so ago, long before the ruckus up at Radio City between Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. Rivera, over a certain "red" painting which the artist was doing for the RCA Building, No. 738 was shown at the Museum of Modern Art in New York, at which time the catalogue came right out and said that it belonged to Mrs. Rockefeller.

The New Yorker concluded with the observation that a lot of paint has gone over the walls since then.

"His father died in the village inn in 1903; his mother four years later. The mayor of the town is also grave digger, barber and butcher! Receivers at motion picture companies need not be too critical of waste in the film business. Other industries, too, evidently heard of inflation long before Mr. Roosevelt unpacked at the White House. Take the case of a certain bankrupt publishing firm. One day the inevitable inventory checkers took a walk around the premises to see what they could see. In the storeroom they found, among other things, some 10,000 paper drinking cups, enough to serve each of the 11 persons employed by the publishers with two long swallows every working day for 20 months. That is, if each and every one of the workers did not have a drinking glass of his own, which they did.

Mr. Ted (Cook-Coo) Cook took time off from his writing job at Mr. Hearst's New York place, to look through the classified columns to see what he could see. He netted this:

Kent is Reelected President of Fox; New Board Voted

Sidney R. Kent on Tuesday was re-elected to the presidency of Fox Film Corporation. Represented only by proxies, and apparently without a single dissenting vote, the adjourned annual meeting of Fox Film stockholders re-elected Mr. Kent and voted a new directorate on which the management has a representation of four, and chief creditors of eight. This was the final step in approving the company's financial reorganization plan.

Company administration remains in the hands of its former personnel with few minor changes. Officers elected were: W. C. Michel, executive vice president; Winfield Sheehan, vice president in charge of production; Sydney Towell, treasurer; Felix A. Jenkins, secretary; W. S. Bell and R. B. Simonson, assistant treasurers; John T. Edmonson and J. H. Lang, assistant secretaries.

The new directorate is as follows: Mr. Kent, Mr. Michel, John D. Clark, Mr. Towell, Harley L. Clarke, H. Donald Campbell, Richard F. Hoyt, Daniel O. Hastings, Arthur W. Loasby, Ernest W. Niver, Herman G. Place and Seton Porter. Messrs. Kent, Michel, Clark and Towell represent company management.

Harley L. Clarke, president of General Theatre Equipment, Inc., and Senator Hastings, receiver for that company, represent large holdings in the company. Chase National Bank interests are represented by Messrs. Place and Campbell, and Seton Porter of the National Distillers' Products Corporation, also is understood to be identified with the Chase interests.

Richard F. Hoyt is a partner in Hayden, Stone and Company, which has floated substantial bond issues for Fox. Arthur W. Loasby is understood to have been placed on the board at the request of Dillon, Read and Company, who also figured in bond flotations. Ernest Niver is associated with Halsey, Stuart and Company, Wall Street.

Seven of the men on the new directorate served on the old board. They are Messrs. Kent, Michel, Towell, Clark, Harley L. Clarke, Hastings and Niver.

Felix A. Jenkins, John T. Edmonson, Wilfred J. Eadie, Edwin P. Kilroe and Charles W. Higley made up the remainder of the old directorate. Although Mr. Jenkins, who is general counsel for Fox, was dropped from the board, he was elected secretary, and Mr. Edmonson was re-elected assistant secretary.

Late in June plans for the company's financial reorganization were presented to the stockholders by Mr. Kent after many months of weary discussion with the company's bankers in an effort to eliminate approximately $30,000,000 of debentures, $8,115,486 in bank loans and $1,630,914 unpaid interest on debentures.

By extinguishing five-sixths of the company's stock and replacing it with a new issue of practically the same number of shares as were destroyed, the company converted its debt into new stock without increasing the capitalization. Denbenture holders, among which the Chase bank was one of the largest, accepted the new stock at $18.50 per share.

A credit of $10,523.166 to paid-in surplus was one of the results of this reduction of stock. Sharp reductions were made in the book values of the Film Securities Corporation at the same time; Wesco Corporation, holding company of all theatre properties; the Fox Realty Corporation of California, a subsidiary, and the Fox Film Realty Corporation.

Eastman Kodak Net Equals $4,348,624

Eastman Kodak's net profit for the first six months of 1933, ended June 17, was $4,348,624, as compared with $3,721,615 for the same period of 1932.

Earnings were $7,832,752, comparing with $7,122,239 for the same period last year. The current net profit represents $1.84 on the common shares, after allowances for preferred dividends. This compares with $1.57 for the 1932 period. The increase was due chiefly to economies in operations and improvements in the business of foreign subsidiaries, due for the most part to the rise in the value of foreign exchange.

Dowling Starts Film Production

Eddie Dowling's new independent production company formally commenced activities this week, when the comedian placed in production, at Erpi's Astoria studio, his first feature picture, "The Great Adventure." Mr. Dowling plans to have associated with him some of Broadway's leading producers.

"Primarily, our plan is to benefit the legitimate stage producer," said Mr. Dowling. "I believe that the original Broadway source of theatrical properties should share more equally in production effort and in the profits from motion pictures."

"We have set up a working organization for the production of films, which can provide the Broadway producer with technical facilities equal to the best anywhere, and permit him to retain his own identity. The experience and skill which the representative Broadway play sources have displayed in their own field can just as well be used in conjunction with modern motion picture technique, at first hand, and with complete independence."

Arthur Hopkins is Dowling's associate in his first picture.

Marie Cahill Dies; Noted Comedienne

Marie Cahill, for years a noted comedienne, died Wednesday at her home in New York. She had been in ill health for some months. Miss Cahill never had disclosed her exact age, but she was said to be between 60 and 70 years old.

Hollywood called to Miss Cahill while she was on a vaudeville tour in California. For several years she was featured in a series of two-reel comedies.

The body was removed to the Campbell Funeral Church. Services will be held Friday at St. Malachy's Church under the auspices of the Actors' Fund.

Will Hays to Coast

Will H. Hays left for Hollywood Wednesday to finish MPPDA business which was interrupted when he came East in connection with the industry code under the NRA. He expects to remain in Hollywood only six days.

'Gold Diggers' Not 1932-33 Contract Film, Court Says

Judge Fineleetter of common pleas court No. 4, Philadelphia, issued a ruling on Wednesday upholding the contention of Warner Bros. and denied the injunction sought by Louis Linker, of the Lenox theatre, West Philadelphia, in an effort to restrain Warners from pre-release showing of "Gold Diggers of 1933," in the Sherwood theatre, West Philadelphia, and also to restrain the theatre from showing it.

Mr. Linker, supported by the MPTOA of Eastern Pennsylvania, its attorneys and officers, brought a bill in equity against Warner Bros. to restrain the company from showing the picture in the Sherwood, and also against the Sherwood to restrain it under a temporary injunction from playing "Gold Diggers."

The suit was brought by Mr. Linker on the grounds that the picture was included in his 1932-33 contract and that Warner Bros. had no right to serve it to the Sherwood. The court denied the injunction, and Judge Fineletter ruled that the complaining party had not established the fact that the picture was included in his 1932-33 contract with Warner Bros. The court also ruled that there were good grounds for Warner Bros. to hold that it was not included in Mr. Lipker's 1932-33 contract with Warner.

The suit was generally considered as a test case to settle the contention raised by hundreds of exhibitor clients of Warners, that "Gold Diggers" should be delivered under the 1932-33 contract, and was not, as decided by Warners during the summer, a 1933-34 release.

Plan Rebuilding Orpheum Circuit

Rebuilding of a circuit of approximately 25 Orpheum theatres, but giving RKO full claim to continuous use of the letter "O" in RKO, is seen behind the move of Harold B. Franklin in arranging company participation in the recently formed M. A. Singer Theatres Corporation, which is entirely composed of former Orpheum houses.

At its peak Orpheum had 51 theatres, but in the operation which followed the company's bankruptcy many of these were dropped or disposed of to former owners. Among these owners to whom theatres were returned, was Alexander Pantages. Nat Blumberg, former assistant general manager of RKO, with headquarters in New York, subsequently was sent to Chicago in charge of Orpheum theatres in the Middlewest which the parent company sought to retain as part of its circuit.

With formation of the Singer circuit, Mr. Blumberg was appointed executive vice president in charge of operation of Singer houses in Minneapolis, New Orleans, Sioux City, Cedar Rapids, Des Moines, Dubuque and Davenport. He also continued management of those Orpheum houses not under the Singer banner.

GLAMOROUS! EXOTIC! AMERICA

A N N A

ALL Europe lies entranced in the path of her flaming triumphs. Now America awaits, with expectant thrill, her first American picture.

FOR fifteen months, Samuel Goldwyn has drawn prodigally on his treasure chests to prepare this exotic lady from afar for her American debut. Tutors taught her English. Readers searched scripts for a vehicle worthy of her talents. Coutouriers studied her sinuous body to clothe it glamorously. Lighting and make-up artists tested her strange beauty to make it a vision never to be forgotten.

NOW, the veil is to be lifted! A toast of the old world is to become the toast of the new! Foreign debts are cancelled. Europe is square with America again. Exhibitors will soon be cashing in on another Goldwyn opportunity.

TEXT OF CODE PRESENTED BY KENT

New York, N. Y., August 22, 1933
The National Recovery Administration,
Washington, D. C.
Sirs:

Pursuant to the provisions of Title I, of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the undersigned, as one of the co-ordinators appointed by the Administrator, hereby makes application to the President of the United States for approval of a Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry.

On August 8th, 1933, in response to a call issued by the Administrator, several hundred representative members of the Motion Picture Industry met at the Association of the Bar of the City of New York. The Deputy Administrator who presided at the meeting at the conclusion thereof, appointed a committee of ten producers, twelve distributors, and eighteen exhibitors of motion pictures, representative of the respective divisions and interests in the industry, to meet in conference, hold hearings and submit proposals for a Code for the industry. The undersigned was appointed as a co-ordinator representative of producers and distributors to co-ordinate the views and opinions of the producers' and distributors' committees with those of the exhibitors' committee. A co-ordinator representative of exhibitors to co-ordinate the views and opinions of the exhibitors' committee with those of the producers' and distributors' committees was likewise appointed.

Thereafter meetings of the said committees were held at the building of the Association of the Bar of the City New York from August 8th to August 19th, inclusive.

The Code herewith submitted represents the agreement of the committees of producers, distributors and exhibitors, excepting in the respects and in the manner set forth in a letter bearing even date herewith and which accompanies this letter.

Respectfully submitted,
SYDNEY R. KENT.

Submitted
CODE OF FAIR COMPETITION for the
MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY

This Code is established for the purpose of effectuating the policy of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

ARTICLE I

SECTION 1. As required by Section 7 (a), Title I, of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the following are conditions of this Code:

(a) That employees shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection;

(b) That no employee and no one seeking employment shall be required as a condition of employment to join any company union or to refrain from joining, organizing, or assisting a labor organization of his own choosing; and

(c) That employers shall comply with the maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay, and other conditions of employment, approved or prescribed by the President.

SECTION 2. The right of employer and employee to bargain together free from interference by any third party shall not be affected by this code, and nothing herein shall require any employee to join any organization or to refrain from joining any organization in order to secure or retain employment.

SECTION 3. This code is not designed to promote monopolies or to eliminate or oppress small enterprises and will not operate to discriminate against them and shall not permit monopolies or monopolistic practices.

APPEALS BOARD PLAN PROTESTED

Independent distributors voiced strenuous objections to proposed creation of a National Board of Appeals to sit on cases not arbitrated satisfactorily by the local clearance and zoning boards, according to Mr. Kent's letter to Mr. Rosenblatt. He did not specify the exact nature of the independents' opposition.

ARTICLE II

On and after the effective date of this Code, in the PRODUCTION of Motion Pictures:

SECTION 1.—Hours of Employment.

(a) No employee shall work more than forty (40) hours in any one week.

(b) No employee of the following classes shall work more than forty (40) hours in any one week:

Gardeners; janitors; librarians, mail clerks; messengers; mimeograph operators; porters; restaurant workers; seamstresses; watchmen; accountants; accounting machine operators; bookkeepers; clerks; file clerks; firemen; garage clerks; readers; secretaries (exclusive of Executives' secretaries); stenographers; telephone and telegraph operators; timekeepers; typists; laborers; positive assemblers; positive developers; positive printers; release assemblers; splicers; swing gang; architects; art directors; composers; positive cutters and assistants; draftsmen; wardrobe fitters; modelers, artists and sculptors; musicians; negative timers; optical experts; process projectionists; drapers; sound maintenance men; negative developers; refrigerating and ventilating maintenance men.

(c) No employee of the following classes shall work more than thirty-six (36) hours in any one week:

Carpenters; electrical workers; lamp operators; chauffeurs and truck drivers.

The maximum hours fixed in the foregoing paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) shall not apply to employees on emergency, maintenance and repair work; nor to cases where restriction of hours of skilled workers on continuous processes would hinder, reduce or delay production; nor to (1) employees in executive or managerial capacities, professional persons, actors (exclusive of so-called "extras"); attorneys and their assistants; department heads and their assistants; directors; doctors; managers; executives, their assistants and secretaries; professional nurses; producers and their assistants; purchasing agents; unit business managers; and writers; nor to (2) employees engaged directly in production work whose working time must necessarily follow that of a production unit, including assistant directors; camera men and their assistants; company wardrobe men and their assistants; make-up artists and hair dressers; script clerks; sound grips; sound mixers; sound stage engineers; sound recorders and "stand-by" or "key men"; nor to (3) employees regardless of classification assigned on location work; nor to (4) employees engaged directly in news reel production work in the following classifications: editors and sub-editors; film cutters and film joiners; camera men, sound men and type setters; nor to (5) employees of producers of animated motion picture cartoons in the following classifications: animators; assistant animators; cartoon photographers; story and music department employees; tracers and opaquers.

(d) No "extras" or "extra talent" to the extent consistent with production requirements shall work more than forty (40) hours in any one week.

SECTION 2.—Minimum Wages.

(a) No employee of any class shall be paid less than forty cents (.40) per hour.

(b) The following clerical, office and service employees shall be paid not less than fifty (.50) cents per hour:

Accountants, accounting machine operators; bookkeepers; clerks; file clerks; firemen; garage clerks; readers; secretaries; stenographers; telephone and telegraph operators; timekeepers; typists; laborers; positive assemblers; positive developers; positive printers; release assemblers; splicers; swing gang.

(c) No employee in any of the following classes of factory or mechanical workers or artisans shall be paid less than $1.16 2/3 per hour:

Carpenters; woodworking machine men; electrical workers performing the duties of construction and maintenance generator and shop men, radio loud speakers, telephone, lighting fixtures, wiremen for miniature and explosives, wind machine, pumps, compressor; panoramic operator; "stand-by" or "key men"; blacksmiths; casters; foundrymen; machinists; moulders; painters; pattern makers; plumbers; tinsmiths; sheet metal workers and upholsterers.

(d) No employee in any of the following classes of factory mechanical workers or artisans shall be paid less than $1.33 1/3 per hour, or if on call less than $76.75 per week:

Foremen of carpenter construction department; foremen of electrical construction department.

With respect to "stand-by" or "key men," in lieu of the rate of $1.16 2/3 per hour there may be substituted a weekly wage of $68.50 per week of seven days "on call."

(e) No employee in the following class of factory or mechanical workers or artisans shall be paid less than $1.00 per hour:

Lamp operators.

With respect to any factory, mechanical worker or artisan, in lieu of the rate of $1.00 per hour there may be substituted a weekly wage of $60.00 per week of seven days "on call."

(f) With respect to carpenters, electricians, lamp operators, teamsters and truck drivers, the foregoing scale of minimum wages shall prevail on all locations excepting when the following wage scale may be paid in lieu thereof on distant locations if so stipulated before employment commences and all such employees' expenses are paid:

Distant locations when employed less than one week of seven days and subject to "call" at any time.

Foremen $15.75 per day.

Carpenters, electrical workers (maintenance, construction, generator), gaffers (company electrician) $13.75 per day.

Lamp operators $12.25 per day.

Teamsters and truck drivers $8.50 per day.

In any such case at distant locations the total wage for seven days shall not exceed the following weekly scale:

Foremen $91.75 per week.

Carpenters, electrical workers (maintenance, construction, generator), gaffers (company electrician) $81.75 per week.

Lamp operators $71.75 per week.

Teamsters and truck drivers $51.75 per week.

HOURS AND MINIMUM WAGES SET

(g) The minimum wages for "extras" shall be as follows:

Class A—Dress Group.....$7.50 per day
Class B—Character Group... 5.00 per day
Class C—Mass Group..... 5.00 per day
Class D—Unregistered People picked for mob scenes..... 3.00 per day

(h) Tracers and opaquers employed by producers of animated motion picture cartoons shall be paid straight time for all hours of work beyond forty-four (44) hours per week.

SECTION 3. On and after the effective date, producers shall not employ any person under the age of sixteen (16) years, excepting as actors, and then only upon compliance with all applicable laws and the regulations of all proper authorities governing the employment of minors in motion picture production.

SECTION 4. There are approximately 12,000 persons registered in Hollywood, California, as available for employment in motion picture productions as "extras," whereas the requirements of all the studios there located averaged 631 a day during the six months period ending June 30, 1933.

The producers undertake to seek to alleviate the conditions of "extras" seeking employment as far as is possible by the spreading of available opportunities for employment to greater numbers. In that effort they shall

(a) Not knowingly employ as an "extra" any member of the immediate family of any employee or a person who is not obliged to depend upon "extra" work as a means of livelihood, unless the exigencies of production require an exception to be made.

(b) Request the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences promptly to appoint a representative committee to investigate fully the conditions among the ranks of the registered "extras" and submit to the producers its recommendations as to the scale of wages, the elimination of favoritism, and for the spreading of employment, and otherwise effectuating the purposes above declared.

(c) Upon receipt of such recommendations give prompt consideration thereto and formulate and put into effect appropriate amendments to this Code.

ARTICLE III

On and after the effective date of this Code, in the DISTRIBUTION of Motion Pictures:

SECTION 1.—Hours of Employment.

(a) No employee except outside salesmen shall work for more than forty (40) hours in any one week.

(b) This provision for working hours shall not apply to professional persons employed in their profession nor to employees in a managerial or an executive capacity or in any other capacity of distinction or sole responsibility who now receive more than $35.00 per week; nor to employees on emergency or maintenance and repair work.

SECTION 2.—Minimum Wages.

No employee shall be paid:

(a) Less than fifteen ($15.00) dollars per week in any city over 500,000 population or in the immediate trade area of such city.

(b) Less than $14.50 per week in any city between 250,000 and 500,000 population or in the immediate trade area of such city.

(c) Less than $14.00 per week in any city up to 50,000 population or in the immediate trade area of such city.

SECTION 3. After August 31, 1933 no person under sixteen years of age shall be employed in the distribution of motion pictures except that persons between the age of fourteen and sixteen years of age may be employed for not to exceed three hours a day and those hours between seven A.M. and seven P.M. in such work which will not interfere with hours of day school.

AGENT ACTIVITIES TREATED AT LENGTH

The longest single article in the production code deals with the regulation of agents' activities. Most of the specifications seem to tie in with another article which deals with star raiding.

ARTICLE IV

On and after the effective date of this Code, in the EXHIBITION of Motion Pictures:

SECTION 1.—Hours of Employment.

ARTICLE V

SECTION 1. The industry pledges its combined strength to maintain right moral standards in the production of motion pictures as a form of entertainment. To that end the industry pledges itself to adhere to the regulations promulgated by and within the industry to assure the attainment of such purpose.

SECTION 2. The industry pledges its combined strength to maintain the best standards of advertising and publicity procedure. To that end the industry pledges itself to adhere to the regulations promulgated by and within the industry to assure the attainment of such purpose.

Standards of Fair Competition

ARTICLE VI

No producer shall license for distribution or public exhibition any motion picture in which there is contained any commercial advertising for which compensation was knowingly received unless a full and fair disclosure of such fact is made.

ARTICLE VII

All producers shall in employing the services of actors use the forms of contracts commonly referred to as the "Minimum Contract for Artists," the "Supplemental Contract," and the "Day Player Contract," in such instances as may be required by the provisions of the Basic Agreement signed by a large majority of the representative artists and by producers affiliated with the Association of Motion Picture Producers, Inc., which agreement became effective March 1, 1930.

All producers who have not heretofore subscribed to the "Writer-Producer Code of Practice," adopted on April 14, 1932, by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, and made effective May 1, 1932, shall subscribe to such Agreement.

ARTICLE VIII

SECTION 1. It shall be considered an unfair trade practice for a number of producers who, in the usual and ordinary course of business, rent their respective studios or studio facilities to producers (other than their affiliated companies), to conspire agree, or take joint action to prevent any responsible producer or producers from renting such studios or studio facilities.

SECTION 2. It is recognized that most of the desirable and well-known artists are under contract with certain of the major producing companies. As a result, it has become increasingly difficult for other producers to obtain the kind and number of artists necessary in the production of photoplays. This difficulty, however, could be overcome if, under proper arrangements, artists were loaned by each producer to other producers. Therefore, and for the purpose of increasing production and employment—

(a) It shall be the general policy of producers, wherever possible without deprivation to themselves, to lend artists to other producers; and in the event that any artists shall be loaned, it shall be upon substantially the same terms and conditions, and under the same salary arrangements as are made with other producers; and

(b) It shall be an unfair trade practice for any producers or other parties interested in the production of motion pictures to make or enter into any agreements or understandings between them by concerted action, or by any other means, to take any steps which shall have for their effect or purpose the interference with or prevention of the use, borrowing or exchanging of artists by any producers who are willing to pay reasonable compensation for the use of such artists.

ARTICLE IX

To eliminate unfair and unethical practices, abuses, and undesirable conditions which have developed in the relations between producers and agents, and between agents and their clients, and to bring about fair conditions and methods of competition:

(1) No producer or any employee of any producer shall directly or indirectly engage in or carry on or be interested in the business commonly known as "agent," "artists' agent," "artists' representative," or "artists' manager," or directly or indirectly operate, conduct, control, manage or be employed in any such business or any so-called "artists' bureau," "artists' agency," or any other like agency or bureau for negotiating, arranging or securing employment for players, directors, writers, technicians, or any other class of employee engaged in or in connection with the production of motion pictures.

(2) The term "agent," "artists' agent" and "artists' manager," as used herein, and hereinafter referred to as "agent" shall mean and include any person, (firm, corporation or association), who, for a fee or other valuable consideration from the employee procures, promises or undertakes to procure or provide engagements or employment for persons in or in connection with the production of motion pictures, or who, for a fee or other valuable consideration from the employee, manages or conducts the business affairs of persons so employed, or counsels or advises such persons in connection with their unemployment.

(3) The term "artists' bureau" or "artists' agency," as used herein, shall mean and include the business of conducting as owner, agent, manager or in any other capacity an office or other place for the purpose of procuring, undertaking, or attempting to procure engagements or employment for persons in or in connection with the production of motion pictures, and for which services a fee or other valuable consideration is exacted or attempted to be collected from the employee.

B. No agent shall give, offer or promise to any employee of any producer any gift or gratuity whatsoever to influence the action of such employee in relation to the business of such producer. No such employee shall receive or accept, directly or indirectly, for himself or for another, any commission, gift, gratuity, bonus or other thing of value from any person whom he shall employ for and on behalf of such producer, and no person shall give, offer or promise any such employee any commission, gift, gratuity, bonus or other thing of value for employing such person.

C. No agent shall alienate or entice any employee of any producer or interfere with the employment of such employee or advise or counsel such employee to do anything in conflict with, or inconsistent with, such employee's obligation to perform in good faith any contract of employment, or foment dissension, discord or strife between any such employee and any such producer for the purpose of procuring, or attempting to procure such employee's release from the employment by any such producer or to secure a change in the terms and conditions of such contract of employment.

D. No agent shall directly or indirectly in any manner whatsoever at any time prior to thirty (30) days before the expiration of any contract of employment between any employee and any producer make to such employee any offer of employment, nor solicit offers from or commence negotiations for the employment of such employee with any other producer.

E. No agent shall make to any producer any false representations as to any material matters affecting or relating to any negotiations with such producer for the employment of any person represented by such agent.

F. No agent shall, directly or indirectly, make or enter into any agency contract with any person to represent such person or agent for the purpose of procuring or arranging for the employment of such person in or in connection with motion pictures, which contract provides (a) for a commission in excess of 10% of the salary or compensation to be paid to such person; or (b) that such agent shall receive a commission or compensation only in the event employment is procured for such person with a producer other than the producer employing such employee at the time of making of such agency contract; or (c) that payment of commissions or compensation to the agent shall be contingent upon the agent obtaining a salary or compensation for the employee in excess of any specified sum.

G. In furtherance of the provisions of this Code and the purposes and objects stated in Paragraph A above, all agents, producers and employees employing the services of an agent shall conform with and abide by the "Code of Practice for Artist-Agent-Producer Negotiations" dated July 29, 1933, of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences when and if said Code is duly adopted and made effective by the said Academy, except such provisions of said Academy Code as may be in conflict or inconsistent with or contradictory of any of the provisions of this Code; and excepting further that with respect to Section 8 of the Academy Code, the employee shall be entitled to receive the advice and counsel of the Agent and to have the Agent accompany and represent the employee only at conferences with the producer relating to negotiations for the employment or the extension or renewal of the employment or a modification of the terms of employment of the employee, unless the producer consents to the agent being present at other conferences.

H. No producer shall, directly or indirectly, negotiate or transact any business with, any agent who shall not have subscribed to said Academy Code, if adopted by the Academy, and in the event that after a hearing the hereinafter provided for, shall find that an agent has violated any provision of this Code and shall on account thereof declare that producers shall indefinitely or for a limited time refrain from doing business with such agent, all producers shall comply with such decision of the

I. Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to obligate any producer or agent to comply with any amendment or supplement to the said Academy Code unless such producer or agent shall have expressly assented thereto.

ARTICLE X

It being a recognized principle that producers having discovered, developed, trained, or publicized talent or personalities in the artistic and creative branches of their respective production enterprises by the investment and expenditure of large sums of money, time, effort and skill, and by the creation of opportunities for such talent and personalities, it is fair, just and equitable that producers making such investment and creating such opportunities be accorded reasonable time and opportunity to secure a fair and just return thereon and to have a fair and reasonable opportunity to continue in their employ the talent and personalities so developed by them; provided, however, that such talent and personalities shall not be deprived of the right to receive the compensation to which they are justly entitled as the result of competitive bidding therefor in an open market; and

OPEN MARKET A TRYING QUESTION

The question of the right to buy in open competition appears to have been one of the most disputed subjects in the entire code drafting activities. From the time the exhibition and distribution committees began coordination of their respective codes they were reported, unofficially, to be at "each other's throats" on more than one occasion.

It appearing that employees under contract with producers have been secretly enticed, induced, and solicited during the period of their employment to enter the services of another producer, which has resulted in impairing, and at times, destroying, the value and usefulness of the employees, and has caused them to become discontented with and neglectful of their duties; the following are hereby severally declared to be unfair, destructive and uneconomical methods of competition and unfair practice for any producer:

(a) To indulge in the practice commonly known as "raids" on the employees of any other producer.

(b) To secretly or prematurely negotiate with any employee of any other producer;

(c) Secretly, or otherwise, to entice or alienate any employee from his employment, or to interfere therewith, or to advise any such employee to do anything in conflict with or inconsistent with such employee's obligation to perform in good faith any contract of employment; and

(d) To foment dissension, discord or strife between any employee and his employer in order to secure the employee's release from employment or to secure a change in the terms of any contract under which the employee is then employed.

To carry out the foregoing principles and eliminate such unfair practices and unfair methods of competition, no producer shall negotiate with or make any offer for or to any employee of any other producer for the services of such employee at any time prior to thirty (30) days before the termination of such employment, provided:

(1) Such employee is under written contract of employment and the term thereof inclusive of options, if any, is, has been, or may be for a period of at least twelve (12) months, or such contract covers, or may cover employment in or in connection with at least three (3) feature motion pictures, inclusive of options, if any.

(2) The compensation of such employee, if under a term contract, is at least $500.00 per week; and if employed on a per picture basis is at least $5,000.00 per picture.

(3) Such employee is engaged in any of the artistic or creative branches of the motion picture industry.

The term "contract" as used herein, shall be deemed to include not only any existing contract with any producer, but also any prior contract executed by any parent, subsidiary, or predecessor corporation of such producer, if the employment of the employee under such contracts has been or may be a continuous one.

Should any producer within such thirty (30) day period offer to negotiate with, or make any offer for or to any such employee, of any other producer, for the services of such employee, then on the same day that such offer is made, such producer shall notify the employing producer in writing as to the full and complete terms of the best offer which has been made for such services, and simultaneously shall send a copy of such notice to the Administrative Committee, hereinafter provided for. In such case the employing producer, if he elects to do so, and providing the employee consents, shall be entitled to contract with such employee on terms at least as favorable as those offered by the second producer, or on such other terms as may be acceptable to the employee, such employee always having a free and independent choice as to which offer he will accept. Such notice, however, need be given to the first employing producer only upon the condition that prior to the last thirty (30) day period of employment, such first employing producer shall have made a bona fide offer to such employee for a renewal or extension of his contract of employment. All matters relating to the registration of such offers and the determination as to whether they were bona fide, shall be determined by the Administrative Committee hereinafter provided for.

Should any producer desire to continue, renew or extend the term of employment of any employee, as hereinabove defined, and if he shall have evidenced such desire by making a bona fide offer to such employee prior to the last thirty (30) day period of his employment, and if such offer shall have been rejected, such producer, nevertheless, shall be entitled to notice of offers which may be made to such employee by other producers, during the period hereinafter provided, following the termination of such employment, and should any other producer make any offer for the services of any such former employee of the first employing producer within such period, then, on the same day that such offer is made such producer shall notify the former employing producer in writing of the full and complete terms of the best offer made for such services, and simultaneously shall send a copy of such notice to the Administrative Committee hereinafter provided for. In such case, the first employing producer, if he elects to do so, and again providing the employee consents, shall be entitled to contract with such employee on terms at least as favorable as those offered by the second producer, or on such other terms as may be acceptable to the employee. The period during which the first employing producer shall be entitled to notice of offers made by other producers, as hereinabove provided for, shall be three (3) months from the date of the termination of the first employment, in all cases where the compensation for the employee in connection with the former employment was at the rate of less than $1,000.00 per week; or, if the employee was on a per picture basis, the compensation was less than $10,000.00 per picture. In all other cases, where such compensation was in excess thereof, such period shall be for six months.

It shall be an unfair trade practice for any producer to use coercion to prevent offers being made any employee by other producers.

The Administrative Committee, hereinabove provided for, shall have full power and authority to determine the good faith of any offer made by the first employing producer, so as to entitle said first employing producer to notice of subsequent offers and/or as to whether the period within which such notice must be given should be for three months or for six (6) months. The Administrative Committee shall also provide appropriate methods and procedure whereby all producers shall be notified in every instance when, and the period during which notices of offers are to be transmitted to the employing, or former employing producer. Said Committee shall also prescribe the procedure so as to prevent any employing, or former employing producer from any unreasonable delay or from withholding any action or decision required under the provisions hereof, to the end that the immediate employment of any person with whom any other producer desires to contract shall not be delayed or prevented.

Nothing hereinbefore contained shall apply to so-called free lance players, writers, directors or other employees who are engaged to render services of an artistic or creative nature in connection with one or two pictures only, unless the actual term of employment of any such employee shall be extended for a minimum period of twelve (12) months.

Any dispute, controversy or question involving the interpretation of any provision of this section of the Code, shall be settled and determinded by the Administrative Committee.

The Administrative Committee shall consist of at least five (5) members of the Academy to be selected by the President of the Academy, with the approval of the Board of Governors, each of the five branches of the Academy to have equal representation on such Committee. In the event of the failure of the Academy to designate and appoint the Committee above provided for, such Committee shall be appointed by the Code Authority, hereinafter provided for.

ARTICLE XI

It shall be considered an unfair trade practice for any producer to negotiate with an artist engaged in a "legitimate" production, under a so-called "run of the play" contract, for the services of such artist in a motion picture production which would interfere with or prevent the carrying out of the artists' obligation under such contract and/or disturb, interfere with or prevent the continuance of the run of the "legitimate" production in which such artist is engaged.

ARTICLE XII

No cartoon producer shall employ any persons during such time as he is employed full time by another.

ARTICLE XIII

No cartoon producer shall make any offer directly or indirectly of any money inducement or advantage of any kind to any employee of any other cartoon producer in an effort to entice, persuade or induce such employee to leave or become dissatisfied or to breach any contract covering his employment.

ARTICLE XIV

No cartoon producer shall adapt a cartoon character of another in such manner that the use of the adapted character shall constitute an appropriation by him of the good will of the creator.

ARTICLE XV

No distributor shall deny to any exhibitor full and free opportunity to license the exhibition of the motion pictures distributed by such distributor and for any "run" thereof.

Nothing in this Article shall be deemed to abridge or limit the right of each distributor to select its own customers in bona fide transactions based upon consideration of the reputation and knowledge of the exhibitor for business honesty and fair dealing, financial responsibility, the prestige and operating policy of the exhibitor's theatre or theatres, the terms and conditions offered by the exhibitor, and with due allowance for differences, if any, in the cost of selling.

ARTICLE XVI

No distributor shall threaten or coerce or intimidate any exhibitor to enter into any contract for the exhibition of motion pictures, or to pay higher film rentals by the commission of any overt act evidencing an intention to build or otherwise acquire a motion picture theatre for operation in competition with such exhibitor, but nothing in this article shall in any way abridge the right of a producer or distributor in good faith to build or otherwise acquire a motion picture theatre in any location.

ARTICLE XVII

No distributors' employee shall use his position with the distributor to interfere with the free and competitive buying of pictures by an exhibitor operating a theatre in competition with a theatre in which such employee may have a direct or indirect financial interest.

ARTICLE XVIII

Any distributors may refuse and agree with other distributors to refuse to negotiate with any person, firm, corporation or association seeking to pool or combine the exhibition requirements of different separately owned theatres for the purpose and with the effect of limiting or reducing competition for the exhibition rights of motion pictures among the exhibitors owning or operating such theatres.

For the purposes of this Article the ownership of theatres shall be deemed to mean the complete ownership or the owning or holding of a substantial interest therein.

ARTICLE XIX

Distributors of motion pictures shall refuse to enter into contracts to license the exhibition of motion pictures by any exhibitor who (a) refuses to maintain the minimum price of admission specified in any contract for the licensing of the exhibition of motion pictures; or (b) lowers the admission prices publicly announced or advertised for the exhibitor's theatre by the giving of rebates in the form of premiums, lotteries, reduced scrip books, coupons, gifts, or other things of value, or by "throw-away" tickets, two-for-one admissions, or by other methods or devices of similar effect in cases where the exhibitor has engaged in any such unfair practice as found by arbitration provided for in this Code and nevertheless refuses or fails to desist therefrom.

ARTICLE XX

No distributor shall substitute for any feature motion picture described as that of a named star or stars or named director or named well-known book or play one of any other star or stars, director, book or play, nor substitute any other feature motion picture for one which in the contract therefor is designated "no substitute."

Nothing in this Article contained shall be interpreted to prohibit any distributor from changing the title of any motion picture contracted for, from making changes, alterations and adaptations of any story, book, or play upon which it is based, and from substituting for any such story, book or play another story, book, or play, or from changing the director, the cast, or any member thereof of any such motion picture, except as hereinabove specifically prohibited.

ARTICLE XXI

Each distributor licensing the exhibition of its own motion pictures at any established motion picture theatre shall refrain from licensing the same motion pictures for exhibition by any so-called non-theatrical account, where such exhibition shall be determined (by arbitration provided for in this Code) to be unfair to such established motion picture theatre.

Nothing in this Article shall be interpreted to prohibit the licensing of motion pictures for exhibition at army posts or camps, or on board ships of the United States Navy or ships engaged in carrying passengers to foreign or domestic ports or at institutions housing "shut-ins," such as prisons, hospitals, orphanages, etc., and this Article shall not apply to contracts now existing between distributors and so-called non-theatrical accounts.

ARTICLE XXII

No distributor shall require as a condition of entering into a contract for the licensing of the exhibition of feature motion pictures that the exhibitor contract also for the licensing of the exhibition of a greater number of short subjects, in proportion to the total number of short subjects required by such exhibitor, than the proportion of the feature pictures for which a contract is negotiated bears to the total number of feature pictures required by the exhibitor.

Nothing in this Article contained shall be construed to include "news reels" within the meaning of the words "short subjects."

ARTICLE XXIII

No distributor shall divulge or authorize or knowingly permit to be divulged by any employee or checker any information received in the checking of the receipts of its motion pictures, except that such information may be divulged in any arbitration proceeding or litigation pertaining to the license to exhibit.

ARTICLE XXIV

Section 1. Exhibitors shall not demand and distributors shall not grant clearance of an unreasonable length or extending beyond the reasonable boundaries of any competitive area; and wherever there shall be established schedules of clearance and zoning in accordance with this Article provided for any such schedule shall be the standard of reasonable clearance in length and area for the territory governed thereby.

Section 2. To give effect to the foregoing, there shall be established in each film exchange center a Clearance and Zoning Board which shall be an instrumentality of this Code. These boards shall consist, in each instance, of two representatives of distributors, two representatives of first-run theatres and four representatives of subsequent run theatres; provided that where, due to local conditions, such division of representatives would deny fair representation to either of such two classes of exhibitors the membership of the board may be varied in such respect as to insure fair representation for each of such classes. Disputes over representation on any such board, if they cannot be settled in the exchange center affected, shall be certified to the Code Authority for determination.

Section 3. Promptly after their formation the several Clearance and Zoning Boards provided for hereunder shall proceed forthwith to formulate, publish and prescribe for their respective districts, if need exists therefor, schedules of fair clearance and zoning. Such schedules may classify theaters by zones, admission prices, run, or other reasonable classifications, provided that types of entertainment other than motion pictures shall not be used as a basis for any such classification. Each board may at any time add to, change, or modify the schedule prescribed by any such board.

No action of any kind shall be taken by any such board without affording a full hearing to all parties concerned or affected.

Section 4. Clearance and Zoning Boards shall function by majority vote; when, however, any such board is evenly divided upon any question such question shall be submitted for determination to an umpire to be chosen by the board. Appeals from the action of any Clearance and Zoning Board and from the determination of any umpire may be had to the National Board of Appeals provided for by this Code.

Section 5. The schedules prescribed and/or decisions made by any Clearance and Zoning

ZONING AND REJECTIONS TREATED

Board or umpire shall be binding upon all distributors and exhibitors in the area affected.

SECTION 6. Any exhibitor or any distributor aggrieved by any classification made by any Clearance and Zoning Board or by any violation of any of the provisions of any clearance and zoning schedule shall have the right to have such grievance determined by the Clearance and Zoning Board having jurisdiction. Findings and decisions of such board shall be binding upon the parties affected or concerned, subject to the right of appeal to the National Board of Appeals.

ARTICLE XXV

No distributor shall convey or transfer its assets for the purpose of avoiding the delivery to any exhibitor of any feature motion picture licensed for exhibition by such exhibitor.

ARTICLE XXVI

Any exhibitor entering into a contract for the exhibition of motion pictures which permits the exhibitor to select from the total number of pictures licensed, less than eighty-five per cent (85%) of the total number, and to reject the remainder shall by written notice to the distributor reject each of such motion pictures not to exceed the number which may be rejected within twenty-one days after its date of availability in the exchange territory wherein is located the exhibitor's theatre, and failing to give such notice of rejection, each of such pictures shall be deemed to have been either selected or rejected in accordance with the provisions of said exhibition contract.

ARTICLE XXVII

No exhibitor shall contract for a license to exhibit more motion pictures than such exhibitor reasonably shall require for exhibition in any theatre or theatres operated by such exhibitor, with the effect of depriving a competing exhibitor from contracting to exhibit such excess motion pictures, provided however that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prohibit any exhibitor from contracting for a reasonable number of motion pictures in excess of the number which are actually to be exhibited in the theatre or theatres of such exhibitor in order to reasonably protect such exhibitor against non-delivery of motion pictures.

ARTICLE XXVIII

No exhibitor shall agree with any other exhibitor or exhibitors to allocate among them the motion pictures of distributors with the effect of eliminating fair competition between such exhibitors in the bidding and negotiating for the motion pictures of such distributors; provided that bona fide mergers of interest through partnerships or corporations shall not be deemed to be within this prohibition.

ARTICLE XXIX

No exhibitor shall transfer the ownership or possession of a theatre operated by any such exhibitor for the purpose of avoiding uncompleted contracts for the exhibition of motion pictures at such theatre or theatres.

ARTICLE XXX

No exhibitor licensed to exhibit a motion picture subsequent to its exhibition by another exhibitor having the right to a prior run thereof shall advertise such motion picture by any means of advertising prior to or during its exhibition by such other exhibitor, excepting in any case where the first exhibition date is less than seven days after the conclusion of the prior run; in such case such motion picture may be advertised during, but not before the commencement, of such prior run.

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prohibit any exhibitor from advertising generally all of the feature motion pictures licensed for exhibition by such exhibitor as a group but such general advertising shall not refer to any one of such motion pictures at any time prior to its exhibition by any other exhibitor having the first or immediately prior run thereof excepting as hereinabove provided.

16 PLAYERS SET FOR NRA SHORTS

Sixteen players have been enlisted to play starring parts in NRA featurettes now being reduced for national release. Charlie Ruggles, Jimmy Durante, Zasu Pitts, Lowell Sherman, Edna May Oliver, Dick Powell, Alan Dinehart, Mary Boland, El Brendel, Charles Middleton, Louise Fazenda, Sterling Holloway, Edgar Kennedy, Slim Summerville and Samuel Hines are included in the group.

ARTICLE XXXI

No exhibitor shall lower the admission prices publicly announced or advertised for his theatre by giving rebates in the form of premiums, lotteries, reduced scrip books, coupons, gifts or things of value, throw-away tickets or by two-for-one admissions, or by other methods or devices of similar nature.

This article shall not be deemed to prohibit exhibitors from reducing or increasing their admission scales as they see fit, except as may be prohibited by exhibition contracts. The provisions hereof are aimed at reductions in admission scales by means which are unfair to competing exhibitors and which deceive the public.

ARTICLE XXXII

No exhibitor shall exhibit a motion picture previous to dawn of the first day of its booked and confirmed date of exhibition without securing express written permission from the distributor thereof.

NOTE:—It has not been possible for all those engaged in distributing motion pictures to agree to the provisions of Article XXXIII. The two conflicting articles are set forth below.

PROPOSED ARTICLE XXXIII

No exhibitor shall exhibit at any theatre in any city, town or community, two or more feature motion pictures for one admission where the exhibitors operating 60% of the number of theatres located in any such city, town or community have declared in writing that two or more feature motion pictures for one admission shall not be exhibited in any theatre in any such city, town or community.

For the purpose of such declaration each exhibitor shall be entitled to one vote for each theatre owned or operated by such exhibitor.

A feature motion picture shall be deemed a motion picture originally made and released in length of more than 3,000 ft.

PROPOSED ARTICLE XXXIII

It is recognized that the policy of exhibiting in any theatre or theatres more than one feature picture for one admission price, is an individual problem of each exhibitor, and such policy shall be left solely to the discretion, judgment and decision of each individual exhibitor. In connection with such policy, it shall constitute unfair trade practice for any one, directly or indirectly, to do any of the following things:

(1) To insert in an agreement or agreements relating to the distribution and/or exhibition of motion pictures any provision which shall have for its effect substantially the following: That the exhibitor shall not exhibit any motion picture of feature length of the distributor at the same performance with any other motion picture of feature length; that is, as part of a so-called Double Feature Program;

(2) To refuse to enter into or to conclude with an exhibitor any agreement for the present or future delivery of any motion pictures, because of the declared policy of such exhibitor favoring the Double Feature Program, or because such Exhibitor has indicated an intention to adopt such policy;

(3) To interfere or attempt to interfere with, or to discriminate against, or to do anything tending to coerce, intimidate, threaten, or to take any action prejudicial to any exhibitor, because of the declared policy of such exhibitor with respect to Double Feature Programs.

Any and all agreements heretofore entered into relating to the delivery and/or exhibition of motion pictures, and containing any provisions which may in any manner tend to interfere with the individual policy of each exhibitor as to such Double Feature Programs, or which may in any other manner be inconsistent with the terms and/or intent of this Article, shall be, and shall be deemed to be, as to such provisions relating to Double Feature Programs, of no further force or effect, and shall be deemed to be deleted from such agreements.

ARTICLE XXXIV

Exhibitors shall promptly make and deliver a correct itemized statement of each day's receipts from the exhibition of any motion picture and from so-called midnight shows, if any, upon the conclusion of each such daily exhibition and/or midnight show, when the license fee therefor is based in whole or in part upon a percentage of the exhibitor's admission receipts.

ARTICLE XXXV

The unauthorized exhibition of a motion picture and the doing by any exhibitor of acts which are illegal or in violation of the copyright law of the United States or of an exhibition license gives such exhibitor an unfair competitive advantage over an exhibitor who is honest, obeys the law and complies with his contractual obligations, misappropriates a portion of the playing time market of the motion picture industry, disrupts other exhibitor's bookings and scheduled exhibitions and imposes a burden of expense and waste which must be borne by producers, distributors and exhibitors. Therefore, no exhibitor shall directly or indirectly or by any means whatsoever:

(a) Exhibit any motion picture at any time or place other than on the date or dates and in the places expressly booked and confirmed in writing pursuant to the exhibition license therefor;

(b) Use a print of a motion picture at any theatre other than that specified in the exhibition license therefor;

(c) Use a print of a motion picture at two or more theatres when licensed at only one thereof;

(d) Use the print of a motion picture for any purpose whatsoever other than exhibitions duly licensed and booked; or

(e) Withhold the prompt return of a print of a motion picture for additional exhibitions at any theatre in excess of the time licensed and booked in writing.

ARTICLE XXXVI

No exhibitor shall lease, purchase or otherwise acquire any lithographic poster or any advertising accessory manufactured for or by the producer or distributors of any motion picture, for the advertising or the exploitation thereof by the exhibitor, from any person, firm, corporation or association, other than such producer or distributor. All such lithographic posters and advertising accessories so acquired shall not be sold, leased, or given away by any exhibitor, nor used by any exhibitor for any purpose other than to advertise or exploit the motion picture for which such lithographic posters and advertising accessories were manufactured.

ARBITRATION BOARD IS PROPOSED

ARTICLE XXXVII

Film Boards of Trade throughout the United States shall continue their operations as local distributor trade Associations for the purpose, among other things, of functioning within the sphere of operations of trade associations and of specifically performing the following: (a) The supervision of the granting by members of the right of exhibition of motion pictures distributed by them without charge at public and quasi-public institutions properly equipped to show sound motion pictures and properly protected against fire hazards, in cases where such institutions house or care for inmates confined in them; and the allocation equally among the members of the number and class of motion pictures to be so supplied. (b) The collection of statistics regarding the number of theatres, their ownership, management, seating capacity, location, policy of operation and character of entertainment. (c) The maintenance of proper relations between distributors and the public. (d) The appearance before legislative boards and committees in connection with any existing or proposed national, state or municipal legislation affecting motion pictures, their production, distribution, or exhibition. (e) The prevention of fraud upon distributors of motion pictures. Membership in any Film Board of Trade shall be open to any distributor maintaining and operating an office for the distribution of motion pictures in the exchange center where such Film Board of Trade is located.

ARTICLE XXXVIII

In each territory wherein any distributor maintains an exchange, such exchange shall abide by the regulations promulgated by the Film Boards of Trade in such territory for the prevention of fire, for the holding of fire drills, and rigid monthly inspections, the inspection of prints, the storing of inflammable material, the maintenance and testing of sprinkler systems and fire extinguishers, the avoidance of smoking and other cautions, methods and devices to protect the lives of employees and the public, and to insure safety against fire hazards.

ARTICLE XXXIX

No exhibitor or distributor shall induce or seek to induce the breach of any active contract licensing the exhibition of motion pictures.

ARTICLE XL

No exhibitor or distributor shall give any gratuity or make any offer, of any gratuity for the purpose of procuring advantages that would not otherwise be procurable, or as an inducement to influence a distributor or exhibitor, or representative of either not to deal with any competing or other exhibitors or distributors.

ARTICLE XLI

But one form of license contract containing provisions generally expressive of the usual and customary trade methods of distributing and exhibiting motion pictures shall be used by distributors to license the exhibition by exhibitors of one or more motion pictures released during any one season.

Nothing in this section shall be interpreted to prevent any distributor from adding thereto provisions expressive of such distributor's individual sales policy, provided any such added provision is designated as an added provision, or to require the use of such form for franchise license contracts embracing motion pictures released during two or more seasons.

The so-called "Optional Standard License Agreement" (1933) negotiated by exhibitors and now being used by a large number of distributors shall be the form of license contract

MARY PICKFORD ON AIR IN NRA DRIVE

Mary Pickford was chosen this week to represent the film industry during the NRA nationwide radio broadcast August 27. Miss Pickford will speak from the NBC studios, New York, with Lowell Thomas acting as master of ceremonies. General Hugh S. Johnson, NRA chief, will open the broadcast from Washington at 9:45 p.m., and the two networks, NBC and Columbia, will carry the broadcast. Eddie Cantor, Al Jolson, Will Rogers and Jack Pearl also will participate.

contemplated by this section, excepting in case any provision thereof is in conflict with any provision of this Code such provision of said Optional Standard License Agreement shall be deemed amended to conform with such provision of this Code.

ARTICLE XLII

No distributor shall refuse to make a fair adjustment of the license fees for the exhibition rights of a number of pictures licensed in a group for a stated average sum per picture and so stated in the license agreement, if the total number of pictures so licensed by any exhibitor are not delivered by such distributor provided such exhibitor shall have fully and completely performed all the terms and conditions of such license on the part of the exhibitor to be performed. Any dispute or controversy concerning any such adjustment shall be determined by arbitration provided for in this Code.

ARTICLE XLIII

No distributor shall refuse to deliver to any exhibitor any feature motion picture licensed under an exhibition contract therefor because of such exhibitor's default in the performance of any exhibition contract licensing the exhibition of short subects of such distributor, or vice versa, in cases where such exhibitor and distributor have agreed to arbitrate all claims and controversies arising under the Optional Standard License Agreement provided for in this Code.

ARTICLE XLIV

Any exhibitor forwarding or delivering to another exhibitor a print of a motion picture at the request or upon the order of the distributor thereof shall, but only for such purpose, be deemed to be the agent of such distributor.

ARTICLE XLV

Where any distributor and exhibitor have agreed to the arbitration of all matters under an exhibition contract which provides that the exhibitor shall play any featured picture specified therein, upon a designated day or days of the week, and the exhibitor seeks to be relieved from such obligation for the reason only of the character of the motion picture so designated, the claim of the exhibitor shall be determined by arbitration, and the distributor, if the arbitrators so determine, shall relieve the exhibitor from the obligation to play the motion picture upon the day or days designated by the distributor; provided that the exhibitor makes such claim within three days after receipt of the notice of availability of such feature picture. In such cases arbitration shall be held upon forty-eight hours' notice if the distributor so desires.

If the arbitrators shall sustain the claim of the exhibitor (a) the distributor shall have the right to designate another picture for the same day or dates or to reserve the right to designate another picture for a later date or dates upon the same terms as the motion picture in question; (b) the award of the arbitrators shall not be deemed to apply to any other theatre in the same or any other location.

Where because of an arbitration proceeding or an arbitration award it shall be impractical to serve subsequent run exhibitors in compliance with any notice of availability or confirmed play dates given any such subsequent run exhibitors, the distributor shall have the right to change such play dates.

ARTICLE XLVI

Wherever in this Code arbitration of any matter is provided for such matter shall be submitted for determination to an Arbitration Board which shall consist of four members, each of whom shall be engaged in the motion picture business and two of whom shall be appointed by the exhibitor and the remaining two by the distributor concerned. In any such case, upon the written request of the exhibitor or distributor for arbitration, the party making such request shall name therein two arbitrators, stating the business address and business or business connection of each, and shall designate therein the date, time and place of the hearing of such controversy. The date of such hearing shall not be earlier than seven days from the date of the sending of such notice, unless it shall be claimed in such notice that irreparable injury will result unless there is a speedy determination of such controversy, in which case such hearing may be designated to be held earlier than the said seven-day period.

Within five days from the mailing of such request for arbitration or within twenty-four hours if the date of such hearing shall be earlier than seven days from the date of the sending of such notice, the party upon whom such request is made shall name two arbitrators in a written notice mailed or delivered to the other party, stating therein the business address and business or business connection of each arbitrator. If either party fails or refuses to name the arbitrators as herein provided or if any arbitrator so named shall fail or refuse to act, or be unable to serve, or shall be challenged, and others are or another arbitrator qualified and then available to act is not appointed, others or another arbitrator may be appointed by the other party as the case may be.

No member of an Arbitration Board shall hear or determine any controversy in which he has an interest direct or indirect, and any member having such interest shall be disqualified to act.

If the arbitrators or a majority of them are unable to reach a decision, they or a majority of them shall immediately select an umpire who shall not be engaged in the motion picture business. In such case the hearing before the umpire shall be at such time and place as the umpire shall designate and shall be had before the umpire alone, the arbitrators not to be permitted to attend the hearing before the umpire. If the arbitrators or a majority of them are unable to agree upon the selection of an umpire, the Code Authority shall be requested to make such selection.

ARTICLE XLVII

A National Board of Appeals constituted as in this Article provided shall consist of either (a) four unaffiliated exhibitors, two distributor representatives, and two affiliated circuit representatives, or (b) two unaffiliated exhibitors, one distributor representative, and one affiliated circuit representative, chosen by a fair method of selection.

ARTICLE XLVIII

So long as any producer or distributor shall in the production of motion pictures be required to pay royalties for licenses to use music, sound recording or sound reproducing equipment, such producer or distributor may refuse to contract to license the exhibition of any such motion picture by any exhibitor unless the exhibitor agrees to pay as part of the total negotiated rental a charge designated as a "score charge."

Nothing in this article shall be deemed to abridge or limit the right of any producer or distributor to make any division or divisions of any total negotiated film rental by any name whatsoever.

ARTICLE XLIX

ADMINISTRATION

A MOTION PICTURE CODE NATIONAL AUTHORITY constituted as in this article provided and herein referred to as the "Code Authority" shall be the agency for the administration of this Code, other than such agencies named herein to perform definite functions, and shall have such powers as shall be necessary therefor, together with such other powers and duties as herein prescribed.

The Code Authority shall be chosen by a fair method of selection and approved by the Administrator, and be constituted as follows:

Four representatives of producers; four representatives of distributors; four representatives of exhibitors, the two coordinators appointed by the Administrator and not more than three representatives without vote, appointed by the Administrator.

The Code Authority shall organize by the selection of such officers and advisers as it may deem proper and necessary.

The Code Authority shall be empowered to assist the Administrator in administering and supervising the observance of this Code by the several divisions of the industry. The Code Authority may make investigations as to the functioning and observance of any of the provisions of this Code at its own instance or on the complaint by any person affected and report the same together with its recommendations or findings to the Administrator. The Code Authority shall to such extent and in such manner as may seem most useful utilize the facilities of all existing national, regional and local trade associations in the industry.

ARTICLE L

The President may from time to time cancel or modify any order, approval, license, rule or regulation issued under Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

ARTICLE LI

By presenting this Code the members of the industry assenting thereto are not consenting to any modification thereof and each reserves the right to object individually or jointly to any modified Code.

ARTICLE LII

It is contemplated that supplementary provisions or amendments of this Code or additional Codes applicable to the industry or branches thereof may from time to time be submitted for the approval of the President.

ARTICLE LIII

DEFINITIONS

The term "producer" shall include natural persons, partnerships, associations and corporations engaged in the production of motion pictures.

The term "distributor" shall include natural persons, partnerships, associations and corporations engaged in the distribution of motion pictures.

The term "exhibitor" shall include natural persons, partnerships, associations and corporations engaged in the ownership or operation of theatres for the exhibition of motion pictures.

The term "effective date" shall mean ten (10) days after the approval of this Code by the President of the United States.

KENT POINTS OUT DIFFERENCES ON NUMBER OF SUGGESTIONS

New York, N. Y., August 22, 1933

The National Recovery Administration,
Washington, D. C.

Sirs:

With reference to the letter bearing even date herewith of the undersigned concerning a Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry, following is a statement of the matters upon which the respective committees of exhibitors and distributors are not in accord and of matters which have not been submitted for final approval to the exhibitors' committee by the committee of distributors.

Article VIII, Section 2: The Producers' Committee was evenly divided on the question of including section 2 of Article VIII.

Article X: A reservation in respect to this article was made by the independent producers of the Producers' Committee.

Article XV: The Exhibitors' Committee proposed a provision that it is an unfair method of competition to deny to any theatre owner the right to bid in fair and open competition for whatever run of pictures he or it desires; provided, however, that the seller shall have the right of selection based upon bona fide consideration of the character, responsibility, prior performance, prestige of theatre or theatres and potentiality of income.

Article XVI: Objection was made to this clause by a minority of the distributors' committee.

Article XXII: The Exhibitors' Committee is in agreement with this article with the exception of the last paragraph thereof which excludes from short subjects news reels.

Article XXIV: The Exhibitors' Committee is in agreement with this Article in principle, but the language thereof has not as yet been agreed to. Objection is made by several of the independent distributors of the distributors' committee to the part of Section 6 which provides for a National Board of Appeals, which objection extends to Article XLVII.

Article XXVIII: The Exhibitors' Committee was in agreement with this Article, provided that cooperative booking circuits be not deemed to be within the prohibition of the provisions thereof. (See Article XVIII.)

Article XXX: The Exhibitors' Committee agreed to the principle expressed by this Article but the language thereof has not as yet been agreed to.

First Proposed Article XXXIII: The Distributors' Committee was divided, seven in favor and five against. The Exhibitors' Committee by a majority agreed to this first proposed Article XXXIII; the Distributors' Committee was divided five in favor and seven against the second proposed Article XXXIII.

Articles XXXV, XXXVI, and XXXVII: The Exhibitors' Committee was not in agreement with these Articles.

Article XXVIII: This Article was not submitted to the Exhibitors' Committee because exhibitors are not affected by the provisions thereof.

Article XLI: The Exhibitors' Committee was agreed in principle to this Article. With respect, however, to the elimination of 15 per cent of pictures contracted for, as provided in the so-called "Optional Standard License Agreement" five of the twelve members of the Distributors' Committee favored a provision allowing an exhibitor to eliminate 15 per cent of the number of pictures contracted for without the conditions specified in such regard in the optional standard license agreement, and that pictures so eliminated be not resold to the same exhibitor at a price less than originally contracted for.

Articles XLII, XLIII, XLV: The Exhibitors' Committee proposed these Articles, which were agreed to in principle by the Distributors' Committee, but the language of these Articles has not as yet been agreed to.

Article XLVI: The Exhibitors' Committee proposed the principle of arbitration under the Code according to the method of arbitration contained in the "Optional Standard License Agreement," to which principle the Distributors' Committee agreed, but the language of this Article has not as yet been agreed to.

Articles XLVII, XLVIII, XLIX, L, LI, LII, LIII: These Articles have not as yet been submitted to the Exhibitors' Committee; as to Article XLIX: Independent producers and distributors ask that they be heard as to the method of selection.

Respectfully submitted,

SIDNEY R. KENT.
Coordinator for Producers' and Distributors' Committees.

Aims Supported By Industry: Schenck

Bringing word that leaders of every branch of the motion picture industry have egreed to support the increased employment aims of the NRA to the fullest extent, Joseph M. Schenck, president of the United Artists and 20th Century Pictures, arrived in Hollywood Wednesday from New York.

Mr. Schenck alighted at San Bernardino and was met by a group of production executives to whom he outlined the provisions of the motion picture code during the motor trip to Hollywood.

Eastern cities are showing the effects of President Roosevelt's stimulation measures already, not only in a more cheerful general outlook but in actual business improvement and increased employment, Mr. Schenck declared.

Increased theatre attendance is helping to provide Hollywood with the funds by which the studios will be able to meet the requirements of added employment under the NRA reduced working hour schedule without undue strain on the producers' financial resources, he reported.

Second Injunction Plea Filed Against Mid-States

The second petition for an injunction restraining Mid-States Theatres, Inc., from buying and all exchanges from selling the booking organization, was filed in Detroit late last week by Al Rutenberg of the Iris theatre. The first was filed earlier in the week by Lew Kane, vice-president of Mayfair Theatre Company.

PROPOSED CODE FOR LABORATORIES

A code of fair competition for the laboratory branch of the motion picture industry was submitted to Sol A. Rosenblatt this week and a public hearing, set for August 31, was announced by the deputy administrator.

The laboratory code provides for a 40-hour week and a minimum wage of 50 cents an hour for factory and mechanical workers, except apprentices, and $15 a week for office employees. Apprentices are to receive a minimum of 40 cents an hour.

Among provisions set up in this code is one covering the formation of an arbitration board to settle any controversy arising between two or more employer laboratories on issues not covered by the code. Other provisions are, beside the provisions dealing with child labor, wages and hours of work, the banning of the practice of selling below cost; arbitration of existing contracts; false records, and the following allegedly unfair trade practices: inducement to breach contract; concealment of price discrimination; commercial bribery and the giving of gratuities; departure from original agreements; substitution of material differing from that in original orders; attacks on competitors; misrepresenting date of contract; giving of bribes to any employee of a customer or competitor in order to obtain information; accepting of rebates from employees; influencing any employee to dispose of his wages in any manner; storage of old film without reasonable charge; use of cutting rooms without reasonable charge, and proection service without reasonable charge.

The full text of the laboratory code follows:

ARTICLE I
Purposes

1. General Purpose

This code of fair competition is adopted pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act and for the purpose of carrying out the aims set forth in Title I, Section 1, of the act insofar as they are applicable to the motion picture industry.

2. Purposes Excluded

This code is not designed to promote monopolies and shall not be availed of for that purpose. It is not designed to eliminate or oppress small enterprises and it shall not be operated to discriminate against them.

ARTICLE II
Definitions

The term "motion picture laboratory" as used herein shall include all establishments in which motion picture film is developed, printed, or otherwise processed.

The term "person" as used herein shall include individuals, partnerships, associations, trusts, joint stock companies, and corporations.

The term "employer" as used herein shall include any person employing individuals in the conduct of the operation of a motion picture laboratory.

The term "employe" as used herein shall include any individual engaged in office work or in developing, printing or otherwise processing motion picture film.

The term "President" as used herein shall mean the President of the United States of America.

The initials "NIRA" as used herein shall mean the National Industrial Recovery Act.

The term "Association" as used herein shall mean the Motion Picture Laboratories Association of America, Inc. The term "Board" shall mean the Board of Directors of the Association.

The term "the code" means and includes this code and all schedules annexed hereto as originally approved by the President and all amendments hereof and thereof made as hereinafter in Article VI provided.

ARTICLE III
Administration

1. Administrative Recovery Committee

A committee, to be known as the Administrative Recovery Committee, and hereinafter referred to as the Recovery Committee, comprising the Board and three representatives of the government, to be appointed by the President or his administration, shall apply this code. The Committee shall be democratic in appointment, and its appointment, and regulations shall be subject to the approval of the Administrator.

2. Powers

The Recovery Committee shall co-operate with the Administrator in making investigations as to the functioning or observances of any provisions of the code, in its own instance or on the report of any person, and shall report to the Administrator on any such matters. It may go directly to original sources for information strictly pertinent to the observances of the code, all of which shall be subject to the approval of the Administrator.

3. Arbitration

The members of the Recovery Committee shall constitute a second committee, to be known as the Arbitration Board. In case any controversy arises between two or more employer laboratories on issues not covered by this code, all facts shall be made available to the Arbitration Board which shall act as arbiter, and upon being fully advised in the matter, in accordance with rules approved by the Administrator, shall render its decision. The Arbitration Board's decision shall be binding upon the laboratories involved, and each shall abide by same.

4. Reports for Benefit of President

In order that the President may be informed of the extent of observance of the provisions of this code and of the extent to which the declared policy of the National Industrial Recovery Act as stated herein is being effectuated in the motion picture laboratories industry, persons subject to the jurisdiction of this code shall at its request make periodically to the Recovery Committee such reports on wages, hours of labor, conditions of employment, number of employes and other data pertinent to the purposes of this code as may be required, and shall pay as a code fee, if the fees and dues of the Association be insufficient, his proportionate share of the amounts necessary to pay the cost of assembling, analysis and publication of such reports and data.

5. Investigations

If any employer laboratory declines to permit the personnel of the Recovery Committee, acting under this Article, to examine its books, records or other sources of information, the Committee may suggest the names of not less than three firms of certified public accountants of reputable standing in the motion picture field, and if the employer laboratory shall indicate a choice among the three firms, the Recovery Committee shall employ the firm designated by the employer laboratory in making the investigation of that laboratory.

ARTICLE IV
Employment

1. Age of Employes

No employer shall employ any employe under the age of 16 years. Provided, however, that where a state law provides a higher minimum age, no person below that age specified by such state law shall be employed within that state.

2. Hours of Labor

No employer shall work any employe in excess of 40 hours in any one week, except in an emergency, and then not in excess of 60 hours, and under no circumstances in excess of 1,040 hours in a twenty-six week period.

3. Rates of Pay

(a) Minimum rates.

No employer shall pay any factory or mechanical worker or artisan, except apprentices, at a rate less than 50c per hour, nor any office employe less than $15.00 per week. No employer shall pay an apprentice less than 40c per hour.

4. Conditions of Employment

(a) Employes shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection.

(b) No employe and no one seeking employment shall be required as a condition of employment to join any company union or to refrain from joining, organizing, or assisting a labor organization of his own choosing.

(c) Employers shall comply with the maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay, and other conditions of employment approved or prescribed by the President.

ARTICLE V
Industry Regulations

1. Selling Below Cost Not Permitted

No laboratory products or services shall be sold below the reasonable cost of such products or services, unless in the performance of a bona fide contract in writing executed and delivered prior to August 7, 1933. For this purpose cost is defined as the cost of direct labor plus the cost of materials plus an adequate amount of overhead including an amount for the use of any plant facilities employed as determined by cost accounting methods recognized in the industry and approved by the Recovery Committee.

2. Arbitration of Existing Contracts

Where the costs to the laboratory of executing contracts entered into in the motion picture industry prior to the presentation to Congress of the National Industrial Recovery Act or the adoption of the code are increased by the application of the provisions of that Act or the code, it is equitable and promotive of the purposes of the Act that appropriate adjustments of such contracts to reflect such increased costs be arrived at by arbitral proceedings or otherwise and the applicants for the code constitute themselves a Committee to assist in effecting such adjustments.

3. False Records

No laboratory shall willfully maintain an incorrect, improper or false method of determining cost.

4. Unfair Trade Practices

The following are declared to be unfair trade practices in the industry:

(a) Any willful attempt to induce a breach of existing bona fide contract, or to prevent the performance of any contractual duty or service under any bona fide contract.

(b) To effect or conceal price discrimination by the payment or allowance of secret rebates, refunds, credits or unearned discounts, whether in the form of money or gifts, the acceptance of securities at more than the true market value, the extending of special privileges not usually extended in the industry.

(c) Commercial bribery, giving gratuities, favors or services in any form directly or indirectly to customers or customers' employes or obtaining sales by giving commissions or rewards in any form to employes of customers or otherwise inducing the placing of orders

EXHIBITION COMMITTEE PROPOSALS

August 23rd, 1933.

Hon. Sol. A. Rosenblatt,
Deputy Administrator,
N. R. A.,
Commerce Building,
Washington, D. C.
Sir:

As Co-ordinator of the Exhibitors' Committee of the motion picture industry appointed by you, I have the honor to tender herewith a Code of Fair Competition for the exhibition branch of the industry as framed by said Committee.

Respectfully submitted,
CHARLES L. O'REILLY,
Co-ordinator.

NATIONAL RECOVERY ADMINISTRATION CODE OF FAIR COMPETITION FOR THE EXHIBITION DIVISION OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY.

Preamble.

This Code is submitted by the Motion Picture Industry in conformity with provisions of the National Recovery Act.

The object of this Code is to provide for increased employment; to create a shorter working week and to improve the standards of labor; to eliminate the waste and burden of unfair trade practices to the interests of the public, the employees and employers of the exhibition branch of the Motion Picture Industry.

PART I.

ARTICLE 1.

Labor.

General.

1. Employees shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and shall be free from the interference, restraint or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection.

2. No employee and no one seeking employment shall be required as a condition of employment to join any company union or to refrain from joining, organizing or assisting a labor organization of his own choosing.

3. Employers shall comply with the maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay and other conditions of employment, approved or prescribed by the President.

4. No employee shall be required to join any organization to secure or retain employment or to secure the benefits of this code, and the right of every individual to refrain from joining any organization, and the right of employer and employee to bargain together free from interference by any third party, is hereby recognized.

Maximum Hours of Employment in Connection With Theatre Operation

Ten (10) days after approval of this Code by the President:

No person under sixteen (16) years of age shall be employed.

No employee of any department shall work for more than fifty-two (52) hours in one week.

The maximum hours prescribed in the foregoing paragraph shall not apply to contract labor, to professional persons employed in their professions, or to employees in a managerial, executive or supervisory capacity.

Whenever it may be necessary because of an emergency, overtime and extra shifts beyond the limitations herein set forth shall be permitted.

Classifications of Employees.

Employees shall be classified as follows:

Class No. 1—Operators.
Class No. 2—Stage Hands.
Class No. 3—Musicians.
Class No. 4—Ticket sellers, doormen, apprentices and office help.
Class No. 5—Ushers, office boys, cleaners, matrons, watchmen and attendants.

EXHIBITORS' GROUP FAILS TO AGREE

Mr. O'Reilly's exhibition committee found it necessary to draft its own version of what it considered should be the exhibition phase of the industry code. The committee's code, which is contained in a 30-page booklet, dealt with many of those proposals on which distributors did not agree and, in a minority report, presented certain proposals on which there was no unanimity of opinion among the exhibitors themselves.

Class No. 6—Other employees such as electricians and carpenters (not stage hands), painters, show card writers, sign painters.
Class No. 7—Professional persons and persons in managerial, executive or supervisory capacities.

Minimum Wages.

Classes No. 1-2-3—Contract labor. These classes are matters for local autonomy and no minimum is fixed for them, other than 40 cents per hour as prescribed in the President's agreement for mechanical employees.
Class No. 4—$ .25 per hour in towns or cities having a population of 250,000 or less; $ .30 per hour in cities having a population between 250,000 and 500,000, and $ .35 per hour in cities having a population in excess of 500,000.
Class No. 5—$ .25 per hour.
Class No. 6—This class shall be paid at hourly rates prevailing in the community in which the theatre is located, provided, however, no less than 40 cents per hour shall be paid.
Class No. 7—The foregoing hours shall not apply to persons embraced in this class.

ARTICLE 2.

Right to Buy.

It is an unfair trade practice to deny to any theatre operator the right to buy in free and open competition whatever run of pictures he or it desires; provided, however, that the seller shall have the right of selection based upon bona fide consideration of the character, responsibility, prior performance, prestige of theatre or theatres, and potentiality of income.

ARTICLE 3.

Standard License Agreement.

The optional standard license agreement already negotiated and used by a majority of the distributors shall be used exclusively by all distributors, except as modified by this code.

ARTICLE 4.

Allocation of Certain Film Rentals.

If feature pictures are licensed by a distributor under a license agreement by which the distributor has the right to assign pictures at a later date to different price groups, or classifications, or in which pictures are not described or identified, permitting the distributor to assign pictures not so identified to various film rentals, then the distributor shall, at the conclusion of the contract, provided the exhibitor is not in default thereunder, and provided the percentage of the total number of feature pictures contracted for in each price group has not been released by the distributor, adjust the total film rental on the basis of the average price of pictures for the total number of pictures contracted for.

ARTICLE 5.

Dating Restrictions.

No distributor shall refuse to date feature pictures because of a delinquency in the dating of short subjects, nor refuse to date short subjects on account of a delinquency of the playing arrangement of the feature contract.

ARTICLE 6.

Unreasonable Discrimination

It is an unfair trade practice for a distributor to unreasonably withhold prints to which a theatre is entitled under its contract of exhibition.

ARTICLE 7.

Threats and Coercion.

No distributor shall threaten or coerce or intimidate any exhibitor to enter into any contract for the exhibition of motion pictures, or to pay higher film rentals by the commission of any overt act evidencing an intention to build or otherwise acquire a motion picture theatre for operation in competition with such exhibitor, but nothing in this article shall in any way abridge the right of a producer or distributor in good faith to build or otherwise acquire a motion picture theatre in any location except as herein prohibited.

ARTICLE 8.

Distributors' Employees.

No distributors' employee shall use his position with the distributor to interfere with the free and competitive buying of pictures by an exhibitor operating a theatre in competition with a theatre in which such employee may have a direct or indirect financial interest.

ARTICLE 9.

Offer of Gratuity.

No exhibitor or distributor shall give any gratuity or make any offer, or promise of gratuity, to a distributor or exhibitor, or any representative of any distributor or exhibitor for the purpose of procuring advantages that would not otherwise be procurable, or as an inducement to influence such distributor or exhibitor, or representative not to deal with competing or other exhibitors or distributors.

ARTICLE 10.

Inducement to Breach Contracts.

No exhibitor or distributor shall seek to induce or induce a distributor or any representative of any distributor, or any exhibitor, to breach any contract licensing the exhibition of motion pictures.

ARTICLE 11.

Selective Contracts

Any exhibitor entering into a contract for the exhibition of motion pictures which permit the exhibitor to select from the total number of pictures licensed, less than eighty-five percent (85%) of the total number, and to reject the remainder shall by written notice to the distributor, reject each of such motion pictures not to exceed the number which may be rejected within twenty-one days after its date of availability in the exchange territory wherein is located the exhibitor's theatre, and failing to give such notice of rejection, each of such pictures shall be deemed to have been selected.

ARTICLE 12.

Overbuying.

No exhibitor shall contract for a license to exhibit more motion pictures than such exhibitor reasonably shall require for exhibition in any theatre or theatres operated by such exhibitor, with the effect of depriving a competing exhibitor from contracting to exhibit such excess motion pictures, provided however that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prohibit any exhibitor from contracting for a reasonable number of motion pictures in excess of the number which are actually to be exhibited in the theatre or theatres of such exhibitor in order to reasonably protect such exhibitor against non-delivery of motion pictures.

ELIMINATION TREATED IN DETAIL

ARTICLE 13.
TRANSFER TO AVOID CONTRACTS.

No exhibitor shall transfer the ownership or possession of a theatre operated by any such exhibitor for the purpose of avoiding uncompleted contracts for the exhibition of motion pictures at such theatre or theatres.

ARTICLE 14.
ELIMINATION.

(a) If the total number of feature motion pictures offered to the Exhibitor by the Distributor, at one time, shall have been licensed by the Distributor under a contract of exhibition, and the rental of each thereof averages less than Four hundred ($400.00) Dollars, the Exhibitors shall have the right to exclude from the license, first not to exceed five (5%) percent of the total number of feature motion pictures licensed; thereafter to further exclude not to exceed five (5%) percent of said total number; and/or lastly to further exclude not to exceed five (5%) percent of said total number, the aggregate number of feature pictures so excluded in no event to exceed fifteen (15%) percent of the total number licensed; provided that the Exhibitor is not in default under such contract and shall have fully complied with all of the provisions, if any set forth in the Schedule for the exhibition of one or more of said feature motion pictures at specified intervals; and provided further that the Exhibitor shall give to the Distributor written notice of the Exhibitor's election to exclude any of said feature motion pictures not later than fourteen (14) days before the date or dates fixed for its exhibition under such contract and at the same time: (1) as to each feature motion picture excluded in the first five percent of the total number so excluded to pay to the Distributor the rental therefor specified in the Schedule; (2) as to each feature motion picture included in the five percent of the total number thereafter so excluded to pay to the Distributor one-half of the rental thereof specified in the Schedule; and (3) as to each feature motion picture included in the five (5%) percent of the total lastly so excluded there shall be added to the rental of the motion pictures then remaining to be delivered under such contract an amount at least equal to the aggregate of the rentals of the motion pictures so lastly excluded, apportioned equally to each or to any one or more thereof, selected by the Exhibitor upon notice to such effect given to the Distributor, and the exhibition period specified in the Schedule of each of such motion pictures so selected may be, at the option of the Exhibitor upon written notice to such effect, ratably extended for such number of days as the rental thereof specified in the Schedule plus the amount added as provided in such contract, permits; provided that if there shall be no motion pictures then remaining to be delivered under such contract, the Exhibitor shall pay to the Distributor the rental therefor specified in the Schedule. In computing such number of days fractions of more than one-third shall be deemed one day.

For the purpose of determining whether or not the average rental of any of the motion pictures, the rental of which is to be computed in whole or in part upon a percentage of the receipts of the Exhibitor's theatre, is more or less than $400.00, the rental of each such motion picture shall be deemed to be the average amount of the license fees paid by the Exhibitor to the Distributor for each feature motion picture distributed by the Distributor and exhibited at said theatre during a period of one year prior to the term of such contract and of which the rental was computed in whole or in part upon a percentage of the receipts of the Exhibitor's theatre.

(b) On or before the fifteenth (15th) day after the end of each three (3) months period of the term of the license, the Distributor shall repay to the Exhibitor a sum equal to the amount paid by the Exhibitor to the Distributor as rental of the feature motion pictures first excluded by the Exhibitor as provided in Paragraph (a) of this clause, during such three months period provided that during such three months period the Exhibitor shall have exhibited as in such contract provided, all of the feature motion pictures licensed then generally released and available for exhibition under such contract by the Exhibitor, excepting those, if any, excluded as provided in this clause and shall have paid to the Distributor at the time in such contract specified the rental of each thereof.

(c) For the purpose of computing the sum required to be paid by the Exhibitor to the Distributor as provided in Paragraph (a) of this Clause for any motion picture, the rental or any part of which is to be computed in whole or in part upon a percentage of the receipts of said theatre, shall be deemed to be that amount or part thereof which is equal to such percentage of the average daily gross receipts of such theatre on each date any feature motion picture distributed by the Distributor was exhibited there at during the period of ninety (90) days prior to the date of the Exhibitor's written notice to exclude such feature motion picture, or if no feature motion picture distributed by the Distributor was exhibited at such theatre during said ninety (90) days period, then the rental or part thereof shall be deemed to be that amount or part thereof which is equal to such percentage of the average daily gross receipts of said theatre during the period of thirty (30) operating days immediately prior to the date of said written notice to exclude such feature motion picture.

(d) In computing said percentages of the total number of feature motion pictures fractions of less than one-half shall be disregarded.

(e) Upon the failure or refusal of the Exhibitor to fully and completely comply with each and every condition in such contract specified and upon which the Exhibitor is granted the right to exclude any of the feature motion pictures licensed, or provided the parties hereto have agreed to arbitration, or as provided in any other existing license agreement between said parties, and the Exhibitor shall fail or refuse to arbitrate any claim or controversy arising hereunder or thereunder, or to comply with any award in respect thereto, such right to exclude any feature motion picture and thereafter to exclude from this license additional feature motion pictures, shall thereupon forthwith terminate and shall not again be granted during the term of such contract.

(f) Upon the exclusion of each of the feature motion pictures permitted by the provisions of the contract the run and protection period, if any, granted the Exhibitor in respect thereto shall be deemed waived by the Exhibitor and the license thereof shall thereupon terminate and revert to the Distributor.

SITUATION ON DOUBLE BILLS "PECULIAR"

In the separate exhibition committee code the subject of double bills is described by the committee as being "a peculiar situation." Double featuring was a subject of much contention long before code drafting ever was invented.

ARTICLE 15.
SUBSTITUTIONS.

The exhibitor shall not be required to accept for any picture described in the schedule as the picture of a star, or combination of stars, or of a director, or where based upon a well-known book or play, or any picture marked in the schedule as "no substitution" any other picture with a material substitution of a star or combination of stars, or director, book or play.

Nothing herein contained shall limit the right of the distributor to change the title of any picture, or as respects any picture based upon a story, book or play prevent the making of any alterations, changes in or adaptations thereof. It shall also be mandatory upon the distributor to give a reasonable notification to the exhibitor of all instances where an entirely different feature is intended to be substituted.

ARTICLE 16.
SCORE CHARGES.

The practice of adding to the negotiated cost of the license to exhibit motion pictures any additional charges such as score charges is an unfair trade practice.

ARTICLE 17.
PLAYING ARRANGEMENTS.

The distributor shall not require any specific day or days of the week for the exhibition of specific pictures or class of pictures.

ARTICLE 18.
NON-THEATRICAL COMPETITION.

It shall be an unfair trade practice for any distributor to sell any picture generally released to any non-theatrical account, provided, however, that nothing in the above shall prevent the distributor from furnishing pictures for hospitals, ships on the high seas, army posts, or for the entertainment of shut-ins and/or charitable institutions to which the public is not admitted, and provided further, that no pictures shall be furnished until they have completed their commercial runs in the competitive area.

ARTICLE 19.
PICTURES VIOLATING PRODUCTION CODE.

No exhibitor shall exhibit, or be required to exhibit, or pay for any motion picture which is declared to be contrary to and violative of the standards and requirements of the production code of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., and the resolutions for uniform interpretations of said code or codes, or any amendment, revision or subsequent promulgation of said code.

The determination of the question whether any picture is violative of said code or codes shall rest with the National Appeal Board or other duly constituted industry authority.

ARTICLE 20.
ADVERTISING CODE.

(1) No exhibitor shall in advertising motion pictures violate the following rules of decency and good taste:

(a) Nudity with meretricious purpose shall not be used.

(b) Profanity shall be avoided.

(c) No false or misleading statements shall be used directly or implied by type arrangements or by distorted quotations.

(d) No text or illustration shall ridicule or tend to ridicule, any religion or religious faith; no illustration of a character in clerical garb shall be shown in any but a respectful manner.

(e) The history, institutions and nationalities of all countries shall be represented with fairness.

(f) Pictorial and copy treatment of officers of the law shall not be of such a nature as to undermine their authority.

UNFAIR PRICE REDUCTIONS ATTACKED

(g) Good taste shall be the standard and the rule for all advertising and exploitation of motion pictures.

(2) The use by an exhibitor of advertising matter violative of the foregoing rules obtained from a distributor shall constitute a violation of this article by such distributor.

(3) The question whether any advertising matter violates those rules shall be determined by the National Appeal Board, or by other duly constituted industry authority.

ARTICLE 21.

ADVERTISING CONFLICTING WITH PRIOR RUN.

When an Exhibitor is granted a subsequent run of motion pictures, the Exhibitor shall not advertise any of them by any means of advertising prior to or during the exhibition of any one of said motion pictures by any other exhibitor having the right to a prior run thereof and charging admission prices higher than the prices charged for admission to the Exhibitor's theatre, excepting advertising inside the theatre not intended for removal therefrom by the public, unless the first date of exhibition hereunder of any such motion picture shall be within fifteen (15) days from the last exhibition date of such prior run exhibition, in which case the Exhibitor shall have the right to advertise such motion picture, provided the Exhibitor does not in any advertising state that the prices charged for admission are or will be less than the admission prices charged by the Exhibitor having the first or prior run of such motion picture. Nothing in this Clause shall be deemed to prohibit the Exhibitor from advertising generally all of said motion pictures as a group but such general advertising shall not refer to any one of said motion pictures during its exhibition by any other exhibitor having the first or immediately prior run thereof, excepting as herein provided.

ARTICLE 22.

PRICE EVASION.

No exhibitor shall lower the admission prices publicly announced or advertised for his theatre by the giving rebates in the form of premiums, lotteries, reduced script books, coupons, gifts, or things of value, or by two-for-one admissions, or by other methods or devices of similar nature, except as approved by the local maximum clearance and zoning schedules. This shall not be deemed to prohibit exhibitors from reducing or increasing their admission scales as they see fit except as may be prohibited by exhibition contracts, or local zoning and clearance schedules. It is aimed at reductions through means which are unfair to competing exhibitors and/or deceive the public. Provided: where there is no local zoning or arbitration board for that particular city, town or community, the ruling of seventy-five percent (75%) of the exhibitors shall prevail.

ARTICLE 23.

MIDNIGHT SHOWS.

No exhibitor shall exhibit a motion picture previous to dawn of the first day of exhibition without securing express written permission therefor under the license agreement.

ARTICLE 24.

FORCING SHORTS WITH FEATURES.

Section 1. Any requirement by the distributor, directly or indirectly, that the exhibitors execute an application for the licensing of shorts (including newsreels) in order to secure a license for the exhibition of feature photoplays, or vice versa, shall be an unfair method of competition.

Section 2. The securing of the execution of an application for the licensing of shorts (including newsreels) that is followed by the acceptance of an application for the licensing of photoplays for the same season shall be presumed to be contrary to the purpose of this article, and may be cancelled by the exhibitors by giving written notice by Registered Mail within ten (10) days after the receipt by him of notification of the acceptance of the application for the exhibition of feature photoplays.

FILMS HAVE PLACE IN NRA "BIG DRIVE"

From the National Recovery Administration at Washington, as an official government release, this week came a bulletin, titled "The Big Drive," and outlining the steps to be taken during the course of "the greatest drive this country has seen since the World War . . . to put over the President's Reemployment Program." Beginning Monday, August 28, notes the bulletin, nationally known men and women will lead an army of 1,500,000 volunteer NRA workers in a concentrated drive reaching into every home, every place of business in the country. The communication emphasizes the place of importance occupied by the motion picture industry in the drive.

ARTICLE 25.

SPECIAL PRODUCTIONS.

Until such time as a distributor has delivered all of the pictures on the contract, it shall be an unfair trade practice to offer for release any special productions, and in all cases if special productions are made pursuant to the above, the same shall be offered first to the exhibitor having the other productions under contract under the same terms and conditions covering special productions as agreed upon in the original contract.

ARTICLE 26.

DISCLOSURE OF BOX OFFICE RECEIPTS

No exhibitor or distributor shall make any disclosure of box office receipts for publication except necessary reports to stockholders, credit and governmental agencies and to other like bodies. No exhibitor or distributor shall be responsible for disclosures made by agents not authorized to do so.

ARTICLE 27.

DOUBLE FEATURES.

Exhibiting two or more feature photoplays for one admission price is an uneconomic practice and an unfair method of competition. Nevertheless, because of peculiar local conditions, exhibiting two or more feature photoplays for one admission price shall be deemed an unfair competitive practice only in those cities, towns and communities where sixty percent (60%) of the theatres disapprove thereof by signed petition.

For the purpose of voting thereon each exhibitor shall be entitled to one vote for each theatre owned and operated by such exhibitor in the area of such vote.

ARTICLE 28.

LIABILITY ON CIRCUIT SHIPMENTS.

When an exhibitor is designated in lieu of a common carrier by the distributor to forward a picture or pictures to another exhibitor, the exhibitor forwarding the pictures shall be the agent of the distributor and not otherwise.

ARTICLE 29.

INTERFERENCE WITH NEGOTIATIONS

It is an unfair trade practice knowingly and intentionally, directly or indirectly to obstruct, hinder, impede or interfere with pending negotiations between an exhibitor and any third party in respect of any matter or thing in any way pertaining to or affecting the ownership, management, operation, use or occupancy of any theatre or arising out of or in any wise relating thereto, or in respect of any modification, renewal or extension of any agreement affecting the same for the purpose of preventing the consummation of such negotiations or to deprive the exhibitor of the continued management, use and occupancy of such theatre.

ARTICLE 30.

CHECKERS

No distributor shall divulge or authorize or knowingly permit to be divulged by any employee or checker any information received in the checking of the receipts of its photoplays, except that such information may be divulged in any arbitration proceeding or litigation pertaining to the license to exhibit.

ARTICLE 31.

POSTER EXCHANGES.

There shall be no restriction against the operation of poster exchanges.

ARTICLE 32.

RELEASE DATES

Definite release dates for each picture shall be announced by the distributor and availability of such pictures shall be made to all runs in accordance with such release dates. Any exhibitor failing to date the picture within 14 days of his release date shall automatically forfeit his clearance right to the subsequent runs to the extent by which he delayed the dating of the picture.

ARTICLE 33.

TRANSFER OF ASSETS OF DISTRIBUTORS.

The transfer of assets by distributors for the purpose of refusing to deliver contracted feature films to exhibitors is an unfair trade practice.

ARTICLE 34.

CODE TO APPLY TO EXISTING CONTRACTS

The provisions of this code shall apply to any existing exhibition contracts for the season 1933-1934.

ARTICLE 35.

DAMAGES FOR NON-DELIVERY.

In any legal or arbitration proceeding, where the question of damages for non-delivery of a picture by a distributor is material, it shall be presumed for the purpose of ascertaining such damages, that the gross income of the theatre at which such picture was to have been exhibited on each day on which it was to have been exhibited, would have been equal to the average daily gross income of such theatre over a period of sixty days prior to such non-delivery; provided that nothing herein shall militate against the right of specific performance in such cases.

ARTICLE 36.

CIRCUIT COOPERATIVE BOOKING.

It shall be an unfair method of competition for a distributor to refuse to deal with cooperative booking circuits.

ARTICLE 37.

FURNISHING BOX OFFICE STATEMENTS.

Exhibitors shall promptly make and deliver a correct itemized statement of each day's receipts from the exhibition of any motion picture and from so-called midnight shows, if any, upon the conclusion of each such daily exhibition and midnight show, when the license fee therefor is based in whole or in part upon the percentage of the exhibitor's admission receipts.

ARTICLE 38.

UNAUTHORIZED EXHIBITION.

1. No exhibitor shall directly or indirectly, or by any means whatsoever:

(a) Exhibit any motion pictures at any time or place other than on the date or dates and in the places expressly booked and confirmed in writing pursuant to the exhibition license therefor;

(b) Use a print of a motion picture at any theatre other than that specified in the exhibition license therefor;

(c) Use a print of a motion picture at two or more theatres when licensed at only one thereof;

(d) Use the print of a motion picture for any purpose whatsoever other than exhibitions duly licensed and booked; or

(e) Withhold the prompt return of a print of a motion picture for additional exhibitions at any theatre in excess of the time licensed and booked in writing.

2. Any violation of any of the foregoing provisions by any exhibitor in reliance on any promise or assurance express or implied by any salesman, agent or representative of any distributor as an inducement of its sale of film shall be considered a violation by all persons concerned and punishable as such.

3. Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to define an unauthorized showing in any proceeding for alleged infringement of the copyright law.

ARTICLE 39.

NATIONAL CONTROL BOARD.

The exhibiting branch of the industry records its view that the National Control Board should be fairly balanced between the several economic divisions of the industry, with voting representatives to be named by the Government.

ARTICLE 40.

ARBITRATION.

Sec. 1. Method of Arbitration.

The arbitration of all disputes between exhibitors and distributors arising under any exhibition contract, if the parties shall agree on arbitration, shall be in accordance with the optional arbitration clause of the so-called Optional Standard License Agreement, a copy of which clause is annexed hereto marked "Schedule A", except as the provisions of such clause may be modified by the provisions of this Code.

Sec. 2. Number of Arbitrators.

By stipulation of the parties to any dispute growing out of an exhibition contract, or by standing agreement in any territory between local exhibitors' association or associations, on the one hand, and the representatives of the distributors on the other hand, the number of arbitrators to be appointed by each party may be reduced to one, with power in the two thus appointed to appoint an umpire as provided in said optional arbitration clause.

SCHEDULE "A".

ARBITRATION PROVISIONS.

Optional Arbitration Clause

OPTIONAL CLAUSE: The following clause is optional with the parties hereto. If it is desired to make such clause a part of this license, the Exhibitor and the duly authorized representative of the distributor shall sign their respective names where indicated immediately following this paragraph, and unless so signed, the said Clause shall be deemed excluded from this license agreement.

It is agreed by and between the parties that Clause Twentieth providing for voluntary arbitration of disputes arising thereunder, shall be included as a part of this license.

Representative of the Distributor duly authorized to agree to the following Clause Twentieth.

.....

Exhibitor.

Arbitration

The Exhibitor and the Distributor respectively, freely and voluntarily agree that as a condition precedent to the commencement of any action or proceeding in any Court by either of them to determine, enforce or protect the legal right of either hereunder, each shall submit all claims and controversies arising hereunder for determination by arbitration to an Arbitration Board (hereby expressly waiving the oath of the arbitrators) which shall consist of four members, each of whom shall be engaged in the motion picture business, and two of whom to be appointed by the Exhibitor, and the remaining two to be appointed by the Distributor.

Upon the written request of the Distributor or the Exhibitor for the arbitration of any dispute or controversy arising hereunder, the party making such request shall name therein two arbitrators stating the business address and business or business connection of each and shall designate therein the date, time and place of the hearing of such controversy. The date of such hearing shall not be earlier than seven (7) days from the date of the sending of such notice, unless it shall be claimed in such notice that irreparable injury will result unless there is a speedy determination of such controversy in which case such hearing may be designated to be held earlier than said seven (7) day period.

Within five (5) days after the mailing of such request for arbitration, the party upon whom such request is made shall name two arbitrators in a written notice mailed or delivered to the other party, stating therein the business address and business or business connection of each arbitrator. If either party fails or refuses to name the arbitrators as herein provided or if any arbitrator so named shall fail or refuse to act, or be unable to serve or shall be challenged, and others are or another arbitrator qualified and then available to act is not then appointed, others or another arbitrator may be appointed by the other party as the case may be.

No member of the Arbitration Board shall hear or determine any controversy in which he has an interest direct or indirect, and any member having such interest shall be disqualified to act.

If the arbitrators or a majority of them are unable to reach a decision, they then, or a majority of them shall immediately select an umpire who shall not be engaged in the motion picture business. In such case the hearing before the umpire shall be at such time and place as the umpire shall designate and shall be had before the umpire alone, the arbitrators not to be permitted to attend the hearing before the umpire. If the arbitrators or a majority of them are unable to agree upon the selection of an umpire, the American Arbitration Association shall be requested to make such selection.

The Arbitration Board shall have general power to determine such dispute or controversy as shall be submitted, to make findings of fact in respect thereof and to direct specific performance of a contract, and/or that the same has been breached in whole or in part, and/or that damages on such account shall be paid. The Board of Arbitration shall have the power only to give force and effect to the provisions of this license agreement and the rights or obligations of the parties thereunder; provided that if after a full hearing of any controversy submitted for arbitration hereunder, excepting any submission to an umpire designated as herein above provided the arbitrators or a majority of them are of the opinion that because of unusual circumstances arising after the execution of this license agreement and beyond the direct control of the parties hereto disclosed at such hearing, a strict enforcement of the provisions of this license agreement would impose undue hardships upon one of the parties, the arbitrators or a majority of them may recommend in writing to the parties a settlement of such controversy upon such terms and conditions deemed by the arbitrators fair and just. If such settlement is not agreed to by the parties within five (5) days after the receipt of a copy of such recommendation, the controversy shall be deemed withdrawn from the arbitrators and shall be submitted with a written statement of all of the facts adduced at the hearing before the arbitrators, together with all documentary evidence to the National Appeal Board in New York. The disposition by the National Appeal Board of any such recommendation shall be final and binding upon the parties hereto.

The hearing of any such controversy shall be had before the Arbitration Board in the City wherein is situated the exchange of the Distributor from which the Exhibitor is served, unless the parties agree in writing that such hearing be had in some other place. If either party fails or refuses to submit to arbitration any such claim or controversy, the other party may apply to a United States District Court, or to any other Court, including a court of a state in which such hearing would otherwise not be had, for an order to proceed to arbitrate in which case such hearing shall be had in such place as the Court to which such application is made may lawfully direct.

The parties hereto further agree to abide by and forthwith comply with any decision or award of the arbitrators, or a majority of them and consent that any such decision or award shall be enforceable in or by any Court of competent jurisdiction pursuant to the law of such jurisdiction now or hereafter in force.

If the exhibitor shall fail or refuse to submit to arbitration any such claim or controversy or to abide by and comply with the award of the arbitrators in respect thereto, within seven (7) days, the Distributor may at its option suspend the deliveries of the motion pictures provided for in this and in each other existing license agreement, between the parties hereto and/or terminate this and each such other license agreement; and upon such termination the aggregate of the license fees of all motion pictures specified in this and any such other license agreement then not exhibited forthwith shall become due and payable by the Exhibitor.

If the Distributor shall fail or refuse to submit to arbitration any such claim or controversy or to abide by and comply with the decision or the award of an Arbitration Board in respect thereto within seven (7) days, the Exhibitor may at the option of the Exhibitor terminate this and any other existing license agreement between the parties hereto by mailing a notice to such effect to the Distributor within seven (7) days after such failure or refusal; and the Exhibitor shall have the right and remedies provided in Clause Second (b) for failure to deliver motion pictures.

Any such termination by either party shall be without prejudice to any other right or remedy by which the party so terminating may have by reason of any breach by the other party to this or any other existing agreement between the parties.

Each of the parties hereto, without notice to the other, may apply to any Court having jurisdiction to make this agreement to arbitrate a rule or order of such Court.

ARTICLE 41.

FAIR CLEARANCE AND ZONING.

Sec. 1. Declaration of Policy.—Clearance which imposes an undue hardship on subsequent run theatres by withholding pictures for unreasonable lengths of time after their showing in prior run houses, or which subjects prior run houses to the unfair competition of subsequent run houses by enabling the latter to play simultaneously with or too soon after the former, or which extends beyond the reasonable boundaries of any given competitive area, is an unfair method of competition.

Sec. 2. Establishment of Boards.—To give effect to the foregoing principles there shall be established in each film exchange center, and in every other city of 150,000 population or over when fifty per cent, or more of the exhibitors located therein desire it, a Clearance and Zoning Board, which shall be an instrumentality of this Code. These Boards shall consist, in each instance, of two representatives of distributors, two representatives of first run theatres and four representatives of subsequent run theatres; provided, that where due to unusual conditions this would deny fair representation to any of the three enumerated economic divisions, the membership of the Board may be varied to insure fairness. Disputes over representation on such Boards, it they cannot be settled in the zone of city affected shall be certified to the National Control Board for determination.

Sec. 3.—Jurisdiction.—Promptly after their formation, and not later than thirty days after the approval by the President of this Code, the several Clearance and Zoning Boards to be created hereunder shall proceed forthwith to formulate, publish and prescribe for their respective districts, where need exists therefor, schedules of fair clearance and zoning governing the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures in such districts.

Such schedules may classify theatres by zones, or make such reasonable classifications as may be suited to local conditions. The Boards may at any time add to or modify such schedules as to particular theatres, provided, however, that no change or modification affecting generally any such schedule shall be made except upon the petition of at least 50 per cent. of the theatres affected.

The jurisdiction of the Clearance and Zoning Boards shall also extend to all other matters committed to such boards by the provisions of this Code, as well as to all competitive practices which affect directly or indirectly the effectiveness of any schedule or action of the board.

No action of any kind shall be taken by any such board without affording full hearing to all parties affected.

Sec. 4. Majority Control.—Clearance and Zoning Boards shall function by majority vote; when, however, any such board is evenly divided on any question, it shall be the duty of the board to submit the question to an umpire to be chosen by the board. Appeals from the action of Clearance and Zoning Boards or any such umpire may be had to the National Control Board in the manner prescribed in this Code.

Sec. 5. Must be Obeyed.—The schedules prescribed and/or decision made by any Clearance and Zoning Board shall be binding on all distributors and exhibitors in the area affected having knowledge thereof. Any knowing violation of or departure from the terms and/or provisions of any schedule of fair clearance and zoning or any decision which any Clearance and Zoning Board or umpire is authorized to make under this article shall be an unfair method of competition and punishable as such.

Sec. 6. Arbitration of Clearance and Zoning Violations.—In addition to the rights and remedies secured by the National Industrial Recovery Act any exhibitor and/or distributor aggrieved by a violation of any of the regulations of a Clearance and Zoning Board shall have the right to have his grievance against the offending party determined by arbitration before a Clearance and Zoning Board whose findings and decision shall be binding upon the parties. In the event that the Clearance and Zoning Board should be evenly divided, an umpire shall be chosen, whose decision shall be binding. If the board fail to agree on an umpire, any person affected may apply to the Federal District Court in the district involved for the appointment of such. In any case there shall be a right of appeal to the National Control Board.

ARTICLE 42.

The violation of any provision of this Code shall constitute an unfair method of competition and be punishable as such, whether expressly so provided in such provision or not.

PART II.

Of Exhibition Division of the Motion Picture Industry—Vaudeville and Stage Presentations.

ARTICLE 43.

OPEN SHOP.

The right of Employer and Employee to bargain together free from interference by any third party shall not be affected by this Code and nothing herein shall require any employee to join any organization or to refrain from joining any organization in order to secure or retain employment.

ARTICLE 44.

AUDITIONS.

It shall be an unfair trade practice for any manager or independent contractor, under the guise of a public audition, break-in or try-out, to require an artist to render services gratis. This shall not prohibit, however, the appearance of the artist or his participation in benefit performances which have been approved by a bona fide organization representing the industry.

ARTICLE 45.

REHEARSALS.

Employers and independent contractors pledge themselves within the shortest possible time after the effective date of the Code to promulgate regulations for the periods of rehearsal and for the hours of labor during rehearsal periods, with or without salary, which will be fair, just and humane, and conform to the spirit of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

ARTICLE 46.

MAXIMUM HOURS.

Owing to the peculiar nature of the vaudeville and presentation business and the unique conditions prevailing therein, the necessary variations in the policies and operations of such theatres, the changing nature of the entertainment and the fact that such entertainment is of a character requiring the services of artists of unique and distinctive ability, who cannot be replaced, it is recognized that it is impossible to fix the minimum number of hours per week for artists appearing in such theatres.

Any artist or performer receiving $35.00 or more per week shall be considered in the PROFESSIONAL class.

The minimum wage of an artist employed on a per diem basis shall be $5.00 per day.

No singing or dancing chorus person shall be required to work more than 48 hours actual working time in any week, including rehearsals. The minimum salary to such persons shall be $25.00 per week.

ARTICLE 47.

PERIOD OF EMPLOYMENT.

In view of the fact that it is a fixed policy of many theatres in various parts of the country to change the bill daily, bi-weekly or weekly, it is impractical to fix consecutive period of employment.

ARTICLE 48.

TRANSPORTATION.

Any artist not classified as a professional, who is required to travel, shall receive railroad transportation, in addition to his salary.

ARTICLE 49.

WARDROBE.

Employer or independent contractor shall furnish the chorus with all wigs, gowns, hats, footwear and other necessary stage wardrobe.
